Mr. WIKE. I rise to a parliamentary question, and I desire to submit it to the Chair and the committee whether the gentleman yields or not. I have no desire or disposition to raise a question as to the right of the gentleman from Missouri to review this letter, and I do not rise to defend the gentleman who wrote it. I do not think he needs any defense at my hands, but I want to make this point: that in discussing this letter and the gentleman who wrote it, when the gentleman from Missouri couples the letter with the Senator who wrote it in his Senatorial capacity, it is not in order for the gentleman to criticize him in this House in that regard, and he ought not to raise a question that this was a production of a Senator who might have acted differently than he did act in the Senate on the question involved, and then proceed to criticize him in that particular. That is the parliamentary question that I wish to submit and that alone.

Mr. BLAND. I am not alluding to any action of the Senate. I realize the force of the proposition that I have no right to allude to matters that may be going on in the other end of this Capitol; but I do have the right, Mr. Chairman, to criticize the letter here, emanating from a Senator, on a bill pending in this House before it goes to the Senate. What was it intended for? Was it intended to influence the member of this House against that bill? And I am sure that very Senator was here the night the vote was being taken upon this bill. And I do not know from the reading of that letter, but what he was here for the purpose of influencing the opposition to this bill.

Now, I say, Mr. Chairman, that when we come to look at the bill that is criticised I want to read from the statutes of 1837, to show the similarity between the two bills:

SEC. 31. And be it further enacted, That for the purpose of enabling the Mint to make returns to depositors, with as little delay as possible, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to keep in the said Mint, when the state of the Treasury will admit thereof, a deposit of such amount of public money or bullion procured for the purpose, as he shall judge convenient and necessary, not exceeding $1,000,000, out of which those who bring bullion to the Mint may be paid the value thereof, as soon as practicable, after this value has been ascertained; that the bullion so deposited shall become the property of the United States—

That is the language of the bill that I had the honor to introduce from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures—that no discount or interest shall be charged on moneys so advanced; and that the Secretary of the Treasury may at any time withdraw the said deposit, or any part thereof, or may, at his discretion, allow the coins formed at the Mint to be given for their equivalent in other money.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. What is the date of that act?

Mr. BLAND. That is the act of 1837, that I referred to in discussing this bill. For eighty years in this country, during which nearly all the time the Democratic party was in power, it kept open the Mint to the free and unlimited coinage of gold and silver, and the act of 1837, alluded to, provided that any bullion deposited in the mints might be paid for, and that it should become the property of the United States to be coined at the pleasure of the Government. The difference between that law and the bill on the Calendar is, it provides for the issue of coin notes which take the place of the coin, and under this bill that is criticized in this paper substantially the same thing is provided for, that where the depositor does not desire to wait to have it coined, the value of this bullion is to be given to him in coin notes, to be redeemed on demand, in coin.

The bill declares that the bullion, gold and silver, shall be coined as fast as necessary for the redemption of the notes, and the bullion is the property of the Government, and this or any subsequent Congress can cause the whole of it to be coined whenever it wants to, just as they did under the act of 1837. So that, Mr. Chairman, that point against the bill is not well taken. I have felt it due to myself and those members of this House who voted for this bill to disclaim that the bullion purchased, mentioned in the bill, is any scheme brought forward by what is termed the "silver ring." It is similar to the bill that passed the Senate last winter.

The bill that passed the Senate for the free coinage of silver provided for the conversion of gold and silver bullion into bars for the benefit of the depositor, and for issuing silver certificates that shall be legal tender for all debts public and private upon the bullion itself. So that so far as the "silver ring" is concerned, that bill received the votes of every Democrat in the United States Senate with two or three exceptions, and it was almost substantially in its terms with this bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, having said this much in the defense of the bill, myself, the committee, and gentlemen of this House who voted for it, as not being in the interest of the "silver ring," but in the interest of the great masses of the American people, I have nothing further to say, and yield the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I trust that we may now proceed to the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the bill will be read by sections, under the five-minute rule.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Collecting the revenue from customs: To defray the expenses of collecting the revenue from customs, being additional to the permanent appropriation for this purpose, $450,000.

Mr. SAYERS. I have an amendment which I desire to offer at this place.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, after line 7, insert the following: "Recoinage of silver: for recoinage of the uncurrent fractional silver coin, abraded to below the limit of tolerance in the Treasury, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $50,000."

Mr. SAYERS. I ask for the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. That amendment is correct, and I hope it will be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Eleventh Census: For salaries and necessary expenses for continuing the work of compiling the results of the Eleventh Census, $100,000, to be available until expended.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to come in after line 10, on page 6.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 6, after line 10, insert the following:

"DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

"For covering alley-way adjoining the Department of Justice building for the use of the Court of Claims, including flooring, glass, and iron roof, front and rear and party wall, painting, set of cases the whole length of room, and cutting doorway, to be done under the supervision of the Architect of Capitol, $4,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

OUT OF THE POSTAL REVENUES.

For advertising, $15,000.

Mr. SAYERS. I have an amendment to come in after line 13, on page 6.

The Clerk read as follows:

For editing and preparing for publication a new edition of the Postal Laws and Regulations, the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized to use any sum not exceeding $2,000 of the appropriation of $40,365 provided for the printing and publishing of said edition by "An act making appropriation to supply deficiencies in the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for prior years, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, which sum of $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, he may direct to be paid to any officers or employees of the Post-Office Department whom he may designate for that purpose, in consideration of their services rendered out of the regular Department hours, in the editing and preparation of the same; and the said appropriation of $40,365 is hereby continued and made available until the completion of the printing and publishing of the edition of laws and regulations to which it applies.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an additional amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 6, after line 22, insert: "House of Representatives: For miscellaneous items and expenses of special and select committees, $10,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAYERS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, before that motion is put I want to call attention to one point. There is quite a large appropriation in this bill for the Coast and Geodetic Survey. While I do not object to those items going into this bill I wish to say that when the sundry civil bill comes up for consideration I shall ask the House to reduce the appropriation for the Coast and Geodetic Survey by the amount of the appropriation here made.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, in view of the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana I have simply to say that instead of a reduction there should be an increase of the appropriation, because since the sundry civil bill was agreed upon by his committee there has been an arrangement entered into with Great Britain in behalf of Canada with reference to the running of the remainder of the line between Alaska and British North America, and, in consequence of that agreement, there will be an expenditure of $60,000. There is $25,000 provided for in this bill, and there should be $35,000 included in the sundry civil bill for next year.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, when we come to that I shall ask the House very seriously to reduce the appropriation in the sundry civil bill for the Coast and Geodetic Survey to the extent of the appropriation made in this bill for that purpose.

Mr. SAYERS. I shall have no objection to that. Mr. Chairman, I renew my motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and, the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. O'FERRALL, from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that they had had under consideration a bill (H. R. 7818) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies, etc., and had instructed him to report it to the House with certain amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the first amendment.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments, which are four in number, be voted upon in gross.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SAYERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill as amended was passed, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. SHIVELY in the chair.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7092) making appropriation for the naval service, ending June 30, 1893, and for other purposes.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I move to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not wish to interfere with the plan of the gentleman from Alabama, but it seems to me that a bill of this importance ought to be read before we proceed to consider it in detail. However, I will not insist.

The motion of Mr. HERBERT was agreed to, and the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be deferred until we reach that section of the bill which relates to new ships. The debate will turn principally upon the question of what new ships shall be provided for, and I ask that we consider the bill under the five-minute rule until we get to that point, and that then we have the general debate. I propose, however, first to briefly explain the provisions of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object until I state to the gentleman in charge of the bill that it is possible that I may want to make a speech during the general debate, and, as I have heard a suggestion that four hours has been agreed upon as the limit of that debate, and as I know that I am not included in that time, I would like to have an understanding that I shall have half an hour if I need it.

The CHAIRMAN. No time for general debate has been agreed upon by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. I understand that, but I have just heard an intimation here that it has been agreed upon by the members of the Committee on Naval Affairs. I think, however, that other members of the House are entitled to consideration in matters of this kind—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas object?

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. No, sir, I do not object, but I want to have an understanding that I shall have half an hour if I require it. If not, I will not interfere with the progress of the gentleman's bill.

Mr. HERBERT. Does the gentleman wish to speak on this bill?

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. No; not on this bill. I simply want to follow the custom that has been usually followed here in that respect. [Laughter.]

Mr. HERBERT. It is very important to have this appropriation bill passed as soon as possible. Several gentlemen have asked me for time to make speeches upon other subjects, but I have declined, and I hope the gentleman from Texas will not insist.

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. The proposition to which I shall address my remarks is one of considerable importance, itself involving an appropriation, and the only opportunity I can get to discuss it is by coming in upon one of these appropriation bills. I desire only half an hour.

Mr. HERBERT. Well, we will allow the gentleman that time.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that we had better make the time two hours and a half on each side instead of two hours.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask that we now make an agreement that when we reach the portion of the bill to which I have referred two hours and a half on each side be allowed for general debate, to be occupied respectively by those who are in favor of and those who are against the proposition for more ships. I ask that the agreement be now made.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] requests that all general debate on the pending bill be dispensed with for the present, that the bill be considered under the five-minute rule until the provision for the construction of new ships shall be reached, when two hours and a half of general debate shall be allowed on each side of that proposition. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, as I have already stated, I will now make a very brief explanation of the bill before we begin its consideration under the five-minute rule.

This bill carries appropriations to the amount of $23,726,823.71. The law for the present year carried $32,146,145.78. So that the appropriations now reported by the committee are less than the estimates by $3,467,816.09; and they are less than the appropriations of last year by $8,814,831.07.

Let me say, Mr. Chairman, that the committee in this bill have endeavored to give in the case of every item every dollar needed. We hope and believe there will be no deficiency if this bill becomes a law. Perhaps that is going too far, as no bill of this kind ever goes through without some little deficiency somewhere. But I think I may say that we venture to hope there will be as few and as small deficiencies under this bill as under any bill that has passed here for years past.

We have given for the increase of the Navy for the construction of ships hitherto provided for $9,400,000, which is a liberal provision—satisfactory, as I understand, to the Department, satisfactory to the Bureau. It is what they say will be enough to pay for all the work that will be done during the coming fiscal year.

Then we provide for one new ship of the general type of the "New York," an armored cruiser of about 9,000 tons. In view of the fact that we have now some twenty-five ships authorized and not yet completed and of the large amount of money required to do the work upon them, the majority of the committee concluded that one cruiser was as much as we ought to authorize in this bill, especially as the appropriations for the year after next will be very considerable in amount, and we have come to that conclusion, especially by reason of the fact that most of these armored vessels, at least half in number, and very much the largest part of them, tonnage considered, are armored vessels, and the contractors for the armor are very far behind with their contracts.

Some of these ships have been waiting for their armor for four or five years; quite a number of them are now ready for the armor; and very little armor has heretofore been supplied—not as much as 200 tons altogether, whereas over 16,000 tons are required to armor the vessels already provided for. It is believed by the majority of the committee that we ought in future to provide principally for armored vessels; and if we should now provide for other armored vessels than the one provided for in the bill, there is no reasonable prospect that the armor would be ready when the new ships should be ready for it. For that reason the committee have decided to ask the House to authorize only one more ship.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I wish to say to my colleague, the chairman of the committee [Mr. HERBERT], that in the agreement which was reached between us I did not understand that he was going to enter upon the field of discussion which is opened by some of the statements he has made in regard to the present appropriations. Some of those statements are precisely those which it is my purpose to controvert; and I should dislike exceedingly to allow those distinct and unequivocal statements to go out without any question on my part. I trust therefore that my colleague will permit me at this stage to state very briefly why I disagree with some of his conclusions in regard to the res gestæ.

Mr. HERBERT. My colleague misunderstood me, if he did not understand me to say that I would make a very brief explanation of the bill in the beginning.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I so understood the gentleman; but I hardly expected that in making this explanation he would enter upon the domain of the controversy which arises first as to the amount carried by the bill, and secondly in regard to the building of new ships.

Mr. HERBERT. I have no objection to my colleague speaking now in reply.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I wish only to say briefly, in answer to what has been stated by the gentleman, that of course the country ought to understand that the fact of the appropriations in this bill being smaller than the appropriations of last year, is not on account of any economy that has been practiced, but simply because this bill does not provide, as the bill of last year did provide, for carrying on the construction of the ships of the Navy.

Everyone who was in the last Congress is well aware of the fact that when we assembled at the second session of the Fifty-first Congress, the present Congress having been elected, and it being fully known that we were to be succeeded by a Democratic Congress, we were confronted by the fact that upon the ships of the Navy which had been authorized during the entire period of the Democratic Administration and subsequently there had been reached an amount of expenditure larger than at any period in our previous rehabilitation of the service. The question, therefore, which confronted the committee, of which I then had the honor to be chairman, was whether we should seek to make a fictitious record for economy by failing to provide a sufficient amount of money to enable the Government to meet its actual obligations as they would arise during this fiscal year—

Mr. HERBERT. Do I understand that my colleague on the committee is going to contend that the amount carried in this bill is not sufficient to meet the obligations which will arise during the coming year?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Oh, I do not think my colleague desires to interpolate that inquiry into my remarks.

Mr. HERBERT. Then I misunderstood my friend.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Of course I did not intend to state that. I have not reached that point. I am simply desiring to institute a fair comparison, which I was endeavoring to furnish by reference to the fact that the vessels authorized already had reached a higher degree of expenditure than at any previous period since we began the building of the new war ships. In other words, that they were in the most extensive stage of their construction, and that during this year they would pass beyond that point; and as they were completed and went into commission the obligations for expenditures on their account would rapidly decrease.

Now, we were called on to determine whether for the sake of making a reputation for economy, or to avoid the probability or possibility that we might be denounced on the stump as "the billion-dollar Congress," we were called on to determine whether we would fail to make proper appropriations for the Navy, appropriations that would be adequate to carrying on the work for which the Government had already made contracts and which was being carried on in our navy-yards under the supervision of Government officers. We unhesitatingly decided that the American people desired the work of rebuilding the Navy to go on, and by all means that there should be no cessation in the work already contracted for, and that there should be no failure on the part of the Government to make adequate provision to meet every obligation as it arose. The result was that the appropriation bill as reported to the last House and as passed by Congress carried the excessively large amount of thirty-one and one-half millions of dollars; and I think the chairman of the committee, in his report, by including some deficiency, has brought up the total to about $32,000,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, every dollar of that appropriation was an expenditure rendered necessary to meet the obligations of the Government upon the ships that were under construction in the various navy-yards of the Government and in the private yards throughout the country, and the table which I introduced in my remarks at that time showed exactly what were the anticipated expenditures during the year ending June 30, 1892, and the year ending June 30, 1893. Having made that liberal provision, as we did, for this most expensive period in our naval construction, the decrease in the amount of our obligations—the decrease in the current expenses of carrying on the work on the ships by reason of the completion of vessels or the decrease in expenses at certain stages in their construction—are such that when the Navy Department sent its estimates to Congress this year its outside demand, its extreme request of Congress for appropriations as embodied in its estimates, were nearly $7,000,000 less than what we had appropriated last year.

Mr. LONG. How much?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Nearly $7,000,000 were estimated for less than last year. Now, that reduction of appropriation goes to no particular person or party's credit, and can not properly do so.

Mr. HERBERT. Let me suggest to my colleague that I have not attacked that bill or said a word about it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Nor am I attacking the present bill, but I am simply explaining the fact that this reduction is due to the circumstances I have recounted, that less ships are being carried forward and that less expenditure is being called for during the next year than was called for during the current year.

Now, from that point I predicate this appeal to the House which I shall make when we reach the proper point—I shall appeal for a continuance of this work which has been carried forward so successfully. I shall base that appeal largely upon the fact that the reduction of our expenditures in this line has been so large, our appropriation bill as brought in this House is so much less than it was, by reason of the very liberality of the last Congress, that this House of Representatives and this Congress can all the better afford to make reasonably liberal provision for carrying on the work of rehabilitating our Navy in the immediate future. And when the proper time comes I shall offer an amendment to the bill, which in its present shape provides for the authorization of only one vessel, I shall offer an amendment which I think is more in the line of our public duty and public necessity, and more justifiable under the circumstances than that meager provision—to increase this appropriation. And in that connection it is proper for me to say that it will be perfectly obvious to the House that the reason for our having authorized the construction of only one ship during the last Congress, is the very reason I have just stated, that the necessities of the case were such that we felt obliged, in carrying on the work then in operation, to ask of Congress a phenomenally large appropriation, namely, some thirty-odd millions of dollars.

Now, this appropriation bill, in so far as it is less in its amount than that of last year, is such solely by reason of the fact that it is making provision for the less expensive period of the work in the increase of the Navy, and that is what I desire to have understood in connection with the remarks of my colleague. We are perfectly willing to bear the charge of extravagance, if you like, and I am perfectly willing to assume the full responsibility for whatever share I had in it. I believe that the country fully justifies our expenditures. I believe the character of the ships we are now building and putting afloat fully vindicates the liberality of the provision we have made. But it is only just that it shall be understood that the large bill of last year—the $56,000,000 appropriated by the Fifty-first Congress for the Navy—included a larger amount of appropriation for carrying on the work upon the ships that had been inaugurated under the Democratic Administration than had been expended during any one year of that Administration on these ships.

It was not extravagance. It was simply that a larger number of vessels had reached the most expensive point; and we, instead of getting a fictitious reputation for economy by throwing over upon this Congress the burden of meeting the obligations of the Government, went straight forward to our duty and provided every dollar that we could ascertain was legitimately to be called for during the current year.

Now, in regard to the provision for more ships, I desire at this point merely to say that that is a question of judgment; it is a question of discretion; and the issue raised by my friend the chairman is an issue of fact which I shall discuss later. I only desire at this point to enter my dissent to the conclusion which the chairman has reached. And whereas in his report he has clearly conceded the necessity for the construction of additional war vessels of the first class, and has approved of the type of vessels upon the construction of which we have entered, he justifies the failure to authorize additional ships at this time upon the ground that we would not be able to obtain the armor necessary to complete those ships within the proper time.

Now, I simply say to the House that I guarantee to furnish you the most conclusive evidence that can possibly be obtained that that difficulty does not exist, but that we shall be ready in this country not only to provide all the armor that will be called for for such additional armored ships as this Congress might provide for, but that there are to-day in this country single establishments that, long before the time when these vessels would require their armor, would be amply capable of furnishing all the armor required. The three battle ships that were authorized in 1890 were provided for in the bill which passed this House on the 30th of June. On the 1st day of July the general specifications were advertised.

It is conceded, I believe, that nowhere in our naval construction has a greater degree of rapidity been obtained than in regard to the placing of those vessels under contract; and yet, while the act passed on the 30th of June, and the bids were advertised for with the proper notice required by law, the final contracts were entered into in November. And so in this case, if we authorize new battle ships in this Congress, by the necessity of the situation the preliminary preparation of the design and acceptance of bids would not be completed so that contracts could be made before late in the fall, and at least eighteen months or two years thereafter would be required in work upon the vessels before the first plate of armor could be called for. And, as I say, I will show to the House, I think, to its satisfaction, the capability of several great establishments in this country to furnish, long before that time, more than ample provision for all the armor required.

There has been some delay, it is true, delay incident and inevitable in the establishment in this country of great manufacturing plants, of an extent and magnitude not only unparalleled in this country but without a parallel anywhere in the world. But, while any great establishment may be confronted by delays vexatious and prolonged in some instances, you can very well understand that after such an establishment is once in full working order its ability to increase its output or to double or triple it is a mere matter of the multiplication of forces.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I thank my colleague [Mr. HERBERT] for giving me an opportunity to say this, and will defer what I have to say in detail until we reach that portion of the bill.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, my colleague, the gentleman from Maine, has taken more time than I expected. I shall not go on with the discussion now. When the time comes to debate this matter, I think I can answer fully all that he has said and all that he would say. I ask that we proceed to the consideration of the bill by paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill. Having read as follows:

Naval Reservation, Algiers, La.: Toward the construction of a timber dry dock at Algiers, La., in accordance with the recommendation of the two commissions to report as to the most suitable site for a dry dock and navy-yard at some point on the shore of the Gulf of Mexico or the waters connected therewith, and for the purchase of such land as is shown by the report of said commission to be necessary for this purpose, in addition to the present Government reservation, $250,000; and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to make a contract for the construction of the said timber dry dock, the cost thereof not to exceed $840,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I think there is no law authorizing this appropriation, and I make the point of order against that part of the bill included in lines 3 to 15, on page 13, that it is new legislation. I had the statute bearing on the subject, but have mislaid it. Perhaps the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] will consent, unless he has the authority upon which this is founded, to let the point of order go over.

Mr. HERBERT. No; I would rather have it decided now.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order that there is no law authorizing an appropriation of that character.

Mr. HERBERT. Have you anything to say on it?

Mr. HOLMAN. Not now.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no existing law authorizing this expenditure—

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that this point has been frequently decided, once by Mr. Cox, once by Mr. Wellborn, once by Mr. Butterworth, and once or twice by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] upon similar points. The question was raised in these cases as to the authority to put new ships upon an appropriation bill, and the same point was once raised as to a dock, if my recollection is correct. In each case it was decided that these things were incidental to and a necessary part of the naval establishment, and that therefore they were not subject to this point of order. The rule then was substantially the same as it is now. When the present rules were being debated, noticing that a change in this rule relied upon, called the Holman amendment, was put into the rules, I examined carefully to see if the effect of that Holman amendment would be to alter the rulings that had heretofore been made. I came to the conclusion that it would not; but out of abundant caution I thought I ought to go and see my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and ask him, and I got from him the same opinion that I entertained myself—that it did not change the rules so far as questions of this kind were concerned. He added at the same time that he had always been of the opinion that the rule as it existed heretofore did not authorize these appropriations. He knew the fact very well, because he made most of those points of order which invoked these rulings I have cited. Therefore this is a decided case in this House, having been ruled so often by so many chairmen of committees that it seems to me it is not an open question. It ought to be considered settled, just as you know it is held by the courts that decisions upon laws frequently acted upon become the rules of property. They guide men's actions.

These decisions have with me become a rule of action. Being at that time the chairman of this committee, knowing that these points came up, when these rules were proposed I examined them for the purpose of seeing whether it was necessary to make any change or try to make any change in the rules; and I came to the conclusion, and I think the Chair will say so properly, that inasmuch as this question had been so often ruled upon by so many able and distinguished chairmen, it had become a rule that might be considered a fixture.

I do not think it necessary to say anything further. If you will look over this appropriation bill you will find one hundred items, or at least scores of articles or different items provided for, like a building here and there. For instance, one that I remember is a coal-shed. There is no law for building this coal-shed; yet it was put in there. Another is for an engine-house at the Portsmouth navy-yard. There is no law for the construction of that engine-house, and yet it was put in there. They have always been put in these naval appropriation bills. It is one of the necessities of a naval establishment; and this is as necessary to the Navy as a coal-shed is to a navy-yard. I do not think I need go any further than to cite these decisions, which the gentleman will not gainsay.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a few remarks on the point of order. The authorities cited by the gentleman do not go to the extent claimed by my friend from Alabama. The question decided by Mr. Cox some years ago was where an additional building was to be erected in connection with some navy-yard or some public work; but it was a simple continuation. No person, of course, could doubt that an addition might be made to a building already constructed in a navy-yard, or to put in an engine, or any matter like that.

Mr. CUMMINGS. To put up a new building?

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir; I think that if it were separate and distinct, having no connection with any work in progress, it would not be in order on an appropriation bill; but this stands upon a different footing from any uncompleted work.

Then, as an instance, take the light-houses. No gentleman will contend that an appropriation for a light-house can be put into the sundry civil bill, unless the construction of that light-house has been previously authorized by law. I take that case of a light-house because it is exactly in point here. The light-house system has been in existence almost since the origin of this Government, and extends all along the borders of the oceans adjoining this continent, the Great Lakes, and the rivers.

I admit as to the interior rivers of the United States the law is somewhat different; but so far as the light-house system is concerned on the shores of the great waters on either side of this continent, and on the Great Lakes, as to these light-houses, each being a part of a general system, there is no question whatever that the expenditure must be previously authorized by law before an appropriation can be made on an appropriation bill. I believe the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] has been on the Committee on Commerce, and if he can cite an instance where an appropriation for a light-house has been permitted to be made on an appropriation bill without previous legislation, I will yield the point.

Now, what can be more absolutely a part of the system than a light-house? This whole system is under the control of one bureau in the Treasury Department, is controlled through one organization, a perfect and complete organization. The light-houses all have relations one to another, both on the lakes and the seacoast, and yet the organization of a new light-house must be provided for by law before an appropriation can be made on an appropriation bill. Now, my friend can not cite any case as strong as that.

The case that the gentleman speaks of as having been decided by Mr. Cox was one where a building had already been erected, and it was a mere continuation of that work. It was not a different work. Here there is no evidence of its being a continuation. And, as in the case of a light-house, you can not have an appropriation until that light-house has been authorized by law, as each one of those buildings is a separate and distinct structure, although part of a general system. So in this case you can not have an appropriation until it is authorized by law, although a part of a general system.

But there is another case equally as strong to which I will call attention, and that is in connection with the post-offices of this country. Does my friend pretend that the smallest post-office, costing $30,000 or $40,000, can be provided for in an appropriation bill, unless by previous law the construction of the building has been authorized? I take even the smallest building. I do not care what the cost of it is; until two things are done, not a dollar can be appropriated on an appropriation bill. First, the authority to purchase the site and erect the structure; secondly, imposing a limitation upon the expenditure.

Both these things are necessary before you can appropriate $1 for the erection of a public building for the Post-Office Department. The same is true with regard to the erection of a public building for the use of the Treasury Department, a custom-house, and stand exactly upon the same footing. Or, if you combine them together and erect a public building for an internal-revenue office, a custom-house, and a post-office, even there, where you take a third step, a provision of law must previously exist authorizing the appropriation before it can be made.

Now, apply that to the proposition we have presented here, which I will read:

Naval Reservation, Algiers, La.: Toward the construction of a timber dry dock at Algiers, La., in accordance with the recommendation of the two commissions to report as to the most suitable site for a dry dock and navy-yard at some point on the shore of the Gulf of Mexico or the waters connected therewith, and for the purchase of such land as is shown by the report of said Commission to be necessary for this purpose, in addition to the present Government reservation, $250,000; and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to make a contract for the construction of the said timber dry dock, the cost thereof not to exceed $840,000.

The gentleman contends that this is to be a separate, independent structure, but it is a part of the naval system, just as a light-house is a part of the Light-House Board system, or a court-house is a part of the Department of Justice, or a post-office a part of the Post-Office Department. Judged by analogy, the question is free from all difficulty. I admit that one or two instances, perhaps three or four, can be found where gentlemen presiding over the Committee of the Whole, called to make a decision on the spur of the moment, have held that for appropriations for the erection of edifices required for a given public service, it was not necessary that authority should have been previously given by law; but those have been mere casual decisions.

Furthermore, this particular point has never been decided. I do not think my friend from Alabama will claim that this exact point has ever been decided. This paragraph of the bill which I have read undertakes to give authority not only to purchase the land but to erect a building upon it, at a cost of $840,000. I challenge my friend from Alabama to find an instance where a dry dock has been constructed simply by an appropriation made on an appropriation bill, or where an appropriation has been made for the purchase of a site unless authority to purchase the site and erect the structure, with a limitation upon the cost of that structure, had been previously provided for by law.

If the gentleman can point to an instance of that kind, I will yield this point, although I have no great respect for precedents, because if there is any matter for which you can not find a precedent under our system I have never seen it. You can find precedents for almost anything. But this question appeals to the conscience of the gentleman who for the time being presides over the Committee of the Whole, and he has to ask: "Is this particular appropriation authorized by law?"

Mr. Chairman, is this a continuation of a public work? I suppose that is the clause of the rule that gentlemen will claim this must come under, and I hope the Chair will hear me briefly upon that point. The second clause of Rule XXI is not in the least ambiguous. It does not admit of interpretation. The art of interpretation, which has so constantly deceived mankind in court and everywhere else, can not apply here, for there is no opportunity for it. The language is unambiguous.

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law—

"That is the law of this House and of this Committee of the Whole. Now comes the assumed exception—unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

Now, this project under consideration may be called an "object" or a "public work." The terms are synonymous. They had never been held to be different. It is possible, however, to imagine a case where a public work might be different from an object. But, take it either way, is this an object already in progress? Is this a public work already in progress in Louisiana? Can any gentleman upon his conscience say that it is, in view of this plain, unambiguous law? I would trample upon a decision which so insulted the intelligence of members of this House, and held that this language had any ambiguity about it. It is not ambiguous. It expressly states that (for high public reasons) an appropriation shall not be made unless authority to make the expenditure has been already created by law; and that applies even to the following language in the rule, because it must be presumed that if a work is in progress, it is so because its construction has been authorized by some preceding legislation.

All I have to say about it is, that if the Chair finds it necessary to hold under the precedents, under these traveling decisions made from time to time, sometimes one way and sometimes the other—if the Chair finds it necessary to hold that an appropriation may be made on an appropriation bill to purchase the site and erect a dry dock upon the ground that it is a continuation of a public work, that is to say a continuation of your naval system, then the whole doors are thrown open. On the theory that the object sought is connected with some department of the Government, and it will certainly be connected with some one of them, any appropriation that any gentleman may think proper to bring forward for any purpose may be placed upon any appropriation bill. Mr. Chairman, I regard this as a question of very high consequence.

The object of the rule was to require deliberation on these matters. Appropriation bills are often taken up and disposed of in an hour or so; and if on the spur of the moment we allow ourselves to load down these bills with appropriations in this way how can there be any economy in the administration of our Government?

An independent measure of legislation touching a given subject-matter applies to that matter alone, and is dis-embarrassed of any extraneous considerations; but on an appropriation bill "log-rolling" may come in; and if there is no rule to restrain us—if we impose by rules no restraint on ourselves—then the way is open to load down every appropriation bill on the theory that whatever work you may contemplate—public building, dry dock, court-house, custom-house—is a part of the system of Government, and we are but carrying out a work already in progress.

We might go farther. The whole nation is a unit; this Government is a unit—divided, it is true, into three great departments; and upon the theory on which the gentleman from Alabama claims the right to bring in this appropriation why may not any appropriations for any of the departments of the Government be permitted to come in?

I trust there will be no mistake made in the ruling on this question, for I feel there can be no economy in the administration of this Government if the spirit of this rule is not carried out—if upon the spur of the moment we can load down appropriation bills with expenditures which have not been previously authorized by law. A great deal has been said heretofore about "riders" on appropriation bills; and the object of this rule is to prevent "riders" in the form of appropriations of money not previously authorized; yet my friend from Alabama with the utmost composure proposes to override the plain spirit of this rule.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from Indiana I desire in the first place to point out briefly the fact that this appropriation is for the improvement of a naval reservation already belonging to the Government. The gentleman has asked, and he has asked it triumphantly, if I can find any precedent for such an appropriation as this. Sir, I believe that a dock of precisely this character was authorized to be erected in precisely the same words at the Norfolk navy-yard; and another dock of like character, and I think in precisely the same words, was authorized to be erected at the Brooklyn navy-yard.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, I would like to see the cases.

Mr. HERBERT. If the gentleman will look at the appropriation bills he will find them. I state to the gentleman that these appropriations have been made. If he doubts my recollection he can examine the records.

Mr. BLOUNT. In the cases which the gentleman has just cited, was the question of order raised and passed upon? The fact that such appropriations were made in an appropriation bill does not carry the implication that they were necessarily in order, unless the question was raised and ruled upon.

Mr. HERBERT. I am not clear as to whether the question was raised or not; but I rather think it was raised in one of those cases by the gentleman from Indiana. That, however, I will not assert positively.

Mr. DINGLEY. Do I understand the gentleman to say that this dry dock is to be erected on a Government reservation?

Mr. HERBERT. It is to be erected on a naval reservation already belonging to the Government.

Mr. DINGLEY. And it has been set apart for a navy-yard?

Mr. HERBERT. Yes; this is to be erected for the purposes of a navy-yard.

Mr. CUMMINGS. This reservation has belonged to the Navy Department since 1842.

Mr. HERBERT. This is simply in the fulfillment of a purpose already authorized by law.

Now, I say that the principle of these decisions which I have cited covers this case like a blanket. What does the gentleman say in reply to those decisions? Does he adduce any decision to a contrary effect? No. He says that precedents ought always to be found upon every question; and I know nobody who by industry and long experience in this House is better qualified to find precedents than the gentleman from Indiana. I ask him where is any precedent to the contrary? Where was any decision ever made by anybody overruling these cases I have cited? He can not find any such decision.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think my friend will find that within two years—certainly three years—a point of order was made upon a proposed appropriation for a light-house; the question was raised whether the law authorized it; and on that point of order the proposed appropriation went out.

Mr. HERBERT. That was not a case like this.

Mr. HOLMAN. The same case exactly.

Mr. HERBERT. What was the light-house incident to? What was it a necessary part of?

Mr. HOLMAN. It was incident to the light-house system, just as this is incident to the naval system.

Mr. HERBERT. This is incident to the naval establishment; these things are necessary for the Naval Department of the Government. The decisions I have cited cover the question; there is no doubt about it. All the gentleman can say is that these decisions are like "street opinions" of lawyers—

Mr. CUMMINGS. The gentleman from Alabama will permit me to say that this dry dock is just as much a matter of necessity for naval purposes as would be the purchase of an iron crane for use in the Navy.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is not a light-house necessary also?

Mr. HERBERT. We are confining ourselves to this question which has been already decided. These decisions have been made from time to time. But the gentleman says these are simply "street opinions."

Mr. RICHARDSON. Traveling opinions.

Mr. HERBERT. Well, in one sense they are traveling opinions, for they travel down from one Congress to another; and wherever they stop they are precisely the same.

They are always followed. They have become a rule of action to the Naval Committee and a rule of action to this House, and it seems to me it is a rule of action by which the chairman of the committee is bound to be guided. Further than that, Mr. Chairman, some of these opinions have been elaborately considered. I will state.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I desire to call the attention of my colleague, the chairman of the committee, to the ruling by the Hon. Samuel S. Cox, which will be found in the proceedings of the House under date of January 12, 1889, on page 117 of the RECORD. The question having arisen on a point of order, made during the consideration of the Military Academy bill, on the provision for the erection of a fireproof building on the public grounds at West Point, Mr. Cox, then chairman of the committee, made this ruling:

The CHAIRMAN. Without entering upon the question of the jurisdiction of one committee as related to that of any other, the Chair holds that under clause 12 of Rule XI, "to the military establishment and public defense, including the appropriation for its support and for that of the Military Academy," the Committee on Military Affairs has jurisdiction of this matter; and therefore they have properly jurisdiction of this subject-matter as to the erection of buildings.

The Chair will cause to be read the third clause of Rule XXI.

The provision of the rule was then read, and I believe it is in general form similar to that now in force. The Chairman then goes on:

The CHAIRMAN. Without regard to the precedent cited by the gentleman from Illinois, the Chair decides that, within the meaning of the provision just read, the building proposed to be erected—"fireproof building on site of public grounds at West Point"—is within the purview of the rule. The construction of a building is an incident to the maintenance of the Academy itself, the object being already in progress, the main object contemplated not only by the bill but by the very institution of the Academy itself.

Without reference to other decisions made from the Chair, either in Committee of the Whole or otherwise, the present occupant of the Chair is informed that the Speaker of the House, on a former appropriation bill, held that an appropriation for the construction of a new vessel was in continuation of the general object of maintaining a navy; and that decision of the Speaker "runs on all fours" with the decision which the Chair now makes when he overrules the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. How could a point of order have been raised before the Speaker?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not know, but such seems to have been the case.

Mr. HOLMAN. But how could it have been? This is a proceeding in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have just read the decision of the Chair, in which this reference appears, but how the point of order was made or under what circumstances I am not able to say.

Mr. HERBERT. That is one of the cases to which I referred. I desire to say that it was the opinion of Speaker Carlisle that this was a correct ruling, under the rule of the House; for it was after a consultation with him how to get this question before the House that it was finally decided to bring these ships in on the appropriation bill. The ruling has been made so often on various other occasions as to put it, it seems to me, beyond question.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, this question is a very important one.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Before the gentleman proceeds let me state that the point of order was made, to which the ruling I have just read applied, by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] and united in by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. HOLMAN. What was the nature of the point of order?

Mr. BOUTELLE. It was in these words:

Mr. KILGORE. I make the point of order on that clause that it provides for the erection of a building which has not been authorized by law.

Mr. BLOUNT. That was in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOLMAN. It stands on an entirely different proposition from this. There was some plausibility in that case. There was a large body of public buildings, constituting what is known as the Military Academy, and the erection of another building in connection with them was in continuation of a public work. That is plausible; and I think that decision is well enough. Not a close decision on a severe point of law, but well enough for a House of Representatives, because we do not go down to the bottom facts as a court would in deciding such questions.

But, Mr. Chairman, I rose for the purpose, if the Committee will indulge me, of calling attention to a matter to which the question of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] a few moments ago evidently refers. I perceive what was running in the mind of the gentleman from Maine. I wish to show the origin of this proposition. In our legislation at the last session of Congress there occurs this provision, and I call the attention of the gentleman from Maine and the gentleman from Georgia who will follow me to it.

And the President be, and he is hereby, required to appoint a commission composed of two competent naval officers, one competent army officer, and two competent persons from civil life, whose duty it shall be to select a suitable site, having due regard to commercial and naval interests, for a dry-dock at some point on the shores of the Gulf of Mexico, or the waters connected therewith; and having selected such site shall, if upon private land, estimate its value and ascertain as nearly as practicable the cost for which it can be purchased or acquired, and of their proceedings and action make full and detailed report to the President, and the President shall transmit such report with his recommendations to Congress. That to pay the expenses of said commission the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used and the same is hereby appropriated, etc.

So the committee will discover that in the last Congress the initial step was taken as to the erection of this work.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Let me state to the gentleman that the initial step was taken in the Fiftieth Congress, when a committee was appointed for the purpose of visiting the various points on the Gulf and deciding on the proper location. They visited all the cities along the Gulf and selected this site as the most available point for the erection of a dry dock. Two commissions in different years made similar examination and report. So that the initial steps were taken by a Democratic House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, they have made mistakes occasionally, I admit, but seldom. [Laughter.]

Now, I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact, and also the attention of the gentleman from Maine, that this provision as it stands in this bill is in conformity with that law provided for the purchase of the site.

The reservation was not particularly for naval purposes, but a general reservation of public lands in the State of Louisiana. This item contemplates the purchase of the land on which this structure is to be erected—

And for the purchase of such land as is shown by the report of said commission to be necessary for this purpose, in addition to the present Government reservation.

Mr. BLOUNT. What are you reading from?

Mr. HOLMAN. From the bill itself. This says:
In addition to the present Government reservation.

So that it is a purchase of land for a site and for the erection of a public structure to cost $840,000. The gentleman says that is in order, when he concedes, as he must concede, that in the construction of a single light-house, to cost forty or fifty thousand dollars, not a dollar can be appropriated until a bill has been previously enacted and the authority for the erection of that structure exists in the form of law. I would be very glad if the Chair would examine the cases referred to by the gentleman from Alabama, if he can find them. We have had but one case which has been cited here, the decision of Mr. Cox, for the erection of an additional building, where a great body of buildings had been erected, at the military school. The case is equally clear that not even the smallest public building can be erected, not even a light-house can be erected, as is known to the Chair, without the previous enactment of law authorizing the structure.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, reference has been made to rulings of Mr. Cox and some other gentlemen in relation to this question now pending. There have been a variety and a contrariety of decisions on questions of this sort. I can well remember—and the RECORD will disclose them—numerous instances where the very contrary has been decided to what has been cited as the ruling of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] on the Military Academy bill. And so as to many of the questions that have been raised here there have been a variety of decisions, sometimes one gentleman in the chair putting one construction upon a rule and then another taking a different construction. I well remember when the ruling of Mr. Cox was made it was an entire surprise to the House.

It was decided for the first time that it was in order to move the erection of a public building at West Point on the Military Academy bill. I say, sir, there have been a variety and a contrariety of decisions upon this question and upon many questions. And the Chair will find, if he examines into it, that at last, in the midst of this conflict of decisions, he must resort to the rule and the language of the rule, and endeavor to make an interpretation for himself to give to the House on this occasion.

Mr. HERBERT. I invite the gentleman to cite some of these contrary decisions.

Mr. BLOUNT. My friend was talking a little while ago in relation to certain bills, in which he said certain buildings had been authorized, and he cited those cases to my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] as an evidence that it was in order, and immediately admitted to me that he did not know whether the question was ever raised.

Mr. HERBERT. But I cited the cases, and I desire you now to cite some of the contrary decisions.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand the gentleman's question. The Chair and the committee will readily understand that this matter being sprung here, and these rulings having been made in the past, not being indexed, I can not in a moment find them. Any more than my friend could when called upon awhile ago to cite to the committee whether or not there had been a point of order made on such paragraph in an appropriation bill and that point ruled upon.

It signifies nothing that my memory does not furnish me readily with the page of the Journal containing these rulings; but it so happens, sir, that I have some help in the matter. For many years I had the honor of serving on the Committee on Appropriations when it had all these bills in charge. I had the naval bill in charge at one time, and there were efforts to put dry docks on it then, and they were ruled out, and they have been ruled in since. This construction was never controverted for a long time. Therefore it signifies nothing and it has no bearing on the question, that my memory does not furnish me with the exact date. Now, let us see what the Chair is asked to do. This provision is as follows:

Toward the construction of a timber dry dock at Algiers, La., in accordance with the recommendation of the two commissions to report as to the most suitable site for a dry dock and navy-yard at some point on the shore of the Gulf of Mexico or the waters connected therewith, and for the purchase of such land as is shown by the report of said Commission to be necessary for this purpose, in addition to the present Government reservation, $250,000; and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to make a contract for the construction of the said timber dry dock, the cost thereof not to exceed $840,000.

Now, it appears, sir, that, so far as this matter has gone, Congress has simply created a commission to investigate and make report. Nothing more. There has been no acceptance of their conclusions, no legislation growing out of their recommendations at all. Simply the action of a commission. And, sir, will you undertake to say that this involves any committal on the part of this Government to this object, to the building of this dock, simply because certain gentlemen have made a report? Why, it is absurd. There is no gentleman who can stand up in the face of an intelligent audience with such a statement. Why, we have commissions on all sorts of questions.

Mr. HOLMAN. And no law.

Mr. BLOUNT. And no law. Reports have been made to the two Houses of Congress; and yet gentlemen are asking the Chair to consider that, because they have made these reports, the Government has adopted their conclusion, and these are "works in progress," and it appears in the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. They are simply reported to Congress without a law being passed.

Mr. BLOUNT. That I have already stated. There never has been the slightest committal or declaration in any statute of any purpose to accept these conclusions. I do not know whether the commission was composed of three or half a dozen. Whatever it was, they simply reported their opinions.

Here is a reservation we have had over forty years, and nothing done with it, for the construction of a dry dock or for any purpose. There is no statute authorizing the construction of a dry dock; and yet from these facts we are told this is work or object in progress.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have the facts and they are very simple. Now, what is the rule?

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law—

No gentleman will undertake to say that there is any such authorization of any dock here—

unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress—

Mark the language, Mr. Chairman—

Unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

"Continuation!" Has there been a dollar appropriated for this purpose? Has there been any action indicating that the Government proposed to build a dry dock at this place.

"Objects as are already in progress." A piece of land, the property of the Government, has been lying there for forty years, and it is suggested as being one of the "objects in progress" to build a dry dock down there. To my mind, Mr. Chairman, it is requiring too much of the Chair—it is asking too much violence to simple speech to ask the Chair to rule this is in order.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has well said that when you give such a broad construction to the words "public works and objects as are already in progress," you absolutely neutralize the point in regard to legislation on appropriation bills. An appropriation for everything is in order, if it advances the interests of the Government, or proposes to enlarge the Army, the Navy, or any other branch of the public service. Sir, this rule, put in here in the past, has saved to this Government untold millions of dollars. It has restrained Democratic Houses and Republican Houses time and again from yielding to the temporary impulse to create new objects of expenditure; and I trust, Mr. Chairman, that as it has been sanctified by this purpose and by long experience for the benefit of the people, it is not to be stricken down by a ruling that will permit the construction of this dry dock.

I am not here for the purpose of saying whether or not this dry dock is proper. It is not the pending question. If that were the question I would defer to my friend from Alabama. All that would be necessary to accomplish the building of a dry dock, which the Committee on Naval Affairs may report at any time to this House, would be to take it up and consider it in the morning hour, if you please, and dispose of it. When it is proposed simply for that purpose to place a construction upon this rule, that has affected the people of this country in the past and will in the future to the extent of untold millions, you take away those checks on expenditures which every House since I have been here for nearly twenty years has seen fit to guard itself with. I trust the chairman of the committee will not make any such interpretation of this rule. It is worth more to the country than a dry dock. It is worth more to the country than every dollar in this appropriation bill. It has saved enough to the country to buy a navy over and over again. Therefore, I trust, Mr. Chairman, we shall have a ruling in accordance with the spirit of the men who have placed this here as a check upon our haste.

Mr. MEYER. I regret to say, Mr. Chairman, that I have no very great familiarity with the rules of this House. My brief service here, unfortunately, has not acquainted me with them to the degree that I desire, and therefore I have permitted the argument upon this question as to the rules to be conducted by gentlemen whose experience is much greater than mine, and who doubtless can enlighten the Chair much more efficiently than I can. But I would not have you believe, Mr. Chairman, that the tenor of the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] should be accepted as altogether correct. One might suppose from what he has said that the Committee on Naval Affairs have simply taken up this proposition and embodied it in their report hastily and without giving it fair consideration.

But, sir, this is not a new question, and to show that it is not, and that it has been fully considered heretofore, I would refer you to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the 17th of February last, evidencing that a bill for this purpose, after being carefully entertained by the Senate of the United States, passed that body almost unanimously. Indeed, I find that there was not a dissenting voice.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Louisiana to say that a bill has passed providing for this work?

Mr. MEYER. Yes, sir; such a bill passed the Senate on the 17th of February without a dissenting voice, so far as the RECORD shows. But, sir, long before that, in the Thirtieth Congress, in the year 1848 (you will find this in section 268 of the Statutes of the United States), there was an appropriation made for the establishment of a "depot for naval stores," which the Secretary of the Navy was required to cause to be located "at or near the city of New Orleans," at a cost of $20,000. In the succeeding Congress we find that there was an appropriation for improvements and superintendence at naval depot near New Orleans, $1,750, and also for a suitable plan of buildings to be erected thereon, an additional $500.

This shows that already in the Thirtieth Congress the erection of a naval depot at that point was contemplated and appropriated for by the Congress of the United States. Again, in the Fiftieth Congress and also in the Fifty-first, as stated by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT], appropriations were made, $15,000, I believe, in each case, for the purpose of defraying the expenses of commissions appointed to determine as to the best site for a navy-yard and dry dock on the shores of the Gulf of Mexico, resulting in the selection of this site. Each of those commissions made a report. The project was fully considered by the Secretary of the Navy, approved by that officer and by the President of the United States. The report was presented to Congress and referred by the Speaker to the Committee on Naval Affairs. That formed the basis of the action of the Naval Committee.

The proposition was considered carefully and fully discussed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, who reached a conclusion, and authorized a unanimous report to be made to this Congress for the construction of the proposed dock. Now, it does appear to me, Mr. Chairman, in view of these previous and continuous appropriations, that the rule which has been cited by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] might very well be sustained, and yet the appropriation provided for in this bill be allowed to stand.

As to the merits of the question and the necessity for a dry dock at Algiers, I will not enter upon that subject at large just now, but will simply say that, while this rule which has been cited here may have saved the country many millions of dollars, as is claimed by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], I am quite sure that this project, proposed to a Democratic House or to any House, whether Democratic or Republican, will, when properly explained and understood, receive their sanction.

A dry dock at Algiers, connected directly with the Gulf of Mexico, is as essential a part of the equipment of the Navy as an arsenal is a necessity for the ordnance stores of the Army. The commerce which passes and repasses through the outlets to the Gulf of Mexico is so great that it requires protection in every possible way, and the facilities which are afforded through such a structure as this for repairs to our naval vessels are so important that it has for a long time been considered a military necessity as well as a commercial one. In connection with my remarks I would ask that the report authorized by the Naval Committee to be made to this Congress be read, in order that the House may have a fuller knowledge of the conditions which induced them to make the report and of the influences that caused the committee to incorporate this appropriation in its bill.

[Report to accompany H. R. 5762.]

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2681) for the establishment of a dry dock on the Government reservation near Algiers, La., and making an appropriation therefor, has considered the same and submits the accompanying substitute for the said bill, with the recommendation that said substitute be passed.

In pursuance of an act of Congress approved September 7, 1888, authorizing the appointment by the President of a commission "to report as to the most desirable location on or near the coast of the Gulf of Mexico and the South Atlantic coast for navy-yards and dry docks," Commodore W. P. McCann, United States Navy; Capt. Robert Boyd, United States Navy; Lieut. Commander Willard H. Brownson, United States Navy; and Lieut. Duncan Kennedy, United States Navy, were appointed to constitute said commission; and after having visited all the points on the coast of the Gulf of Mexico and the South Atlantic coast which they deemed advisable for the proper execution of their duty, they submitted, November 19, 1889, a very exhaustive and able report, and made the following recommendations:

"After carefully weighing all the advantages and disadvantages of Algiers as a site for a naval station the commission is of the opinion that, while the spot is not an ideal one, no other place in the Gulf compares with it in the advantages offered, and that the advantages are so many and so great and outweigh the disadvantages to such an extent that the commission has no hesitation in recommending the location of a navy-yard and dry docks at the present Government reservation at Algiers, La."

Shortly after this report had been made the Secretary of the Navy, Hon. B. F. Tracy, appeared before the Committee on Naval Affairs and recommended that a dry dock be established at Algiers. A bill making an appropriation for the establishment of a dry dock at Algiers was thereupon reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By virtue of a provision in the naval appropriation act approved June 30, 1890, another commission was appointed by the President "to select a suitable site, having due regard to commercial and naval interests, for a dry dock at some point on the shores of the Gulf of Mexico or the waters connected therewith."

The President appointed upon this commission Capt. Francis M. Bance, United States Navy; Maj. H. C. Hasbrouck, Fourth Artillery, United States Army; Lieut. R. M. G. Brown, United States Navy, and Messrs. Sidney Perham and David T. Littler.

The commission was organized on December 5, 1890, and after visiting the various points which they deemed advisable in order to carry out intelligently the requirements of the order for their appointment, and having due regard for commercial and naval interests and the emergencies which might arise in the event of war, they submitted their report on March 9, 1891. The commission say they made a careful study of the commercial routes to and from the Gulf of Mexico, and searched for the best position for a naval defense of them and of its coasts. They learned from the Bureau of Yards and Docks of the Navy Department that—

"In view of the increased size of the vessels now being constructed and contemplated, a dry dock must be at least 600 feet long, 97 feet wide at the top, 66 feet in the clear at the entrance, with a depth of at least 26 feet, and of sufficient stability to support a load of 15,000 tons."

Upon inquiry of the Chief of Ordnance of the Navy Department it was ascertained that—

"The larger guns of a modern battle ship will range upwards of 8 miles at the extreme elevation permitted by the mounting, the ship being on an even keel, and by heeling the ship to increase the elevation this range could probably be increased to at least 10 miles, and, with the largest guns afloat, even to 12 miles."

When the commission concluded that the requisites for a dry dock were—

"A clear channel to the sea of a depth of at least 26 feet, stability of foundation to support a load of 15,000 tons, and protection by a distance of 12 miles, or by an intervening elevation of the ground, from gun fire from the sea."

And after a careful study of the charts of the Gulf of Mexico and the waters connected therewith, the commission proceeded to visit Key West, Tampa, Pensacola, Mobile, Port Eads, New Orleans, Galveston, and Aransas Pass. They declare that everywhere the greatest interest was manifested in the work of the commission; that they were received by committees of citizens, and furnished with every facility to aid them in their investigations.

The report contains a clear statement of the advantages and disadvantages of seventeen different points on the Gulf of Mexico, and after a full examination the commission reached the conclusion that—

"The South Pass of the Mississippi River affords the only entrance 26 feet deep to a port or harbor on the Gulf of Mexico or waters connected therewith far enough from the sea to be safe from gun-fire."

They quote the opinion of Gen. C. B. Comstock, colonel of engineers, United States Army, and president of the Mississippi River Commission, to the effect that "the channel at the South Pass jetties is permanent in the sense that it will be possible to maintain a channel there of at least 26 feet depth at low water in the river as long as the jetties are maintained to deep water and the damages from storms repaired," an opinion in which the commission, after careful examination, concur.

The commission report that—

"New Orleans is the only port on the Gulf coast or the waters connected therewith where the three primary requisites for a dry dock are to be found. It is situated about 100 miles up the river. It is the largest city in the Gulf States. From the entrance of South Pass to the city a depth of more than 26 feet can be carried at all times. The soil of the river banks in its vicinity, at the surface light, is, from 2 to 4 feet below the surface, of clay or clay or sand, increasing in density and solidity with the depth of the boring or excavation made, insuring a foundation amply sufficient to support a load of 15,000 tons in the dock by the employment of the usual methods in its construction."

"This port has other and great advantages as the site. Being the greatest center of population of the Gulf States, labor, skilled or otherwise, can be obtained at short notice. Its foreign commerce is greater than that of all the other Gulf ports together, last year reaching 2,034,072 tons; all others, 1,997,892 tons. A fresh-water harbor, its water communication with the interior by the Mississippi and its tributaries is nowhere in the world equaled, and this is supplemented by six great railroad lines, which, with their connections, reach every part of the country."

"Defense of these by the whole power of the nation is assured. It is a military necessity. Fresh water for all uses is supplied by filtering the river water, by the rainfall, and by artesian wells. Epidemic diseases of foreign origin are prevented by a strict system of quarantine regulations, and the general health of the city is as good as that of any Gulf port. A supply of iron, coal, or other material required can always be had at short notice and at cheap rates."

We will add only one more quotation from the commission's report, the conclusion, in which they say, for the reasons already given—

"The commission therefore select this as the most suitable site for a dry dock on the shores of the Gulf of Mexico or the waters connected therewith."

The commission say that the depth of the Government reservation near Algiers—2890 feet—is ample for a dry dock, and if more land on the river front is needed it can be acquired adjoining the Government reservation.

The Secretary of the Navy, Hon. B. F. Tracy, in his communication forwarding the report of the commission to the President, says:

"I approve of the selection made of a site for the dry dock at Algiers, on the right bank of the Mississippi River, in view of the conditions found by the commission to exist there. The naval reservation at this point is too limited in extent for the proper location and use of the dry dock, and it will be necessary to purchase additional lands adjoining."

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that the salient points of that report be read, for it plainly establishes the fact that nothing had yet been done in the way of constructing this work, but that the whole thing rests upon this report which is submitted for the action of Congress. I hope that will go into the RECORD.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I hope the Chair will give this matter careful consideration before passing upon it. To my mind this is a very important appropriation, and the plea which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] has made, that the Government owns some land down there and that we should therefore appropriate some $840,000 is a very slim pretext upon which to base an argument for this appropriation. It is well known and well understood to be the purpose of this House—and that is what these rules have been framed for—to make no appropriation for any object until it has received full consideration and discussion.

It has been said by gentlemen here that a committee or commission was appointed to go down to the Gulf of Mexico and examine the coast for the purpose of ascertaining whether there was a good location for building a navy-yard. Now, I understand that we have already at Pensacola a navy-yard upon which the Government has spent many millions of dollars; we have very valuable property there now, including, I believe, a floating dry dock, which was built at Philadelphia and towed down there at great cost.

I think this appropriation ought to come before us for discussion in a separate, distinct bill. I believe that the evidence which has been gathered by the committee should be given to the House, and time allowed for the discussion of the measure, so that we may determine deliberately whether it is right to appropriate nearly a million dollars for the purpose of building a new navy-yard. I think this question ought not to be passed upon in this way. Members of the House and the people of the country should understand why we are to appropriate this vast sum for a new navy-yard, when we already have a very valuable navy-yard in one of the best seaports of the Southern coast—a navy-yard built at an expense of many millions.

Mr. HOLMAN. And a dry dock also.

Mr. SIMPSON. Yes, and a dry dock, too. And I will tell my friends here that the dry dock at Pensacola is lying there, part of it under water, rusting and going to destruction for want of proper care by the agents of the Government.

Mr. MEYER. The gentleman will allow me to say that the appropriation proposed here is not for a navy-yard, but for a dry dock.

Mr. SIMPSON. It has been argued here that they are one and the same thing, because a dry dock is part of the equipment for building ships. And when this dry dock is provided gentlemen will come in on another appropriation bill and say that this dry dock is part of a grand scheme which must be carried out and completed by the Navy Department; that it is necessary to have arsenals, etc., to go along with this dry dock to protect it. And then we shall have large appropriations asked for the erection of a fort to protect the dry dock. We shall be told that the dry dock, the arsenal, and the fort are all a part of the same system, and must go together. This is but the entering wedge to a vast expenditure in that direction.

So far as I am concerned, I do not believe we need a navy at all. If we attend to our own business, dealing fairly and justly with other nations, I do not believe we need any navy to defend us. I can readily see why our Republican friends should want a navy, because it is part of their scheme of "protection;" but as for Democrats who want to trade with all the world, who want to make friends with all the world, I do not see why they should want to spend millions of dollars for defense against our friends.

This is all I wish to say on this subject. I have said this much because I believe the people of this country who pay the taxes will raise a protest against appropriating money uselessly in this way to build a dry dock when we already have in existence a dry dock, navy-yard, arsenal, and everything of that kind.

Mr. MEYER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON] evidently confuses the purposes of a dry dock with those of a navy-yard. Perhaps I ought to take occasion to explain that a dry dock, especially the one here proposed, is designed to be used for the purpose of making repairs upon vessels, not for the purpose of constructing them. I am free to say that I believe, in the course of time—and the time is not very far distant—

Mr. WATSON. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MEYER. Yes, sir.

Mr. WATSON. Was the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON] mistaken as to the very large appropriation which is here contemplated?

Mr. MEYER. I do not know that he was. He did not mention the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. WATSON. Well, does not the gentleman think it would be treating the House more fairly to bring in a separate bill, to have this question discussed as a separate measure, than to pass upon it here as a part of this very large appropriation bill?

Mr. MEYER. I think not. I regard this as a very important measure, which the House is now as competent to determine as it would be at any time hereafter. For that reason it is proper the question should now be presented to the House.

But I was about to say, when the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WATSON] interrupted me, I am satisfied that before many years the interests of our commerce, the protection of our Navy, the preservation of that peace which the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON] regards as so desirable, will make it necessary for us to construct a navy-yard as well as a dry dock on the shores of the Gulf of Mexico.

Mr. SIMPSON. To what commerce does the gentleman refer—to our foreign commerce carried on in British ships?

Mr. MEYER. To our American commerce, the commerce of this country, with the whole world.

Mr. SIMPSON. Why, we have heard gentlemen on that side say that our commerce has been driven from the seas under the high protective tariff. If this be true, we have no commerce to defend.

Mr. MEYER. The gentleman from Kansas visited the port of New Orleans, I know, only a few months ago; and I am sure that with his quick perception and active intelligence he must have seen evidences of a very large foreign commerce in that port, a commerce that passes through the Gulf of Mexico.

Mr. SIMPSON. I did; but I failed to see any American ships in that harbor. All that I saw were British ships, or Italian, or Norwegian; it was all foreign commerce. Why we should build up a navy to defend foreign commerce is more than I can discover.

Mr. MEYER. Well, Mr. Chairman, it is needless to discuss that question, because the gentleman from Kansas knows as well as any other member on this floor, that these foreign ships to which he refers do not enter our ports without bringing and carrying away cargoes and promoting commerce with all the nations of the globe.

Now, the necessity for this dry dock is so great, the work itself is so important, that it was considered proper by the committee to bring it in for consideration at an early time and not as an independent bill, as was suggested by the gentleman from Georgia should have been done. It is entirely competent for the House to determine the question now, as well as at any other time in the future. The necessity for a dry dock there has been recognized for many years past, and the only reason why it has not been constructed heretofore or provision made for it has been that there was a strong rivalry on the part of the various ports along the Gulf of Mexico to secure its establishment for themselves.

The two respective commissions appointed to select the location were so unanimous, and decided in the selection of the site which has been chosen, not alone because of its superior eligibility, but also because the Government already had a reservation there, that the other competing ports withdrew and conceded it to Algiers. These are the reasons why the measure has not been presented to Congress before this session—doubtless it would have passed had it been done.

Now, I sympathize with the gentleman from Kansas, who regards war as most undesirable. I, myself, long for the time when all the world will be for peace, and when there will be no wars or rumors of wars. But we know that from the most remote periods of history men and nations have gone to war; and while we have in our methods of warfare, as compared with those of the people of antiquity, improved somewhat, we must all admit the fact that as long as man preys on man and laps his brother's blood—and it seems his nature so to do—international strife will continue, and the truest and the surest way of maintaining peace is at all times to be prepared for every emergency that war can bring.

Who could on the morning of the 16th of October last have supposed that any war was likely to occur between this country and Chile? All seemed serene as a balmy May morning. And yet within the twenty-four hours there was excitement and apprehension, and our navy-yards and arsenals were busy with preparations for an imminent conflict in which our naval resources would have been put to the severest tests—

Mr. SCOTT. Let me ask the gentleman from Louisiana if he seriously thinks that there was ever, for an instant, any real danger of our getting into a war with Chile?

Mr. MEYER. I do, and certainly think war was averted because the Chileans knew this Government was far superior to theirs in its military power and its available military resources.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. They were afraid of our Navy. [Laughter.]

Mr. MEYER. No; they were not afraid of our Navy, but they knew that we could in a very short time gather together a sufficient army to overcome them on land and a sufficient fleet to lay them under tribute by sea.

Mr. WATSON. If your theory was carried out to its logical conclusion we would have the military systems of Europe transported to these shores in a short time. There would be no stop to the increase in our Army or our Navy.

Mr. MEYER. There is a necessity for a sufficiently large army and navy both, in a country of the magnitude of ours. We must provide for all contingencies, present as well as for the future. We well know that the unexpected may happen. Like a thunderbolt from a clear sky came the New Orleans incident, little more than a year ago. Who could have foreseen it?—danger of conflict with Italy? Scarcely in our remotest imagination would we even have dreamed of it; and yet within the space of a very few days war seemed almost inevitable.

Italy made hot demands upon us. Had she insisted we could not in honor have agreed to them. Yet she knew, as all the world knows, that we could in a very short time have provided ourselves with a navy that would have been amply powerful to have successfully resisted her battle ships. She relaxed her demands, and did not urge them to the last degree, because she knows our power and the resources of our Government, and that while their own navy at present excels ours, we could in a short time have rendered ourselves impregnable to their attacks. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, we may safely and readily conclude that the way to insure peace and to prevent war is to maintain an adequate force, by land and sea, to fortify any position we may be compelled to take in international disputes. The interests of our country demand that we shall not only maintain our Navy as it is, but that we shall bring it to such a standard as this great Government requires, and then you may have, if not a lasting peace, at least one that will endure throughout our generation.

Mr. SIMPSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MEYER. Certainly.

Mr. SIMPSON. Does not the gentleman realize the fact that our Navy went swaggering around recently and very nearly got us into a difficulty with the little Republic of Chile, in South America, that would have been a disgrace to us if we had got into a conflict with her? If we had not had that Navy we would not have encountered the danger.

Mr. MEYER. No, sir; I do not believe that. I do not believe that the officers and men of our Navy went "swaggering around," as the gentleman suggests. I do not believe the attack made on them by the Chileans was provoked. The evidence does not disclose that. I believe that the Chileans were hostile and thought they could impose upon our men with impunity, if they thought at all.

Mr. WATSON. Did you not say that both Italy and Chile were afraid to attack us because they knew we could meet them with an equal or superior force? Is not that a sufficient protection?

Mr. SIMPSON. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that there is a difference of opinion on the subject of this assault on our sailors being unprovoked. There are men who want a navy built so that they can get fat contracts for ships and supplies and make money out of the Government; and there are officers in the Navy who want promotion which they think they can get by having new ships and a little war.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the Chair must be entirely informed now as to the point of order after this discussion of the Chilean situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was going to suggest that the question before the committee is the point of order raised by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. MEYER. I should like, Mr. Chairman, to conclude my remarks.

Mr. HERBERT. If the gentleman will yield, I move that the committee rise.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana has the floor.

Mr. MEYER. I do not wish to discuss the question of Chile any longer, but I do wish to discuss the point of order.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman will be entitled to the floor when the committee resumes its session.

Mr. MEYER. Then I will yield for the purpose of permitting the motion that the committee rise.

The motion of Mr. HERBERT was then agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHIVELY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the naval appropriation bill and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. REILLY, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. GRADY, until Tuesday next, on account of important business.

To Mr. COOMBS, until Saturday, on public business.

Mr. McMILLIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock, noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. CADMUS, from the Committee on War Claims: A resolution referring the bill (H. R. 6518) for the relief of William T. Miles—to the Court of Claims. (Report No. 1053.)

By Mr. BELKNAP, from the Committee on Military Affairs: A bill (H. R. 4758) for the relief of Charles E. Heuston. (Report No. 1054.)

By Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: A bill (H. R. 3713) granting an increase of pension to Frances P. Gardener. (Report No. 1055.)

By Mr. COX of Tennessee, from the Committee on Claims, the bill (H. R. 1648) for the relief of Thomas P. Morgan, jr. (Report No. 1056.)

By Mr. SHELL, from the Committee on War Claims:

A bill (H. R. 7991) for the relief of Francis Tillman. (Report No. 1057.)

A bill (H. R. 7990) for the relief of George Wagner, administrator of H. Mastick, deceased. (Report No. 1058.)

By Mr. McCREARY, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs: A bill (H. R. 5227) for the relief of Mary A. Swift. (Report No. 1061.)

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were severally discharged from the consideration of the following bills, resolutions, and memorials; which were re-referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7088) to provide an additional amount to build and equip a steam vessel for boarding purposes at Chicago, Ill.—the Committee on Appropriations discharged, and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

A bill (H. R. 8050) for the relief of Andrew Schleuter, sergeant Company B, Six Months' Missouri Enrolled Militia—the Committee on Military Affairs discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 8038) granting a pension to William M. Watson, of Walker County, Ga.—the Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

House Miscellaneous Document No. 171, claim of Thomas Thacher—the Committee on War Claims discharged, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Petition of Jeremiah Claspell—the Committee on Military Affairs discharged, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

BILLS, MEMORIALS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills and a resolution of the following titles were introduced, severally read twice, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BINGHAM (by request): A bill (H. R. 8093) to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 8094) to amend the act approved February 4, 1887, entitled "An act to regulate commerce"—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. CRAIN of Texas: A bill (H. R. 8095) authorizing Aransas Harbor Terminal Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Corpus Christi Channel, known as the Morris and Cummings Ship Channel, in Aransas County, Tex.—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HARVEY: A bill (H. R. 8096) to enable the Ottawa Indians, the Indiana Miami Indians, and Western Miami Indians to bring suit in the Court of Claims for settlement of claims against States—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 8097) to amend section 22 of an act to regulate commerce, as amended March 2, 1889—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. LYNCH: A bill (H. R. 8098) to authorize the sale of timber on certain lands referred for the use of the Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior, in the State of Wisconsin, to regulate the purchase of timber from certain allottees on certain Chippewa Indian reservations in Wisconsin and Minnesota, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. CHARLES W. STONE: A bill (H. R. 8099) establishing a standard sheet and plate gauge—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. McMILLIN (by request): A bill (H. R. 8121) to secure better protection of lives of crews of light-ships, light-house tenders, and revenue-marine vessels, and to prevent loss of or damage to said vessels—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. ALLEN: A joint resolution (H. Res. 119) for relief of sufferers by overflow of the Tombigbee River—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. OTIS: Joint resolution relating to certain Mexican grants, Nos. 15, 4, 17, and 39, and revoking action of Congress thereon—to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. BRETZ: A bill (H. R. 8100) granting a pension to Elmyra E. Stuffle, widow of John Stuffle—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BUCHANAN of Virginia (by request): A bill (H. R. 8101) for the relief of John Ramey, sr.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. FYAN: A bill (H. R. 8102) for the relief of Medona F. Bishop, heir of John S. Bigbee, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HOLMAN: A bill (H. R. 8103) to correct the military record of Myron H. McMullen—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8104) to correct the military record of John C. Partlow—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KEM: A bill (H. R. 8105) granting a pension to Oscar F. Merrill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MCKAIG: A bill (H. R. 8106) for the correction of the army record of David R. Wallace, deceased—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MCCREARY: A bill (H. R. 8107) for the relief of Dr. W. O. Robards, of Boyle County, Ky.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8108) for the relief of Mrs. Bell M. Robards—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. OWENS: A bill (H. R. 8109) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of James McManus—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8110) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John M. Gray—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8111) granting a pension to Alfred Peck—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PARRETT: A bill (H. R. 8112) to reimburse Union Bethel, of Newburg, Ind., for property used by the military forces of the United States during the war of the rebellion—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PRICE: A bill (H. R. 8113) for the relief of the estate of George Sallinger—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SHONK: A bill (H. R. 8114) granting a pension to Clara R. Rodgers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 8115) granting an honorable discharge to Logan Collins, late of Company D, One hundred and first Regiment of Colored Volunteers, war of 1861, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WILLIAM J. STONE (by request): A bill (H. R. 8116) for the relief of the widow of Martin Webb, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. STORER: A bill (H. R. 8117) for the relief of W. H. Harrison—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. WARWICK: A bill (H. R. 8118) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Henry Wernet—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WHEELER of Alabama: A bill (H. R. 8119) to refer the claim against the United States of Sebastian Leohr, of Franklin County, Ala., to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WILSON of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 8120) to remove the charge of desertion against John S. Crites—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ALDERSON: Papers to accompany House bill 7852—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ATKINSON: Petition of Milford Grange, to prevent gambling in farm products, and the adulteration of food and drugs—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of the same body, to prohibit contracts discrediting legal-tender currency—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, petition of same body, for free delivery of rural mails—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BELDEN: Petition of Edwin A. Knapp Post, No. 340, Grand Army of the Republic, of New York, for passage of bill introduced by Representative WHEELER of Alabama, for marking and preserving the battle lines at Gettysburg, Pa.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Tully Valley, Little York, and Watervale Granges, to prevent gambling in farm products, and the adulteration of food and drugs—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of the same bodies, for a pure-lard law—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BENTLEY: Petition of Higginsville and Floyd Granges, to prevent gambling in farm products, and the adulteration of food and drugs—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of the same body, for a pure-lard, law—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Denmark and Sauquoit Granges, to prevent the adulteration of food and drugs—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of the same bodies, for a pure-lard law—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BOUTELLE: Petition of citizens of Penobscot County, Me., in favor of bill to prevent gambling in farm products—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. BRANCH: Two petitions in regard to appropriation for Durhams Creek—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. BRETZ: Proof and affidavits of William H. Taylor for pension, to accompany House bill 6024—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CAPEHART: Petition of Isaac Bloss to have his claim referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CATE: Petition of Grand Army of the Republic Post, No. 80, of Arkansas, to mark battle lines at Gettysburg—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CHAPIN: Petition of E. H. R. Lyman and others, in favor of a proposed constitutional amendment to be known as the sixteenth amendment, prohibiting establishment of any religion—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CLOVER: Petition of citizens of Vernon Township, Cowley County, Kans., for free delivery of rural mails—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. COCKRAN: Petition for establishment of a Bureau of American Republics—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. COOMBS: Petition of furniture manufacturers asking that German plate looking glass be put on the free list—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of 54 citizens of Brooklyn, for an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit Government funds being used for sectarian purposes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Bedford Heights Baptist Church, for amendment to the Constitution preventing Government money being used for sectarian purposes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of 400 firms and persons engaged in manufactures and exporting in New York City, remonstrating against any action by Congress to impair the usefulness of the Bureau of American Republics—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 13, 1892.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Postmaster-General, transmitting, in response to a resolution of March 24, 1892, a list of subordinates in his Department who do not come under the classified civil service; which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting and indorsing a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs favoring the appointment of a chief clerk for the Office of Indian Affairs; which was read.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the communication be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I do not see exactly how it can be met now, as the Indian appropriation bill has passed out of the consideration of each branch separately and is in a committee of conference, but the communication should be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be referred, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of the Presbyterian Church of De Graff, Ohio, praying that the World's Columbian Fair be closed on Sunday, that the sale of intoxicating liquors be prohibited on the grounds, and that the art department be conducted in accordance with the American standard of purity in art; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. QUAY presented a petition of the Pittsburg (Pa.) Presbytery of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, praying for the prohibition of the liquor traffic in the Territory of Alaska, and also for the prevention of the sale of liquor within the grounds of the World's Columbian Exposition; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented the memorial of Thomas J. Greenawald, and 13 other citizens of Lehigh County, Pa., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Faulkner, Caine, and Teller bills, to provide home rule for Utah Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of York, Pa., praying for the passage of the so-called Torrey bankruptcy bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Anna V. Ingerton, of Pennsylvania, widow of the late William R. Ingerton, lieutenant-colonel of the Thirteenth Tennessee Cavalry, praying that the charge on the books of the Third Auditor of the United States Treasury against her late husband be remitted; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the following petitions of Waterloo, Milford, North Warren, Mulberry, Green Valley, Farmer's Hope, Gibson Star, Edgewood, Narrows Creek, Charlestown Union, Harbor Creek, Mill Village, West Deer, and West Branch Granges, Patrons of Husbandry, of Pennsylvania:

Petitions praying for the enactment of legislation for the encouragement of silk culture—referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Petitions praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent gambling in farm products—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Petitions praying for the passage of House bill 395, defining lard and imposing a tax thereon—ordered to lie on the table.

Petitions praying for the passage of a bill to prevent the adulteration of food and drugs—ordered to lie on the table.

Petitions praying for the free delivery of mails in rural districts—referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Petitions praying for the passage of a bill making certain issues of money full legal tender in payment of all debts—to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. STEWART presented a petition of citizens of Reno, Nev., and a petition of citizens of Carson City, Nev., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting any legislation by the States respecting an establishment of religion or making an appropriation of money for any sectarian purpose; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FELTON presented sundry petitions collected by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, signed by 77 citizens of California, praying that no exposition or exhibition for which appropriations are made by Congress shall be opened on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. TELLER presented a petition of citizens of Cuenin Colo., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate speculation in fictitious farm products; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PADDOCK presented the petition of C. M. Adams and 100 other citizens of Lexington, Nebr., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting any legislation by the States respecting an establishment of religion or making an appropriation of money for any sectarian purpose; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DAWES presented a petition of the Boston (Mass.) Merchants' Association, praying for the continuance of the Bureau of American Republics, and stating that any curtailment thereof will be detrimental to the country; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of citizens of Boston, Mass., remonstrating against the passage of the Chinese exclusion bill; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a memorial numerously signed by merchants, manufacturers, and business firms of St. Louis, Mo., in commercial relations with Mexico, Central and South America, and the West Indies, remonstrating against the proposed abolition of the Bureau of American Republics established at Washington, according to the recommendations of the International American Conference, or against any action by Congress that will tend to retract its field of action or impair its usefulness. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I present a resolution of the Transmississippi Commercial Congress recently held at New Orleans, La., signed by L. Bradford Prince, president, and Henry H. Smith, secretary, which is very short, and I will read it.

Resolved, That both justice and expediency demand the immediate admission of New Mexico as a State, to which right it has long been entitled by population, wealth, and resources, as well as by the provisions of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo.

I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Territories.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN presented a petition of citizens of Macon County, Ala., praying for the enactment of legislation regulating speculation in fictitious farm products; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of the First Congregational Church of Norwood, Mass., and a petition of citizens of Medway, Mass., praying for the closing of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented a petition of the marble cutters and finishers of Boston, Mass., praying that such duty may be placed on manufacturers of marble as will give sufficient protection to American workmen; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PALMER presented sundry petitions collected by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Illinois, containing 116 individual signatures, praying that no exposition or exhibition for which appropriations are made by Congress shall be opened on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. MITCHELL presented sundry petitions collected by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Oregon, praying that no exposition or exhibition for which appropriations are made by Congress shall be opened on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented the following petitions of Oak Grove, Grand Prairie, Mount Zion, Prescott, and Mohawk Granges, Patrons of Husbandry, of Oregon:

Petition praying for the enactment of legislation for the encouragement of silk culture—ordered to lie on the table.

Petitions praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent gambling in farm products—referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Petitions praying for the passage of a bill to prevent the adulteration of food and drugs—ordered to lie on the table.

Petitions praying for the free delivery of mails in rural districts—referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. VEST presented a petition of Meramec Farmers and Laborers' Union, No. 850, of St. Louis County, Mo., praying for the passage of Senate bill 2531, in regard to fractional currency; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

LEGAL PROTECTION OF INDIANS.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I have in my hand a petition to the Senate and House of Representatives, which contains such remarkable statements that I feel as if the Senate would perhaps indulge me a moment in regard to it. The petition is brief:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The undersigned respectfully ask the attention of Congress to the fact that the Indians (other than the civilized tribes) living upon reservations are left, through the decay of their own systems of government, brought about by our means and through our failure to substitute any other system therefor, without the protection and the civilizing and restraining influence of law.

The undersigned therefore earnestly urge upon Congress that law and the means of enforcing it be provided at the present session for Indians and others living upon the Indian reservations.

This petition is signed by C. D. W. Bridgman, rector of Holy Trinity Church, Harlem, and a large number of other people, each one of whom puts down his residence and street and number. It is manifest that it is the honest conviction of the persons who signed the petition that the statements which they make here are true; I do not doubt it. It is, however, a printed petition, and many of the like kind I have received before. It is, therefore, equally manifest that these statements have been prepared by others for these people to sign.

As they are so far wide from the truth and the actual condition of things, I have felt as if it were due to both the executive department and the legislative department of this Government that I should call their attention, as well as the attention of those who may be solicited to sign such statements and send them to Congress, to some things with which these statements are at absolute variance.

Neither the Executive nor Congress has left the Indians without the protection and civilizing influence of law. Both the Executive and Congress have for the last ten years professed to do what was in their power to give justice to the Indian and to make him a self-supporting citizen of the United States. If the statement here made were true, it would be a just reproach upon both the executive and the legislative departments of the Government. It is because it is not true and because I believe that both the executive department and the legislative department of this Government have for the last ten or twelve years without exception undertaken, to the best of their ability, to accomplish just what this paper states they have failed to do, that I desire to call attention for a moment to some things they have done; and it is somewhat mortifying to those engaged in this work that these things have failed to attract the attention of people so manifestly intelligent and sincere as those who have signed this petition.

More than ten years ago, at the suggestion of the then Secretary of the Interior, now the honorable Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], there was established an Indian court—a court upon all reservations where there existed peace—for the purpose of trying in that court, established by the Secretary of the Interior, with judges selected from the tribes by him, all those offenses which are usually tried in the petty police courts of small towns. That court has proved itself one of the most valuable of all the instrumentalities enlisted by this Government in the civilization of the Indians. It has been recognized by Congress. Its judges have been paid in the annual appropriation bills. Its jurisdiction has been enlarged from year to year. It has had the approbation, so far as I know and I believe, of all the Secretaries of the Interior since its establishment. It has administered justice among the Indians as fairly as justice is administered on the average among white people. Nearly $12,600 has been appropriated to pay these judges for their services.

In addition to that, an Indian police has been established during all that time as executive officers to maintain the peace and protect the rights of individual Indians; and that has come to commend itself not only to the Interior Department, but even to the Army, which has taken pains to commend it for its efficiency and its contribution to the protection of the rights of the Indians.

One hundred and fifty-odd thousand dollars each year is appropriated for the maintenance of that police system among the Indians on the reservations.

In addition to this, in the year 1885, on the 3d day of March, Congress placed upon the statute book, and it is there now, this provision of law in regard to the reservations—section 9, found at the three hundred and eighty-fifth page of the twenty-third volume of the Statutes:

That immediately upon and after the date of the passage of this act all Indians, committing against the person or property of another Indian or other person any of the following crimes, namely, murder, manslaughter, rape, assault with intent to kill, arson, burglary, and larceny within any Territory of the United States, and either within or without an Indian reservation, shall be subject therefor to the laws of such Territory relating to said crimes, and shall be tried therefor in the same courts and in the same manner and shall be subject to the same penalties as are all other persons charged with the commission of said crimes; respectively; and the said courts are hereby given jurisdiction in all such cases; and all such Indians committing any of the above crimes against the person or property of another Indian or other person within the boundaries of any State of the United States, and within the limits of any Indian reservation, shall be subject to the same laws, tried in the same courts and in the same manner, and subject to the same penalties as are all other persons committing any of the above crimes within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States.

And as if it were not enough, with the court of Indian offenses to protect the life and the person and the property of individual Indians upon the reservations, it was provided in the severalty law in 1887:

SEC. 6. That upon the completion of said allotments and the patenting of the lands to said allottees, each and every member of the respective bands or tribes of Indians to whom allotments have been made shall have the benefit of and be subject to the laws, both civil and criminal, of the State or Territory in which they may reside; and no Territory shall pass or enforce any law denying any such Indian within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law.

And as if that were not enough, the act went on further to say:

And every Indian born within the territorial limits of the United States to whom allotments shall have been made under the provisions of this act, or under any law or treaty, and every Indian born within the territorial limits of the United States who has voluntarily taken up, within said limits, his residence separate and apart from any tribe of Indians therein, and has adopted the habits of civilized life, is hereby declared to be a citizen of the United States, and is entitled to all the rights, privileges, and immunities of such citizens, whether said Indian has been or not, by birth or otherwise, a member of any tribe of Indians within the territorial limits of the United States.

It is to my mind hardly conceivable that there could be provided any further legislation or any further facility for opening the courts of the United States to the Indians in this country than has already been provided. Therefore, it seems very strange to me that anybody should prepare and have printed a petition and ask intelligent and honest and earnest friends of the Indian to put their names to a petition which says that by our fault, with all this work and all this money that we have expended for this very purpose, we have left the Indians on the reservations without the protection and civilizing and restraining influence of law.

This petition excepts the five civilized tribes from this awful condition. I venture to say, and I think I shall be sustained by every member of the Senate who has had actual observation of the condition of things in the five tribes, that the life and the peace, and the property, and the rights of every Indian upon any reservation in the United States are as safe and as well protected in the administration of the law as they are among the five tribes.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. DAWES. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. A gentleman who spent a good deal of time in the Cherokee Nation recently told me that near the court-house stood a gibbet on which at least 100 persons had been hung within a very short period of time. So in that respect I think life on a reservation is quite as safe as it is in the Cherokee Nation.

Mr. DAWES. I should think that would show it was insecure. I know these people to be honest, and I have had so many of these petitions that I felt possibly it would be a proper service to render to call to this matter the attention of those to whom these petitions prepared by somebody else are presented to be signed and sent in.

I wish to add that it is also true that the administration of justice on Indian reservations is not perfect. It can be improved; and those who are responsible for the conduct of affairs will welcome any suggestion that will tend to improve the administration of justice upon those reservations. The administration of justice all over this country, I suppose can possibly be improved. Indeed the bill before the Senate this moment in order is a bill to amend and improve the act creating the circuit courts of appeals of the United States. No court is beyond perfection, and no administration of justice among the Indians is claimed to be beyond improvement, but what I want to say is that these statements are utterly groundless.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from Massachusetts upon a matter touching upon this subject. Some years ago I was called upon to prosecute an Indian for what seemed to be the most wanton murder I knew of even in the annals of Indian criminality. The defense was interposed in that case that jurisdiction of that crime had been assumed by the Indian tribe and the Indian had been tried and punished according to the laws and usages of the tribe. He had for that wanton murder been sentenced to pay a few blankets and a pony or two to the relatives of the deceased persons. There were two or three who had been murdered by him. I found at that time that in cases of crime committed upon the person or property of one Indian by another in the Indian country the laws and usages of the Indian tribe were controlling and their tribunals took jurisdiction concurrently with the courts of the United States; and if such jurisdiction was first assumed, it ousted that of the Federal courts. Are those laws still in existence?

Mr. DAWES. I am very glad to answer the Senator's inquiry. That was the condition of things up to the time the Indian, Crow Dog, murdered Spotted Tail, because Spotted Tail took his wife away from him. Following the modes and methods of redress so prevalent among civilized people, he was tried by the Territorial court and sentenced to be hung. The case was brought up to the United States court and the United States Court discharged him on the ground that the tribe had jurisdiction of that offense. Thereupon was enacted a law which I read here, and which will bear reading again, and since that day this law itself has been before the Supreme Court and has been sustained.

Mr. ALLEN. That impression was on my mind, that the law had been made to cure that defect of jurisdiction. I understood it correctly.

Mr. DAWES. This is the law:

That immediately upon and after the date of the passage of this act all Indians committing against the person or property of another Indian or other person—

I do not see how it can include any more—any of the following crimes, namely, murder, manslaughter, rape, assault with intent to kill, arson, burglary, and larceny within any Territory of the United States, and either within or without an Indian reservation, shall be subject therefor to the laws of such Territory relating to said crimes.

Then it goes on to say that if it be committed in a State it shall be tried by the laws of the State. This was enacted to meet the unfortunate cases to which my attention has just been called, and the Supreme Court has sustained this law. It is quite out of the way for persons who claim to be intelligent to go around soliciting people to send statements to Congress that we in all our pretense here have left the Indian without the protection of the law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 649) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department;

A bill (H. R. 1105) for the relief of Henry S. Cohn, late of the One hundred and sixth Ohio Volunteers.

A bill (H. R. 1418) for the relief of Sarah A. Clapp; and

A bill (H. R. 2713) in relation to the execution of declarations and other papers in pension claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DOLPH. I am directed to report back from the Committee on Foreign Relations the bill (H. R. 6185) to absolutely prohibit the coming of Chinese persons into the United States favorably with an amendment.

I desire to state that the report is the unanimous report of the committee as far as its members were present this morning, only one member being absent, and I think I can say safely that that member will approve of the report.

I am directed also by the committee at the earliest possible moment to endeavor to call up the bill for the consideration of the Senate, because the present legislation excluding Chinese from the United States will expire early in the forepart of next month. The bill as reported substitutes the bill already passed by the Senate for the House bill.

I shall, as soon as the present order is disposed of and I can do so without serious conflict with my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], ask that the bill be taken up for consideration.

Mr. FELTON. Before the consideration of that bill is had, as it is a matter of vital importance to the constituency which I in part represent, and as the report is earlier and different from what I understood it would be, I desire two or three days to elapse in order that I may, as well as I can, present the views and interests of the people of the Pacific coast upon this question.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I ought perhaps to say that the action of the other House upon this measure was rather unusual. Instead of acting upon the bill passed by the Senate and sent to the House, the House passed a separate bill and now have the Senate bill before them.

There is really no reason why the Senate should act upon the bill sent from the House any more than that the House should act upon the bill sent by the Senate. The action of the House indicates to me that the managers of the majority in that body were not anxious for early legislation upon the subject, because the passage of an independent bill by the House does not hurry matters at all. If all after the enacting clause had been stricken out of the Senate bill and the House bill substituted, the bill would have been in conference for a week, and probably some progress made towards coming to some understanding, by which some legislation could be enacted, to prevent a hiatus in legislation which would allow all the Chinese in British Columbia, Canada, and Mexico, who are ready to come in the United States, to cross the boundary when there was no legislation to prevent them. But the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations has acted promptly upon the bill at the very first meeting that the committee has had since the bill came into the Senate, and which was promptly, when it came from the House, referred to that committee. We have not stood upon any question of dignity, but have been and are anxious to secure some legislation upon the subject.

There is this much to be said in regard to this proposed legislation, whatever anyone's opinion may be in regard to the propriety of either measure: The Senate bill proposes to continue the existing legislation, to provide for the present emergency, and to make certain amendments in the law to enable it to be more effectually enforced. If when the present emergency is met, and the existing laws upon the statute book are continued and amended so that they may be better enforced, it is thought that further and more drastic legislation is required, the House can at any time act upon the bill of the Senate, which it now has before it, and make such amendments to it as it may see fit. There will be ample time after the bill reported is passed to amend the existing laws. One idea that has governed the committee in its report is that the best thing to be done is to secure some immediate legislation and not allow existing legislation to expire, to report a measure that can be speedily acted upon and can receive the support of the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator please state distinctly why it is that immediate legislation must be had?

Mr. DOLPH. Because on the 6th of May the existing legislation expires. If the 6th of May passes and no act in regard to the restriction of the coming of Chinese laborers is passed and signed by the President, our ports will be open to laborers from China and from every other part of the world, and those in British Columbia and in Canada desiring to cross the line can do so, and can not be prevented from coming. As the House has declined to act upon the Senate bill and sent us a separate measure, it is necessary that the Senate should act upon this bill and send it, if amended, to a conference, so that an agreement shall be arrived at by the conference committee, which can be acted upon by both branches, and the bill be approved by the President before the 6th of May, or we shall have no law whatever to prevent the coming of the Chinese. Only three weeks remain in which to secure legislation.

Mr. FELTON. Mr. President—

Mr. COCKRELL. What is before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is no question pending before the Senate. The Senator from Oregon is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. FELTON. I yield to no gentleman upon this floor upon the importance of the question that some law should be passed before the time has arrived when the present law shall have expired, but, sir, this is a matter of sufficient importance—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Debate is only proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. FELTON. I should just like a half minute.

But, sir, the matter is of such importance as to deserve the consideration of this Senate, regardless of many other measures; and while I have listened and am in accord with much the Senator from Oregon has said regarding the action of the House, I have not the remotest idea that if this bill passes in the shape that the Senator desires and is reported, which is not satisfactory to myself and the constituency which I represent, this question will ever be heard of again at this session. Hence I desire time for discussion.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not wish this debate to go on upon the assumption that the act referred to expires as suggested by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. In my judgment, so far as I have been able to examine—and I believe that is the opinion of others who have examined it as well—that act does not expire for a period of two years; and if we fail to pass an act now I shall not be willing to admit that there is no law on the statute book excluding Chinese. I do not believe it expires until 1894.

Mr. DOLPH. I have examined that question and I have not a particle of doubt about it. I am willing to risk my opinion that the act of 1884 merely amended the first section of the act of 1882, which contained the limitation, so that it should read as prescribed in the amending act, so that it carried back the adoption of the act of 1882 in regard to the limitation.

Mr. TELLER. It is not a matter whether the Senator's opinion is better than mine or mine better than his. It will be a question for the construction of the officials of the Government when the proper time comes. That is a matter now before the Judiciary Committee, and the committee have had it under consideration, but they have not yet decided that question. It is not a clear question, I will say to the Senator. It may be doubtful whether I am correct or he, but I do not want this to go out so that if there is no legislation the department of the Government that is called upon to construe the question will feel concluded by anything that has been said here to-day on this subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. VILAS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1743) for the relief of the legal representatives of William D. Wilson, deceased, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1263) for the relief of Henry George, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, submitted a report to accompany the bill (S. 825) relating to the pay and retirement of the mates in the Navy, heretofore reported by him.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2407) for the relief of the legal representative or representatives of Franklin S. Whitney, deceased, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am instructed by the Committee on Claims to report back the bill (S. 375) for the relief of James and William Crooks, of Canada, and ask that the committee be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, where it properly belongs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be so referred.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2680) for the relief of Lennes A. Jackson, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. KENNA, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2100) for the relief of the estate of Emmet Crawford, deceased, late captain of the Third Regiment, United States Cavalry, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Pensions; which was agreed to.

CHEYENNE AND ARAPAHOE RESERVATION.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report a resolution, together with a written report, which I ask to have printed, and that the resolution lie over. I give notice that I shall ask the Senate some day next week to consider the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That for reasons set forth in the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs upon the President's message of February 18, 1892, upon the appropriation of March 3, 1891, for payment to Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations for their interest in the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Reservation in the Indian Territory, submitted with this resolution, it is the opinion of the Senate that there is no sufficient reason for interference in the due execution of the law referred to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be printed and the resolution lie over.

TARIFF COMPILATION OF 1891.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following resolution, reported it without amendment; and the resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 15,000 copies of Senate Report No. 2130, Fifty-first Congress, second session, being Tariff Compilation of 1891, prepared by the Senate Committee on Finance under authority of the act of Congress of August 30, 1890, of which number 5,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 10,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. COKE introduced a bill (S. 2900) authorizing Aransas Harbor Terminal Railway Company to construct a bridge over and across the Corpus Christi Channel, known as the Morris and Cummings Ship Channel, in Aransas County, Tex.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FELTON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2901) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in the cases of Edward N. Fish et al., for supplies furnished the Indian service; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 2902) granting an increase of pension to Andrew T. Bovard; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2903) to purchase a bust of Gen. Philip H. Sheridan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2904) for the relief of Anna V. Ingerton, widow of the late William H. Ingerton, lieutenant-colonel of the Thirteenth Tennessee Cavalry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 2905) for the relief of John M. Goodhue; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 2906) to amend section 4194 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to certificates of title to vessels; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 2907) for the relief of Uriah Hoyt; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MANDERSON introduced a bill (S. 2908) for the relief of Charles Candy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 2909) granting a pension to Jennie R. Kincheloe; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HANSBROUGH introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 72) relative to the erection of a penitentiary in the State of North Dakota, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. HALE, it was—Ordered, That the papers relating to the bill granting a pension to Jennie R. Kincheloe be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Pensions, there having been no adverse report thereon.

AMENDMENTS TO A BILL.

Mr. FELTON submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE SITE.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the expenses incident to the selecting of a site for a new Government Printing Office by the Joint Committee on Printing, acting under Senate concurrent resolution of March 9, 1892, authorizing said committee "to ascertain the most suitable site for a Government Printing Office, looking to the future growth of the country and growing demand upon the printing establishment, ascertain the fair value of the same, and make report of such investigation and result," be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON TERRITORIES.

Mr. PLATT submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the stenographer employed to report the hearing before the Committee on Territories in relation to the bill (S. 1962) to incorporate the Yellowstone Park Company be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

CONDITION OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. GEORGE. If in order now, I desire to call up for consideration the Senate resolution heretofore submitted by me, which was reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, in relation to an investigation of the condition of agriculture.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays the resolution before the Senate. It was reported by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was to strike out all after the word "Resolved," and insert:

That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to ascertain in every practicable way, and report from time to time to the Senate, the present condition of agriculture in the United States, and the present prices of agricultural products; and if there be any of which the prices are depressed, then the causes of such depression and the remedies therefor. And particularly whether the reports of the Department of Agriculture on the distribution and consumption of farm products, published from time to time by authority of the Secretary of Agriculture, contribute in any way to such depression of the market prices of such products, and whether any proper governmental purpose is subserved by such publication, and whether such publication should be continued.

And for this purpose that they be authorized, by subcommittee or otherwise, to sit during the recess and sessions of the Senate, at such times and places as they may deem advisable, to employ a stenographer and such clerical assistance and such experts as they may deem necessary, and that they be authorized to send for persons and papers, the expense of such investigation to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Has that resolution been referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has been, and it was reported yesterday.

Mr. PADDOCK. It was reported by the chairman of the committee yesterday.

Mr. HOAR. I wish it might go over. There was an agreement that the Senate should spend yesterday and to-day upon the Calendar, and I suppose to bring forward a resolution as the routine morning business, not coming over from the day before, but a resolution previously reported, would be inconsistent with that understanding. If the resolution will occasion no debate I shall not object to its consideration.

Mr. PADDOCK. It will lead to no debate, I think. It is in the usual form of such resolutions.

Mr. GEORGE. I move that the resolution be taken up and considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. PLATT. I do not think the resolution was listened to when it was read. I should like to hear it read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The substitute reported by the committee will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the proposed substitute.

Mr. PLATT. Does that require unanimous consent?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi makes a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution, and the question is on that motion.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to say that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] has informed me that he gave notice that he would address the Senate this morning. If the resolution is to lead to debate and the consumption of time, which I do not anticipate, I, of course, do not desire to press its consideration now so as to interfere with the Senator from Alabama. If there is opposition to the resolution, I shall ask to have it taken up at some other time so as not to interfere with any order which has been made by the Senate, or with the expectation of any member of the Senate. It is a resolution, however, which received the sanction of the Committee on Agriculture and also of the Committee on Contingent Expenses, and I should like to have it considered at an early day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand that the Senator withdraws his motion?

Mr. HOAR. My interest in the matter is that after the expiration of the order to spend another day on the Calendar the bill to amend the act in regard to the circuit court of appeals is the unfinished business. I am very desirous to have that bill considered at an early day, and also two others which follow, of the same nature, one relating to the Court of Claims and one relating to the courts of the District of Columbia, for reasons which the Senator knows very well. If this resolution is to be debated, I do not want it to come up now. That is all.

Mr. GEORGE. I shall not press it now, but I shall ask that it be made the special order for Monday next at 2 o'clock.

Mr. HOAR. I have no objection to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi withdraws his motion for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator that the resolution be made the special order for Monday next at 2 o'clock? The Chair hears no objection, and it will be so ordered.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The VICE-PRESIDENT announced his signature of the following enrolled bills which had heretofore received the signature of the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

A bill (S. 18) for the relief of Edward S. Armstrong;

A bill (S. 440) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between the city of Chamberlain, in Brule County, and Lyman County, in the State of South Dakota;

A bill (S. 1643) authorizing the Velasco Terminal Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Brazos River, in the State of Texas; and

A bill (S. 1645) making Velasco a subport of entry.

NICOLINO MILEO.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I transmit, in reply to the resolution of the Senate under date of December 15, 1891, a report from the Secretary of State, with accompanying documents, in relation to the correspondence had with regard to the imprisonment into its service and punishment by the Government of Italy of Nicolino Mileo, a naturalized citizen of the United States.

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, April 12, 1892.

ASSESSMENTS OF DISTRICT REAL ESTATE.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent to have taken up for present consideration House bill 5978. I will say that the assessor of the District of Columbia is anxious that this bill shall receive immediate consideration. I think there will be no objection to it. It has passed the House and it will only take a minute.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 5978) to extend the time for making assessments of real estate, etc., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to extend the time for making an assessment of real estate in the District of Columbia, outside the cities of Washington and Georgetown."

PURCHASE OF SILVER BULLION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], coming over by unanimous consent from yesterday, which will be read:

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. STEWART, April 11, 1892, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate what is the aggregate cost of the silver bullion and standard dollars coined therefrom purchased under the act of July 14, 1890, and now held in the Treasury, and a detailed statement of the amount purchased each day, and the date thereof; and what amount of Treasury notes issued for such purchase is now outstanding, and whether any of such notes have been received by the Treasury in exchange for gold coin or redeemed in gold coin, and what amount of silver coin there is now in the Treasury applicable to the redemption of such notes, and also whether, when such notes are received into the Treasury for customs, taxes, and other public dues, they are reissued or retained in the Treasury; and if any of such notes have been retained in the Treasury what amount has been so retained. Are persons selling bullion to the United States under the act of July 14, 1890, required to make immediate delivery and take the bullion so sold out of the market, or are they given time to make such deliveries after having made a contract to supply the United States and deprive others of that opportunity? Does the public have notice of the times, places, and amounts of silver bullion which will be purchased by the United States, or are such purchases made of brokers and bankers without such public notice? Is the business of purchasing silver bullion under the act of July 14, 1890, conducted with a view of depressing the price of bullion and obtaining it as cheap as possible, or with a view of carrying out the "established policy of the United States to maintain the two metals (gold and silver) on a parity with each other upon the present legal ratio?" And what amount of gold coin and gold bars is there in the Treasury, exclusive of outstanding gold certificates?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, in the remarks I had the honor to submit to the Senate on the 4th of April, on the subject of silver and its coinage, I endeavored to present the situation of our financial system as it is, and to state the leading facts of the history of our legislation in respect of the precious metals by which our present condition has been reached.

Owing to the wide field of discussion that must be covered by any attempt to examine this subject intelligently, I would not then trespass so far upon the time of the Senate as to present my conclusions as to the measures that are needed to perfect that part of our system of finance that relates to paper money and to gold and silver coin. I will now present them, with the kind indulgence of the Senate.

First. As to the standard coins of gold and silver, we need a provision of positive law that fixes the ratio between them by prescribing the pure metal and the alloy that they shall respectively contain.

This we have.

Second. That standard gold and silver coins shall have equal legal-tender power according to their face value.

This we also have.

Third, we need a means or instrumentality by which we can prevent the occurrence of a depreciation of the value of one coin below the other, as fixed by law, as a result of the depreciation in the commercial markets of the value of the bullion, or pure metal, in either coin.

This we also have in the coin certificate that is provided in the act of July 14, 1890, attended with the option, on the part of the Government, to redeem the certificate in either coin.

Fourth. As the coin certificate represents, equally, gold and silver, standard, legal-tender coin, and is itself a legal tender, it has all the value of both coins, and can not fall below the value of either coin, until the Government fails to redeem it, on demand.

I will not consider an event so remote, so impossible as that, as having any value in the argument of this subject.

Fifth. The issue of coin certificates necessarily includes in the basis for their redemption gold and silver coins in the Treasury of the United States. These coin certificates and the promise of redemption they carry on their face represent the exact relation that the United States hold to all the paper money issued under its authority, in its final analysis, except that in the case of gold certificates the holder may lawfully demand redemption in gold coin. In all other cases, the right of the holder to demand redemption of any form of paper money in coin is qualified by the right of the Government to pay in any legal-tender standard coin.

We have never repudiated our obligation, and never will repudiate it, to redeem our paper money in coin. So there is and must be a specie basis of standard dollars for the redemption of every promise of the United States that is issued to circulate as money.

Paper dollars can only be redeemed with coined dollars. They can not be redeemed with any mere commodity, whatever may be its intrinsic value or its relative value, computed in dollars; or whatever may be its durability, such as iron, steel, copper, or gold or silver bullion.

The Government must make the metal into coin and fix its value by an act of Congress before it can be counted or considered as forming a part of a redemption fund in the Treasury for the redemption of its paper promises.

If this is not true the Government can accept any valuable commodity and hold it in the Treasury as mere security for the redemption of its money obligations. For a better reason the Government could accept the mere personal obligations of individuals as the basis of the redemption of its promises issued to circulate as money.

Actual coin in the Treasury, whether acquired by the coinage of silver and gold, or by borrowing money, or through taxation, is the only fund that Congress can employ in the redemption of its paper-money promises.

If this fund is to be measured by the gold coin in the Treasury, or the sum in gold that the Government can cause to be placed there, the issue of paper money by the Government on that basis would be quite insufficient for the needs of the people.

On the 1st of April, 1892, there was of gold coin in the Treasury, $198,949,892; of gold bullion, $31,194,377; total, $230,144,269.

At the rate of three dollars in paper for one in coin, this would give a currency of $840,432,807.

On the same day the paper money for the redemption of which the Government is responsible was as follows:

Gold certificates:
In the Treasury	$23,673,770
In circulation	154,329,229
Silver certificates:
In the Treasury	3,589,703
In circulation	325,683,140
Coin certificates:
In the Treasury	11,996,788
In circulation	77,605,410
United States notes:
In the Treasury	22,776,054
In circulation	232,904,992
Currency certificates:
In the Treasury	21,380,000
In circulation	9,840,000
National-bank notes:
In the Treasury	3,884,496
In circulation	168,044,955
Total	1,046,559,518

So that we are now doing a banking business of issue and redemption on the basis of $5 in paper for $1 of gold. If we are to be confined to this basis of issue and redemption it is very clear that the holders of gold certificates can, at this time, and at their pleasure, withdraw $178,000,000 of gold coin from the Treasury and reduce the basis of redemption to $1 in gold for $7 in paper.

This one statement of facts demonstrates that, on a single gold basis of redemption, which must be the case when silver coinage is abandoned, our paper money would rest on a dangerous foundation, at the mercy of the holders of gold in time of peace, and in time of war our paper money would compare with gold as it did in 1864, when $100 in gold was worth $260 in greenbacks.

If we had then had as much silver coin and bullion in the Treasury as we have now, or if we had been able from our own mines, as we are now, to supply to the Treasury $100,000,000 annually, we would have accumulated during the period of the war at least $400,000,000 in coin. On this we could have issued $1,600,000,000 of good money that would not have depreciated, and our people would thus have provided the Government, without interest, with half the amount of money that the civil war cost the Government.

I say this, because we could have as easily maintained a paper circulation of four dollars of paper for one of coin during the war as we can now.

We have now a coin and bullion basis, including gold and silver, of $648,954,803, for the redemption of $1,046,559,518, a little more than one dollar of coin for two of paper; of this sum of coin the silver amounts to $368,810,534.

If in the next ten years we should increase our paper issues to $2,000,000,000, every dollar based on a dollar of coin in the Treasury, and if our average of population should be only 70,000,000 for that decade, we would have a per capita circulation of $28.57, to which, on the present ratio of about one-fourth in addition of coin per capita in free circulation, the people would have for use in their business a per capita supply of money of $35, every dollar as good as gold and as good as silver. They would then have nearly as full a supply of good money as prosperous France has now.

So there is every good reason for, and there is no danger in, the expansion of the basis of redemption for our paper promises by uniting gold and silver on equal terms and on the present ratio to create that redemption fund in the Treasury.

Nothing but coins of gold and silver should go into that fund, and no discredited coin should enter it. We can not constitutionally discredit our gold or silver coins by any legislative discrimination between them. Our powers are only to coin money and to regulate the value thereof.

If we destroy the value of either coin, in whole or in part, we violate our plain duty. If we refuse to coin either, we destroy that coin and reduce it from its function as money to a mere commodity.

If we confine our basis of redemption to gold alone, we expose all our people who handle our paper money and their industries to the power of a gold monopoly, with the ability to control the price of money, almost without restraint.

Curtailing the volume of money raises the price, just as it raises the price of wheat, cotton, or provisions to curtail the production.

All the real money in the civilized world consists in gold and silver coin.

Paper money, to have any steadfast par value, must be redeemable in coin and its redemption must be secured by law, whenever it is presented for redemption.

It is the faith of the people that paper money will be redeemed in coin, on demand, that alone gives it a value equal to coin. When that faith fails or wavers, paper money depreciates.

Faith in the redemption of paper money depends so entirely upon positive law enacted by supreme authority that it is made a crime to issue private promises to circulate as money.

So strong is this principle and so imperative is the necessity for a supreme law that can protect the people as to the redemption of paper money that the States, which can not be coerced into compliance with their civil duties and their contracts with the people by the Federal Government, are prohibited by the Constitution from emitting bills of credit.

The States may charter banks and authorize them to issue paper money, because they have the power to compel its redemption, and to protect the people against false or fraudulent dealing in such issues, by civil and criminal statutes.

But the power of Congress over all money is so entirely supreme, according to the decisions of our courts, that it can and does prohibit the issue and circulation of paper money by private persons without the authority of positive law, and it can tax the paper circulation of State banks to the extent of positive prohibition.

Mr. STEWART. Which it does.

Mr. MORGAN. Which it does.

No State can coin money, and no State can issue paper money to be redeemed by it out of its treasury, in virtue of its sovereign powers. No State can authorize the issue of paper money free from the taxing power of Congress, and, as that power is unlimited, it may as well be said that, as a practical result, no State can authorize the issue of paper money against the consent of Congress.

This proposition is severely disputed, I know, but I am considering the facts of the present situation, without regard to disputed theories or the problems they may suggest or involve.

The power to coin money and to regulate the value thereof, and the power to prescribe what money shall be a legal tender in payment of debts, public and private, and the power to issue Treasury obligations to circulate as money, and the power to charter banks to emit paper money, and to provide for and secure its redemption, are no longer disputed or doubtful powers; the legislative and executive departments of the United States and the Supreme Court, and the same departments in every State, having coincided in the final decree.

The powers of the Government of the United States over the subject of the coinage of money, and the issue and redemption of paper money, are as plenary as the powers of any other government in the world, with only a single restraint on that power, which is, that the power to create money can only be exercised by coining it. The Government may issue paper promises to circulate as money, but the promise can only be redeemed in coin. This is an implied restriction, enforced by the silent law of public opinion, upon every civilized government.

But in our Constitution it is as much a positive restriction on the power of Congress as if it were expressed in terms of positive prohibition.

All the power that Congress has over money is delegated. It was power that the States had exercised from their first days of colonial existence. When the foundations of the Constitution were laid, the States had such supreme power over money that they made a legal tender of various commodities, such as tobacco and the skins of animals.

As the supply of copper and silver and gold increased, they were able to draw away from these crude measurements of values, fixed upon them by a law of necessity, and to adopt gold and silver as the true tokens of value.

In the Articles of Confederation, the first grant of power was made to Federal authority over the subject of money, and that grant related to coinage, as follows:

The United States, in Congress assembled, shall also have the sole and exclusive right and power of regulating the alloy and value of coin struck by their own authority, or by that of the respective States.

The power of regulating the alloy of coin struck by the respective States was afterwards expressed in the Constitution in the power to regulate the value of coin. The necessity of delegating this power to Congress was indispensable to the creation of an equal and harmonious union of States, and no less important to that end was the delegation to Congress of the power to coin money and regulate the value thereof.

It is not the power to regulate the value of paper money but of coined money that was thus delegated to Congress. It was not given to Congress the power to declare that paper or skins or tobacco should constitute money, or legal tender.

Neither was that power reserved to the States. On the contrary, the States were prohibited from coining money, or from emitting bills of credit, or "to make anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts." Thus in constructing the fabric of the new Republic, which was also a new step in the advance to the highest civilization, the tobacco and coonskin and fiat money era was left behind, and this Government fixed its financial foundations where God had decreed that all true tokens of commercial values should be forever found in the precious metals of gold and silver.

In the beginning of the federation of States, however, it was seen that paper credits, of which Treasury notes and bank notes are merely varieties, would be necessary to any sovereign government as a means of using the credit of the people to anticipate any deficiency of the revenues. And so Article XII of the Articles of Confederation was agreed to by the States, as follows:

ARTICLE XII.

All bills of credit emitted * * * by or under authority of Congress, before the assembling of the United States, in pursuance of the present Confederation, shall be issued and considered as a charge against the United States for the payment whereof the said United States and the public faith are hereby solemnly pledged.

When the Constitution supplanted the Articles of Confederation it contained this provision:

ARTICLE VI.

All debts contracted and engagements entered into, before the adoption of this Constitution, shall be as valid against the United States under this Constitution, as under this Confederation.

A bill of credit emitted by proper authority thereby became a constitutional obligation of the United States.

The power to emit bills of credit was a recognized attribute of supreme authority which the Constitution prohibited the States from exercising. It could, therefore, only be exercised by the United States when bills of credit were to be used as money.

Under Article VI of the Constitution, Congress could not have redeemed the Continental money, by simply declaring that it was United States money. Article XII of the Articles of Confederation made these bills of credit "a charge against the United States, for the payment whereof the said United States and the public faith are hereby solemnly pledged." The payment was to be in money. It was a promise of redemption, and being the first contract obligation entered into by the present Government, and being a part of the Constitution and coupled with power to borrow money on the credit of the United States, the recognition of the power of Congress to make promises to be redeemed in money can scarcely be questioned.

Legal-tender coin is the only redeemer of promises issued by the United States to circulate as money. Whatever the United States may do under the war powers or other powers, or in any case of great emergency, to compel the people to accept its paper promises as legal tender in payment of debts, this Government has no power to coin paper money, nor to decree fiat paper money, nor to refuse to pay in coined dollars the amount of dollars stated in any of its promises to pay money. The duty of such redemption may be distinct from its power to prescribe what shall be legal tender, but it is a duty, the refusal of which is a national fraud.

Our true money is coin, which is coined under supreme authority, and has connected with it no promise of redemption.

Our currency is also Treasury notes (greenbacks) redeemable in coin, gold certificates redeemable in gold coin, silver certificates redeemable in silver coin, national bank notes redeemable in greenbacks, and coin certificates redeemable in gold or silver coin, at the option of the Government. All this paper money carries a promise of redemption, on demand, by the United States.

In every case the ultimate redemption is to be made in coin by the express terms of the statute.

Whether these issues and promises makes the United States a bank of issue and redemption, or a Government of issue and redemption, is a matter of little importance either to the Government or the people.

The safe management of these powers of issue and redemption is the proper concern and honest duty of the Government. The safe exercise of the power to issue and redeem paper promises must relate alone to the certainty with which the Government can, at all times, redeem in coin these promises, when that is demanded.

Gold and silver exist, and are produced, about in the ratio of $2 in silver to $1 of gold, as fixed by our laws, the world over.

If the quantity of paper promises we issue, redeemable in coin, is fixed with reference alone to redemption in gold, we must, in honesty and good faith to our own people, make the volume of our paper promises one-third the sum that we could issue if both gold and silver were adopted as the basis of redemption.

As the value, command, dominion, and purchasing power of coin is increased in direct proportion to its decrease in quantity, and as there can not be too much good money for the people who need it in their industries, I can see no objection to a double specie basis for the redemption of our paper promises.

An abundance of good money would trouble those classes and corporations who use money only for the speculations of usury and discount, and to purchase property, productions, and labor when they are below their intrinsic value; but as such speculators are only honey-eating drones in the hives of industry, I am not so much concerned for their welfare.

If gold were at 3 per cent discount, computed with reference to silver at the ratio of 16 for 1, we would think it horribly cruel to the people, especially to those who are in debt very heavily and have mortgaged everything but their souls to their creditors, that we should dismiss silver from the basis for the redemption of our paper promises, and so reduce the currency by two-thirds. Yet, that is exactly what was done to us in 1873.

And, having thus driven silver below par, that cruel act is now advanced as the reason why we should again drive out silver and adopt gold as the only basis for the redemption of our paper promises.

After they have exhausted every power of depression that ingenuity, falsehood, false prophecy, the discipline of party, official patronage, and the terrorism of threatened party expulsion and disgrace could muster to lessen the value of silver and to defame its advocates, they point to their victimized friend and saviour, and say "If thou art king, show us a miracle, rise and unshackle thyself."

But the worst part of this long campaign of persecution lays in the fact, the horrible fact, that money, large money, is needed to buy votes in doubtful States next November. The people can not and will not furnish it, and the capitalists refuse a dollar for campaign purposes unless their money will secure them in the dominion over property, industry, and labor which they now hold in the scarcity of gold as compared with other values.

Their plea is that it is impossible for us to maintain the legal parity between silver and gold at 16 to 1 when the commercial disparity is as 23 to 1.

They believe that it is an impossibility to overcome the damage they have inflicted upon silver bullion and all other products of this country in their campaign of twenty years in favor of the high-purchasing-power, and low debt-paying power of gold, which has cost the labor of this country a sum that is even greater than the national debt. And yet they have seen that in all that campaign of industrial famine they have not been able to shake the faith of our people in the solid value of silver money, so as to make the least discrepancy between silver coin and gold coin.

They have stood in perfect parity since 1873, in spite of the efforts of Congresses, Presidents, banks, foreign powers, great corporations, gold contracts, the metropolitan journals, false prophets of coming evils, political conventions and their spawn—the buyers of votes and corruptors of the ballot. The sublime faith of the people in silver money has prevented a margin between silver dollars and gold dollars, while all the financial powers of the greatest intellects combined with the greed of the most intense avarice have endeavored in vain to rive them asunder.

The same power—the faith of the people in the honor of our Government—that has kept gold and silver coin in parity, has also kept our five descriptions of paper money in perfect parity. The national-bank notes, which are not a legal tender for debts and are not expressly redeemable in coin, are just as good as gold coin because of the faith of our people who think our Government will redeem them in gold coin ultimately.

If the faith of our people should for one moment falter as to our ability to redeem, in coin, the entire mass of our paper currency, our whole financial system would fall into doubt and the result would be universal bankruptcy.

We have to-day $5 of paper money outstanding for $1 of gold in the Treasury. That is a desperate margin, and if the faith of our people depended upon the ability of the Government to redeem our paper money in gold alone, we would instantly find all our paper issues below par.

But the people, and the financiers as well, add to the gold coin the redemption power of nearly $370,000,000 of silver coin in the Treasury, and that of another factor of national credit—the taxing power, through which another heavy and dangerous burden is yoked upon their necks. The $500,000,000 of annual taxation and expenditure is relied upon to maintain the power of the Government in redeeming its paper promises. That vast current of money circulation bears upon its tide, as it rushes through the Treasury, $1,000,000,000 each year of our paper money that is employed alone in paying Government taxes and Government debts.

That currency is kept too busy to loiter in eddies and demand redemption in coin. The gold men find that it makes money scarce for other purposes, and that suits them. They keep an eye upon the small amount of gold that is required to be in the Treasury for redemption purposes, and that suits them. It enables them to hoard gold and to lay by for the increase of its purchasing power and to gather salvage from the wrecks in times of depression and panic.

It is no wonder that those who advocate and practice high taxation and liberal expenditures should wish to increase this current through the Treasury, which dispenses with many demands on the Treasury for the redemption of our paper money. When we find the gold men, and the high protectionists, and the great trusts and combines all gathered around one political center, we are not surprised at their close fellowship. They are all alike, indifferent to the sufferings of the people, and pile upon them all the burdens they can. They tighten the cinch of monopoly and reduce the consumption of food and raiment by the burden-bearers—their helpless slaves. In that course they find increase of riches.

Believing, against all experience and the light of the truth, that they can at last force a margin between gold and silver coin, and thus secure the monopoly of money to themselves, they refuse to coin silver for the redemption of the coin certificates they issue upon it.

They are afraid to let the people have silver coin, for they know that every laboring man will vote to protect the silver dollars in his pocket against depreciation, whatever he might do in reference to a great mass of silver bullion piled up in the Treasury.

The time for the coinage and issue of silver must come, or else the time must come for its slaughter under the hammer of the auctioneer, or a more insidious death in the junkshop of the bullion dealer. Its coinage is refused, and will be refused, for the purpose of divorcing the people from any direct personal interest in its ownership. A voter with five silver dollars in his pocket, the fruit of a week of hard toil, is a dangerous sovereign elector in the path of the man who wishes to degrade silver money and increase the purchasing power of gold.

So, we are not to have any such voters if the gold men can prevent it. Silver will not be coined so that the voters can get hold of it. The Secretary of the Treasury has that matter confided to his discretion, they say, under the act of 1890, and he can be trusted to obey his masters. Silver coinage is at an end, until Congress shall take further action.

The gold men fully understand that, with the aid of the faith of the people in the financial honesty of the Government and the diversion of $1,000,000,000 annually into the channels of State and Federal taxation and expenditure, the small amount of gold in the Treasury is ample as a redemption fund for even twice the amount of paper money we now have in circulation. And therewith they are content.

If war should come under such conditions, all our paper money would again shrink to less than half its face value, and we would again sell bonds to Europeans at 50 cents on the dollar to keep our armies in the field, and a dollar in gold would purchase three times its present value in property. All that shrinkage and loss would fall upon the people and their property.

But no heed is given to these dangers when the profits of money monopoly dazzle the eyes of our greedy gold men. They all admit with one accord that if gold and silver bullion can be kept on a level at the ratio of 16 to 1 they will be content. They know that no fixed legal ratio between gold and silver coin has ever been able to control and keep in parity the commercial value of gold and silver bullion.

This feat was nearly accomplished from 1792 to 1834—forty-two years—when the ratio was 15 to 1, but when we changed it to 16 to 1, silver for export went to 3 per cent premium, contrary to all expectation, and was slaughtered in 1873, because it was such an uncontrollable rival of gold. The commercial value of both gold and silver are fluctuating, and depend solely on the laws of supply and demand.

If we wait for a commercial era when they are exactly in balance, on any ratio fixed by laws of coinage, we will wait until doomsday. Silver and gold in the vaults of the banks, in the coffers of the rich and in government treasuries, are universally treated as redemption funds. They only circulate freely as currency, from hand to hand, amongst "the great mass of the common people," as they are touchingly called by the small body of very uncommon people who despise them. The great and vital question is therefore, can gold and silver coin be safely and usefully employed by our Government as a common redemption fund for our paper promises?

No sane man now expects that our currency will ever be exclusively of coin. The state of our civilization prohibits the thought.

We must therefore seek a safe and sufficient basis of redemption for our paper money. If it is gold alone, the paper currency should not, in all honesty, exceed three times the sum of gold at any time in the Treasury. That would give us to-day a paper currency of $840,422,807, at the ratio of $3 in paper to $1 of gold.

Under the operations of the act of 1890 we add to the specie basis of redemption about $70,000,000 of silver annually. Each dollar's worth of that bullion is at once represented in the currency by a certificate that is a legal tender at its face value and is redeemable in coin of gold or silver, at the option of the Government, on demand.

This is the safest paper money for the Government and for the people that has ever been devised, and is the only true instrument of finance that has ever been conceived of that will always keep gold and silver coin at any ratio of relative value that we may choose to fix by law, in perfect and constant equilibrium. The Government will always, in every case of fair dealing, waive its option in favor of the holder of coin certificates, and pay in coin of gold or silver, according to his wish. Any private person would always protect his credit in the same way.

But if corners and combinations are attempted by capitalists to withdraw from the Treasury either gold or silver coin in order to create a margin between them, or for shipment abroad to meet the speculative demands of a foreign market, then the Government can check the raid by exercising its option to redeem in either gold or silver coin. This is a wise and harmless reservation of control over the export of coin, similar to that employed by the Bank of England in raising or lowering the rates of discount and exchange.

Having the coin certificate to keep coins of silver and gold in perfect and perpetual equilibrium, we only need to turn our attention to the question of the option we should give our own people to have their silver coined on the same terms with gold. The first inquiry that meets us face to face is, why do we discriminate in favor of our gold-miners?

Much has been said here in various debates and much is said throughout the United States in respect to the proposition that the action of Congress we have been seeking to take was for the benefit of what are called the silver barons, for the benefit of the gentlemen who made large investments and wasted more money than they have ever made in silver mines. But why should we disparage the silver-miner and drive him out of business when he can not make more than $1 a day by his labor? His hands can not earn more than $1 a day, and why should we drive him out of business and disparage him and give all the advantage to the gold-miner? Now, there is a plain, practical, undeniable discrimination against one class of people of whom it may be said that they have done more to restore the United States to its present financial integrity and high position—a position than which no nation in this world ever held a higher—than any other class of men who can be named in all of our communities.

It so turns out that since the act of 1873 those men who desired to substitute gold for all other metals, and gold as the only measure of money value, have been able in one way and another, with the assistance of several of the great governments of the world, to depress the commercial value of silver. The depression in the commercial value of silver has been solely their work. More money has been spent, more arguments have been made, more papers printed, more combinations, more lobbies have been organized for the purpose of depressing the commercial value of silver in this country and in other countries than have ever attended any other movement of a political, financial, or legislative character.

Those men who have inherited fortunes, those who by accident have come in possession of large amounts of money and great credit, those who are knitted up with all the ancient capitalized industries of Europe and America, those who have reaped the benefit of laws enacted for the purpose of encouraging the laborer and the ordinary mechanic in his enterprises and in his labor, those who harvest all of these grand results, combine together as naturally as drops of water flow into one body in their efforts to destroy the commercial value of silver and thereby to destroy its monetary value, the purpose simply being that they will get the money power concentrated into a smaller space and into fewer hands and thereby they can rule the world.

The option to have silver bullion coined by our people, or to take in place of it, as upon a purchase, coin certificates, would doubtless result in a very great measure in storing silver coin in the Treasury, and in the corresponding issue of coin certificates to the depositors, for the people prefer paper to coin for use in nearly all of their transactions.

The one financial marvel of this age that has been to my mind heretofore entirely unaccounted for was the fact that when almost all the powers of this Government, and certainly all the powers of the three great leading States of Europe, were concentrated upon the proposition of depressing the value of silver and all of its representatives, when the Secretary of the Treasury, now an honorable member of this body, was empowered by Congress to raise a hundred million dollars in gold and to deposit it in the Treasury of the United States as a redemption fund for greenbacks, that Secretary found no difficulty in purchasing $80,000,000 of gold coin with silver certificates.

Can that be accounted for upon any other principle or hypothesis or conjecture than that the people engaged in the industries of this country and in its commerce preferred to have the paper money to the gold coin? They desired a money that they could send back and forth from hand to hand speedily and with facility. They knew that silver certificates were just as good as gold coin, or else they would not have taken them in the place of gold coin. There is a contribution in favor of the argument I am now making, in the nature of positive testimony, which the Senator from Ohio while Secretary of the Treasury laid before the people of the United States and put upon record, and he has often-times stated it here in the presence of the Senate.

If you give to the people of the United States the option to go to the Treasury and to have their silver bullion coined, they will say to the Secretary of the Treasury: "Give me legal-tender coin certificates in place of this bullion. Take it and lay it away, store it up and keep it for a future emergency."

There is no doubt that large masses of silver coin and gold coin can not be handled and are not handled in the exchanges of commerce. They retire to the vaults of the banking houses and are represented by bills of exchange, by clearing-house certificates, or by the Government issue of paper money based upon their power of redemption, and the people desire to have the paper money.

So we would find it under the optional feature which I desire to add to the act of 1890—the right of the people to have their silver bullion coined and to exchange it for coin certificates at the mint value of the bullion. That right would result in the storing up in the Treasury of the United States of immense quantities of silver that may lay there for years and years to come—I do not care how long it stays there—and it would be the foundation and the backbone of the credit of the United States of America in every emergency and under all circumstances.

Coin certificates are issued only to indicate loans of money or the value of money in bullion, by the people to the Government. We pay for the bullion with the certificates, and then redeem them with the coin struck from the bullion. This is, in effect, a loan of the money to the Government, without interest, with which to redeem the certificates issued for the loan.

The people in the mean time are making the interest on the money by putting it into their industries or loaning it to each other for interest, it answering every possible demand of active money with the convenience of easy exchange from hand to hand or from place to place, which does not attend either gold or silver coin. What we have to do, and all we have to do, is to keep the silver bullion, or coin, with sufficient care to enable us to redeem the coin certificates on demand.

Mr. President, looking back over the situation which I have detailed in a former speech and which I have adverted to in this brief argument, and the principles upon which the whole financial system of the United States is rested, and seeing that this is a paper-money country essentially, and that after the subsidiary coin and the small proportion left for use in the hands of men who handle but a small sum of money, the real use of coin money in the United States is to make a basis or a fund for the redemption of paper money—when you come to consider that, then the question arises, which has been answered by the act of 1890. It is this, can you devise a scheme of paper money, an instrumentality, I will call it, of paper money which will have the effect of being just as good in circulation as a dollar of gold or a dollar of silver, and which will maintain always the parity between the coins of the United States without respect to the value of the bullion contained in them, by the option left to the Government of the United States to redeem the certificates in gold or in silver coin? The coin certificate answers these questions in the affirmative.

If you will add but one single feature to that law, the right of the citizen of the United States, which is a clear constitutional right, to go to the Treasury of the United States and have his bullion of silver minted, then you will have completed and secured now and forever the best financial system that any people in this world have ever yet enjoyed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Paddock in the chair). Will the Senator from Alabama suspend? It becomes the duty of the Chair, the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, to lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

Mr. MORGAN. I have but a very few words to add.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope the Senator from Alabama will go on.

Mr. MORGAN. I shall take but a few moments.

Mr. STEWART. I ask that the unfinished business be informally laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be informally laid aside if there be no objection. The Senator from Alabama will proceed.

Mr. MORGAN. I could stop here, perhaps, with decided advantage to myself and to the Senate, but I wish to add one or two very brief reflections.

We shall have, I repeat, when we have made it optional with the citizen of the United States to have his silver bullion coined, the best financial system we can secure in times of peace and in times of trial, famine, distress, or war that any people in this world have ever had. I will again recur to an idea which I have not been able to dismiss from my mind recently, for we have had some bodings of trouble with great powers, with dangerous powers. I have not been able to dismiss from my contemplation what the present situation of this country would be in the event of a war with a great power, when the very first step we should have to take would be to go to a country that buys silver and gold from us to borrow the money to carry on a war with that or a neighboring country. Of course we could not borrow it from the country we were at war with.

Our resources of credit would be very much cramped in the event of a struggle with Great Britain, and we should then be forced to look to our own internal resources for the strength to raise, equip, maintain, and transport armies, and to furnish them with munitions of war, with hospitals, and the like. Then we would turn our attention to this matter, which to my mind is just as palpable as if we were in the midst of a war, of providing out of our own resources for conducting it, and we should then consider this very important point. Our mines furnish to us $100,000,000 of metal a year, one-third gold. The redeeming factor adopted by the banks throughout Christendom for all time since banks were first ordained, is one-third of coin, or 3 to 1.

We have $100,000,000 a year, one-third gold, upon which you can issue with perfect safety $3 for $1. So you have $300,000,000 a year, if you choose to use it in that way—$300,000,000 that can be represented among our own people with coin certificates which they will take gladly and use in all of their business and prosper upon it, and have perfect security. In ten years it is $3,000,000,000, and it is such a fund as enables us not merely to bring every resource and power of this great domain that we occupy here immediately into action for military defense or other purposes, but it will draw to it a commercial and financial power the like of which has not been enjoyed by any other government in this world.

Great Britain during five hundred or eight hundred years of her noble and magnificent history, through her statesmanship, by adopting always the best expedient for the relief and advantage of her people, has been able to accumulate a resource of money and credit that has hitherto been entirely unparalleled. She has done it by scouring the seas, taking the islands, going wherever nature invited the hand of agriculture or of any other industrial pursuit, there gathering the rich harvests of the world, carrying them to Liverpool and London, and distributing them again out among the nations of the earth. In this way Great Britain has grown enormously rich through many years, and will still remain enormously rich.

Providence, however, without any exertion on our part except to employ our labor in our own mines and within our own territory, places within our reach $100,000,000 a year, of specie, one-third gold, which is in the right proportion, and which we may with absolute safety, as has been demonstrated by the experience of mankind through five hundred years, use as a basis of redemption for our paper issues, thereby making it, as I have observed, $300,000,000 a year, thrown into our hands as an assisting fund for the wonderful, marvelous work we are engaged in here, of conducting the best, noblest, truest, the most gentle, the most perfect, and yet the strongest Government that mankind has yet conceived of.

Are we to pass by such an opportunity as this and still hold ourselves in an attitude of humiliating dependence upon Great Britain, or any foreign country, merely because through her thrift and industry and skill she has been able to pile up credit and money; or shall we grasp the outstretched hand of Providence and thankfully proceed with that great encouragement which the Divine Maker of man has extended to us to try to achieve for this country that which it is entitled to in every sense and under every consideration—the supremacy of the civilized world?

CIRCUIT COURTS OF APPEALS.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the first case on the Calendar be stated.

Mr. HAWLEY. The regular order must first be laid before the Senate.

Mr. MANDERSON. The unfinished business, which is the court bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. The unfinished business can be temporarily laid aside. That is always understood.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2729) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals, and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States and for other purposes."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside and the Calendar will be proceeded with under the order of the Senate.

Mr. HAWLEY. Before we proceed with that, there are many Senators absent who are much interested in the Calendar, and I suggest a call of the Senate. Of course they ought to have been here listening to the Senator from Alabama, as I was. Let us call them in now for what they are interested in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen.	Dolph.	Manderson.	Sherman.
Bate.	Pubols.	Mitchell.	Shoup.
Berry.	Faulkner.	Morgan.	Stewart.
Blackburn.	Frye.	Paddock.	Teller.
Blodgett.	George.	Palmer.	Turpie.
Call.	Gibson, Md.	Pasco.	Vest.
Cameron.	Gray.	Peffer.	Voorhees.
Chandler.	Hawley.	Platt.	Walthall.
Cockrell.	Hoar.	Power.	Warren.
Coke.	Jones, Nev.	Pugh.	Wilson.
Colquitt.	Kyle.	Quay.
Davis.	McMillan.	Sanders.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present, and the Senate will proceed with the Calendar.

L. A. DAVIS.

Mr. COCKRELL. The first case on the Calendar is Senate bill 735, that was passed over. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] I understand does not insist upon his amendment.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 735) for the relief of L. A. Davis.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that the Senator from Massachusetts does not insist upon any amendment this morning. I suggest a further amendment. I supposed it was done yesterday. I move, in line 16, after the word "limitations," to strike out the words "or other legal defense;" so as to read:

And no statute of limitations shall be available in such case.

There will be no objection to that.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is right. The Senator from Massachusetts I understand does not insist on his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT INSPECTOR OF PLUMBING.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1492) to authorize the appointment of an inspector of plumbing in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The amendments of the House of Representatives were in section 2, line 5, after the word "amount," to insert "not exceeding the sum of $2,000;" and after "United States" to insert "one-half to the credit of the United States and one-half;" to strike out all of section 4 down to and including the word "duty," in line 6, and insert "that the inspector of plumbing and his assistant shall be," and in the same section, line 5, after the word "direction," to insert "on the application of the owner or occupant, or on the complaint of any reputable citizen."

Mr. McMILLAN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The amendments were concurred in.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SEATTLE, WASH.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next bill on the Calendar will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1907) to amend section 3 of the act approved June 27, 1890, granting pensions to soldiers and sailors.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will state in regard to Senate bill 618, providing for the erection of a public building at the city of Seattle, in the State of Washington, that it stands at the head of the Calendar. On the reading of that bill yesterday evening the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] suggested the absence of the two Senators from Washington and moved an adjournment. I did not understand the Senator from Indiana to object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. TURPIE. No, sir.

Mr. COCKRELL. It comes up in its order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be taken up.

The bill (S. 618) providing for the erection of a public building at the city of Seattle, in the State of Washington, was announced as regularly in order on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill was partially read yesterday. The bill should be read in full. If there is no objection the Chief Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish to state, in the absence of my colleague [Mr. SQUIRE], who has that bill specially in charge, that I desire it to be passed over for the present without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

PENSIONS TO WIDOWS AND MINOR CHILDREN.

The bill (S. 1907) to amend section 3 of the act approved June 27, 1890, granting pensions to soldiers and sailors, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 14, after the word "absent," to insert "by due authority;" in line 15, after the words "from the," to strike out "technical;" and in the same line, after the word "duty," to strike out "(excepting cases of death occurring during desertion from the service);" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act of June 27, 1890, is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That if any officer or enlisted man who served ninety days or more in the Army or Navy of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, and who was honorably discharged, has died, or shall hereafter die, leaving a widow without other means of support than her daily labor, or minor children under the age of 16 years, or if any officer or enlisted man, who served ninety days or more in the Army or Navy of the United States, died in the service, whether in the line of active duty, or in hospital, or on individual furlough, or whilst otherwise absent by due authority from the line of duty, and shall have left such widow, or such minor children under 16 years of age, in either case aforesaid such widow shall, upon due proof of her husband's death, without proving his death to be the result of his army service, be placed on the pension roll from the date of the application therefor, under this act, at the rate of $8 per month during her widowhood, and shall also be paid $2 per month for each child of such officer or enlisted man under 16 years of age; and in case of the death or remarriage of the widow, leaving a child or children of such officer or enlisted man under the age of 16 years, such pension shall be paid such child or children until the age of 16: Provided, That in case such officer or enlisted man shall leave a child who is insane, idiotic, or otherwise permanently helpless, such child shall be pensionable under this act without regard to his or her age and whether pensioned heretofore as a minor under any former act; and the pension thus granted to such child shall continue during life, or during the period of such disability, from and after the date of application therefor, after the passage of this act: And provided further, That said widow shall have married said soldier prior to the passage of this act."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE A. ORR.

The bill (S. 2097) for the relief of George A. Orr was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury, through the accounting officers, to audit and pay the claim of George A. Orr, as acting assistant provost-marshal at Mount Vernon, Mo., from May 28, 1863, to January 30, 1864, at the rate of $100 per month for his services, and such sum for legitimate expenses during that period as may be shown and found to have been actually expended by him in the lawful discharge of his duties and necessary for the public service.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ILLWACO RAILWAY AND NAVIGATION COMPANY.

The bill (S. 213) granting a right of way across the Scarborough Hill military reservation to the Ilwaco Railway and Navigation Company was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

The amendments were, in line 4, after the word "Company," to insert "a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Washington;" in line 9, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "forty" and insert "thirty;" and in line 10, after the word "thereof," to strike out "with the necessary ground for sidetracks and the necessary buildings;" so as to read:

That it may, and shall be, lawful for the Ilwaco Railway and Navigation Company, a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Washington, to construct its road across a certain military reservation in the State of Washington, commonly known as Scarborough Hill, under the direction of the Secretary of War; and for this purpose a right of way therefor, not exceeding 30 feet in width on each side of the center of the track thereof, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, is hereby granted to said company.

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendment was, to add to the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That the actual construction of a roadbed over the right of way herein granted shall not be commenced until after the Secretary of War shall have approved its location; and for this purpose said Ilwaco Railway and Navigation Company shall furnish him with a map showing the boundaries of this reservation, the center line of the proposed right of way, together with the topographical features of the ground for a distance of 200 feet on either side thereof: Provided further, That said corporation, its assigns, or successors, shall build and maintain at its own expense for the free use of the Government such railroad-depot buildings and side tracks on said reservation as the exigencies of the Government service may require and the Secretary of War may direct: Provided further, That if, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, the exigencies of the Government service at any time so require, the right of way herein granted may be changed or relocated at the expense of said corporation, its assigns, or successors: And provided further, That if a railroad be not built and regularly operated over the right of way herein granted within two years from the date of the passage of this act the act shall become null and void.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I see that I omitted to put in as an amendment another section. I move to add:

SEC. —. Congress reserves the right at any time to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

Mr. ALLEN. I will inquire of the Senator from Missouri if that is the usual provision?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is always put in these bills.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF M. C. MORDECAI.

The bill (S. 1423) for the relief of Jacob I. Cohen and J. Randolph Mordecai, administrators of M. C. Mordecai, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Jacob I. Cohen and J. Randolph Mordecai, administrators of M. C. Mordecai $6,400, in full compensation for the postages on mails transported by him in the steamer Isabel, or any other steamer, from Charleston, S. C., to Havana, Cuba, by way of Savannah, Ga., and Key West, Fla., from the 1st of October, 1859, to the 20th of July, 1860.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARMY PROMOTIONS.

The bill (S. 882) to repeal the proviso in section 1, of the act of October 1, 1890, providing for the examination of certain officers of the Army and to regulate promotions therein, and to extend lineal promotion to first lieutenants, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask that Order of Business 380, House bill 328, to establish lineal promotion throughout the several lines of artillery, cavalry, and infantry of the Army, be taken up instead of this bill, as it is identical, and will save action on the Senate bill.

Mr. DOLPH. Let the Senate bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Being objected to, the bill will go over. Does the Senator from Oregon object to the House bill being substituted for the Senate bill?

Mr. DOLPH. I do not object to that; I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be understood then that the House bill is substituted for the Senate bill, and the Senate bill will be indefinitely postponed. The bill, being objected to, goes over without prejudice.

Mr. DOLPH. Let the bill go over, retaining its place. I do not care to remove the bill from the Calendar under Rule VIII. Let it go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the House bill which has been substituted for the Senate bill will take the place on the Calendar of the Senate bill; the Senate bill will be indefinitely postponed, and the House bill will be passed over without prejudice.

WILLIAM SMITH AND OTHERS.

The bill (S. 1678) for the relief of William Smith and others was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to credit Lieut. Col. William Smith, deputy paymaster-general, United States Army, in the settlement of his public accounts, with the sum of $3,015.15; and to credit Maj. William F. Tucker, paymaster, United States Army, in the settlement of his public accounts, with the sum of $5,461.61; and to credit Assistant Surg. John O. Skinner, United States Army, in the settlement of his public accounts, with the sum of $199.14; and to remove the charge of $2,185.92 standing against Maj. John S. Billings, surgeon, United States Army; and to remove the charge of $1,029.60 standing against George M. Wheeler, captain on the retired list of the Army; and to remove the charge of $634.42 standing against Lieut. P. Henry Ray, Eighth Regiment of Infantry, United States Army; these amounts having been paid out and received in accordance with the orders of the Secretary of War or the provisions of the regulations for the government of the Army of the United States prescribed by the President.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAPOLÉON J. T. DANA.

The bill (S. 1496) for the relief of Gen. Napoleon J. T. Dana was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to authorize the President to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint Gen. Napoleon J. T. Dana, late assistant quartermaster of the United States Army, to the position of assistant quartermaster with the rank of captain of cavalry, and to place him on the retired list of the Army with that rank and pay, the retired list being thereby increased in number to that extent.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to hear the report read; enough of it at least to show the character of the case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. DAVIS February 11, 1892, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1493) for the relief of Gen. Napoleon J. T. Dana, respectfully report:

Napoleon J. T. Dana graduated from the Military Academy in 1842; was thereupon appointed second lieutenant in the Seventh Infantry, and continued in the service until 1855, when he resigned. During this period he was brevetted as captain for gallant and meritorious conduct in the battle of Cerro Gordo, in which battle he was severely wounded.

Immediately after his resignation he entered into business in St. Paul as a banker, and prosecuted that business with great success. Upon the breaking out of the rebellion he felt it his duty to rejoin the service, and was appointed colonel of the First Minnesota Infantry October 2, 1861. He was appointed brigadier-general February 3, 1862, and major-general November 19, 1862. As commander of regiment, brigade, and division, at various times, he served in the Army of the Potomac, and was severely wounded in the battle of Antietam. He afterwards returned to duty. As a division commander he commanded the troops on the coast of Texas up to March, 1864. He afterwards commanded the district of Vicksburg in 1864. He was afterwards put in command of the Sixteenth Army Corps, and commanded the Department of the Mississippi to May 12, 1865. On May 27, 1865, he tendered his resignation, "in view of the immediate close of the war, and with the opinion that my services will not be now longer required."

After his resignation Gen. Dana engaged in business, but the results were not fortunate. He is now 70 years old, incapable of work, and has no estate. He had two sons, one of whom died of consumption about ten years ago. The other son graduated in medicine, but just as he was getting into successful practice in New York City was attacked with consumption and was compelled to go to Florida, and although his health has been somewhat improved, he can not be of any assistance in supporting his father.

The military career of Gen. Dana is more particularly detailed in the annexed letter from the Adjutant-General.

In view of the long and meritorious services of this officer, the committee recommend the passage of the bill.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE.

Washington, January 21, 1892.

Statement of the military service of Napoleon J. T. Dana, of the United States Army, compiled from the records of this office.

He was a cadet at the United States Military Academy July 1, 1838, to July 1, 1842, when he was graduated and promoted in the Army to second lieutenant, Seventh Infantry, July 1, 1842; first lieutenant, February 16, 1847; captain, assistant quartermaster, March 3, 1848. Brevet captain, April 18, 1847, "for gallant and meritorious conduct in the battle of Cerro Gordo, Mexico."

He joined his regiment October 15, 1842, and served with it at Fort Pike, La., and Pass Christian, Miss., to August 18, 1845; in the military occupation of Texas, and in the war with Mexico until wounded at the battle of Cerro Gordo, Mexico, April 18, 1847; absent sick on account of wounds and on recruiting service to March, 1848; on duty as quartermaster at Boston, Mass., to August 26, 1848; at Fort Snelling, Minn., to August, 1849; at Fort Ripley, Minn., to May, 1850; at St. Louis, Mo., to November, 1850; at Fort Ripley, Minn., to December, 1851; at Washington, D. C., settling his accounts and on temporary duty in Quartermaster-General's Office, to September, 1852; on duty, at Fort Snelling, Minn., to May, 1853, and at Fort Ridgely, Minn., until he resigned March 1, 1855.

He reentered the service as colonel, First Minnesota Infantry, October 2, 1861. Appointed brigadier-general volunteers, February 3, 1862, major-general volunteers, November 29, 1862.

He commanded his regiment in the Army of the Potomac, to February 26, 1862; commanded brigade in Second Corps, to July 10, 1862; on sick leave to September, 1862; commanding Third Brigade, Second Division, Second Corps, to September 17, 1862, when severely wounded at the battle of Antietam, Md.; absent on account of wounds to November 27, 1862. Member of Military Commission, etc., to May, 1863; commanding post of Philadelphia, Pa., June 16 to August 27, 1863; Second Division, Thirteenth Corps, September 28 to October 28, 1863; Thirteenth Corps to January 9, 1864; commanding troops on coast of Texas, to March 11, 1864; First Division, Thirteenth Corps, to April 1, 1864; awaiting orders to April 23, 1864; on inspection duty, under orders of the Secretary of War, to August 7, 1864; commanding district of Vicksburg to October 15, 1864; Sixteenth Army Corps, to December 8, 1864; and Department of Mississippi, to May 12, 1865. Awaiting orders until he resigned, May 27, 1865.

He tendered his resignation "in view of the immediate close of the war, and with the opinion that my [his] services will not now be longer required."

J. C. KELTON, Adjutant-General.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM E. WOODBRIDGE.

The bill (S. 131) referring to the Court of Claims the claim of William E. Woodbridge for compensation for the use by the United States of his invention relating to projectiles, for which letters patent were ordered to issue to him March 25, 1852, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move in line 4, before the word "invention," to insert the word "alleged," as that is the very question that is to be inquired into. It does not change the materiality of the bill at all.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. SARAH ELIZABETH HOLROYD.

The bill (S. 133) for the relief of Mrs. Sarah Elizabeth Holroyd, widow and administratrix of the estate of John Holroyd, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Mrs. Sarah Elizabeth Holroyd, widow and administratrix of the estate of John Holroyd, deceased, $1,000, in full consideration for the entire past and future use by the Government of the patented hook and eye for tackle blocks of John Holroyd.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MICHAEL P. SMALL.

The bill (S. 258) for the relief of Lieut. Col. Michael P. Small, United States Army, was announced as next in order.

Mr. MANDERSON. I think within a very short time we shall probably have a House bill identical with that, and I ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice, if there be no objection.

WILLIAM H. ATKINS.

The bill (S. 1501) for the relief of William H. Atkins, formerly commissary sergeant United States Army, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to William H. Atkins, of St. Augustine, Fla., $145, the amount due him for travel pay and allowances from the place of his discharge to the place of his enlistment, as an honorably discharged soldier from the United States Army, under section 1290, Revised Statutes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARMY REORGANIZATION.

The bill (S. 2170) to reorganize the artillery and infantry of the Army, and to increase its efficiency, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill provides that the artillery force of the Army now authorized by law shall be reorganized into seven regiments of not more than twelve batteries each. Each regiment of artillery shall consist of one colonel, one lieutenant-colonel, three majors, twelve captains, eleven first lieutenants, ten second lieutenants, and the enlisted men authorized by law, which may be organized into batteries and battalions composed of such number of officers and men as the President may direct. But the regiments shall be officered by the promotion and transfer of the officers now in the artillery according to their seniority, and any vacancies thereafter remaining in the grade of second lieutenant shall be filled in the manner now authorized by law. No appointments to the grade of first lieutenant shall be made until the first lieutenants now in service who become supernumerary by the organization herein provided shall have been absorbed. All promotions shall be subject to the examination prescribed by law. The President, in his discretion, may authorize the enlistment of colored men for service in any one or more of these regiments.

It further provides, That each regiment of infantry shall consist of one colonel, one lieutenant-colonel, two majors, twelve captains, ten first lieutenants, eight second lieutenants, and the enlisted men authorized by law, and may be organized into companies and battalions, composed of such number of officers and men as the President may direct. Original vacancies hereby created shall be filled by promotion according to seniority in the infantry arm, subject to the examination required by law.

The duties of regimental adjutants and quartermasters are to be performed by lieutenants detailed to such duty, without extra pay.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROCK CREEK RAILROAD COMPANY.

The bill (H. R. 6286) to amend the charter of the Rock Creek Railroad Company was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUILDING STONE ON PUBLIC LANDS.

The bill (S. 1273) to authorize the entry of lands chiefly valuable for building stone under the placer-mining laws was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. DOLPH. I see that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] is present, who reported that bill. I should like to ask him if he considered in that connection the act, I think, of 1878, known as the timber and stone act, by which a quarter section of any lands chiefly valuable for stone may be purchased by any one person at $2.50 an acre, and if that is not ample provision for the purchase of lands containing building stone, and if this proposed act would not be in conflict with it.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] introduced the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada will suspend for a moment. The bill had better be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That any person authorized to enter lands under the mining laws of the United States may enter lands that are chiefly valuable for building stone under the provisions of the law in relation to placer mineral claims: Provided, That lands reserved for the benefit of the public schools or donated to any State shall not be subject to entry under this act.

Mr. STEWART. I do not see the Senator from South Dakota in his seat. He introduced the bill. I see no objection to allowing a small quantity to be purchased at $2.50 an acre. He thought it would be more convenient for parties desiring stone to enter it in small quantities than under the former law. It does not interfere with the other act. It is rather an amplification of the former law, as he has stated.

Mr. DOLPH. I wish the Senator would let the bill be passed over temporarily and examine the other act.

Mr. STEWART. I will do so.

Mr. DOLPH. The timber and stone act is confined to the Pacific coast States, and I think all that is necessary or that is desired in other States would be to extend the provisions of the act to other States. I do not think a person is required to take 160 acres of stone land under that act; I think he may purchase at least a subdivision; but I will look it up and see the Senator.

Mr. STEWART. Let the bill be passed over until the Senator from South Dakota is here. He will explain more particularly what he desires to have accomplished by it.

PARDONS BY DISTRICT COMMISSIONERS.

The bill (S. 1886) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to grant pardons and respites in certain cases was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may grant pardons and respites for offenses against the late corporation of Washington, the ordinances of Georgetown, and the levy court, the laws enacted by the Legislative Assembly, and the police and building regulations of the District.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT LEXINGTON, VA.

The bill (S. 1544) for the erection of a public building at the town of Lexington, Va., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, with amendments, in line 12, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five;" in line 21, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five;" and in the same line, after the word "building," to insert "which sum is hereby appropriated;" so as to read:

The site and building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed in cost the sum of $25,000; nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site nor plan for said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $25,000 for site and building, which sum is hereby appropriated.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SARAH K. McLEAN.

The bill (S. 1026) for the relief of Sarah K. McLean, widow of the late Lieut. Col. Nathaniel H. McLean, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the proper accounting officers to settle and adjust to Sarah K. McLean, widow of the late Lieut. Col. Nathaniel H. McLean, all back pay and emoluments that would have been due and payable to Nathaniel H. McLean as a major from July 23, 1864, to the date of his reinstatement, March 3, 1875.

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill is on the Calendar upon a majority report from the Committee on Military Affairs. At the last Congress there was both a majority and a minority report made. In the present Congress the report of the majority simply refers to the former report. The objection the minority of the committee had, of which minority I was one, was that this officer voluntarily resigned in 1864, and by special act of Congress in 1875 was authorized to be appointed back to the Army. He was out of the service during the interval, performed no service for the Government directly or indirectly, and devoted his whole time and attention to his own private affairs. The bill now proposes to pay his widow his salary between 1864 and 1875, and we do not think there is any equity, justice, or right in it. I simply want to place the minority of the committee upon the record as opposing the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. The bill was reported favorably in the Fiftieth and Fifty-first Congresses. It passed the Senate in the last Congress. The legal elements of the bill and the questions of fact are quite complicated, although so far as the legal aspects are concerned they are to my mind free from doubt.

Maj. McLean at an early period of the war was relieved of duty in the East and sent to Fort Vancouver, in Oregon, by a proceeding which in all of its elements was of the most tyrannical character. He resigned. So much feeling existed on the subject that in the Forty-third Congress, after full deliberation and an exhaustive report, an act was passed authorizing the President either to appoint Maj. McLean to the first vacancy in the office of the Adjutant-General, or in his discretion to reinstate him. It will be perceived that the act thus recommended and passed gave the President an alternative course of action, either to appoint this officer and put him anew into the office or, with a view of rectifying the injustice which had been done him, to reinstate him and appoint him to the grade to which he would have attained had not the unjust proceeding toward him been perpetrated. President Grant, instead of appointing this officer and putting him thus as it were anew into the Army, proceeded to reinstate him.

Without going at length into the legal considerations which have brought the majority of the committee to the conclusion at which they have arrived, it will suffice for present purposes to say that it is the opinion of a majority of the committee that the act of reinstatement operated in legal contemplation as a complete cancellation of what had been done to him and restored matters to the exact status that they would have occupied had he not received the treatment he did. We did not proceed without judicial authority upon this subject. I shall not go into it at length here. It is in the report referred to. The same state of facts was exhaustively considered in the case of Maj. Collins, where the precise phraseology was employed as to reinstatement, and he recovered his pay under a judgment of the Court of Claims and it was allowed by Congress. The time when he was out of the service was about the same as that of Maj. McLean.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ECLECTIC MEDICAL SOCIETY OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 741) to incorporate the Eclectic Medical Society of the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That T. A. Bland, August P. Lighthill, W. S. Bever, Magnus L. Juhlén, M. Cora Bland, J. A. Rowland, and Marie Taylor, and their associates and successors, physicians, be, and they hereby are, made a corporation by the name of the Eclectic Medical Society of the District of Columbia, with all the powers and privileges, and subject to all the duties, liabilities, and restrictions set forth in this act.

Sec. 2. That the said corporation may hold real and personal estate to the amount of $20,000.

Sec. 3. That the said Eclectic Medical Society is hereby empowered, from time to time, to make such by-laws, rules, and regulations as they may find necessary, and do and perform such other things as may be requisite for carrying this act into effect and which may not be repugnant to the Constitution and laws of the United States.

Sec. 4. That the said Eclectic Medical Society of the District of Columbia is hereby endowed with all the rights, privileges, and immunities that appertain to other medical societies of the District of Columbia.

Sec. 5. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNCOMPAGRE RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 574) to change the boundaries of the Uncompagre Reservation was announced as next in order.

Mr. KYLE. I will ask that that bill may be passed over without prejudice, as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] wishes to make some remarks upon it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

EXTENSION OF SUPREME COURT JURISDICTION.

The bill (S. 1548) to extend the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States, as the same is defined in section 709 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to include the judgments and decrees of the highest courts of the Cherokee, Creek, Seminole, Choctaw, and Chickasaw tribes of Indians, respectively, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

M. B. RYAN.

The bill (S. 1287) for the relief of M. B. Ryan, administrator de bonis non, son and only heir at law of John S. Ryan, deceased, late of Charleston, S. C., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 5, after the word "limitations," to strike out "or other legal impediment hitherto existing," and in line 6, after the word "claim," to insert "with the same effect as the said John S. Ryan might have done while living if prosecuted in time;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That M. B. Ryan, administrator de bonis non of John S. Ryan, deceased, a citizen of the State of South Carolina, may, notwithstanding the bar of the statute of limitations, prosecute his claim, with the same effect as the said John S. Ryan might have done while living if prosecuted in time, to the net proceeds of the sale of 108 bales of cotton alleged to have been captured by the United States military authorities at Charleston, S. C., in March, 1865, before the Court of Claims, under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the collection of abandoned or captured property and the prevention of frauds in the insurrectionary districts of the United States," approved March 12, 1863.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES M. WILLBUR.

The bill (S. 466) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust and settle the account of James M. Willbur with the United States, and to pay said Willbur such sum of money as he may be justly and equitably entitled to, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments. The first amendment was, in line 9, after the word "contract," to strike out "therefor with Bartlett, Robbins, and Company" and to insert "with the United States according to samples submitted and accepted;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to make settlement with James M. Willbur for excess in weight of material and excess in the superficial measurement of the illuminated tiling, frames, and supports thereof placed by said Willbur in, on, and around the New York city post-office and court-house building beyond what he was required to furnish by his contract with the United States according to samples submitted and accepted, either upon the report of such excessive weight and superficial measurement furnished by the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury and Senate committee by the experts Solomon J. Fague and Archibald Given, of date April 21, 1886, to the Senate committee and on file with the Senate Committee on Claims.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 26, after the word "contract," to strike out "therefor with Bartlett, Robbins & Company" and insert "as aforesaid;" so as to read:

But if not satisfied with the report of such experts the Secretary of the Treasury shall, within thirty days from the passage of this act, appoint three competent persons, who shall be duly sworn, to ascertain and report the sum, if any, which in justice and equity ought to be paid James M. Willbur for excess in weight of material and excess in the superficial measurement of illuminated tiling, frames, and supports thereof, placed by said Willbur in and around the New York city post-office and court-house building, beyond what he was required to furnish by his contract as aforesaid, such sum to be determined by the prices fixed in said contract, so far as they are applicable. The said persons so appointed shall also ascertain and report any increased or extra expense or cost incurred by said Willbur resulting from any changes and additions made in and to the weight, measurement, and character of said tiling, or in the quantity thereof, from that which was specified in said contract.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

The bill (S. 1276) providing for the adjustment and payment of the accounts of laborers and mechanics arising under the eight-hour law was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALTHALL. The Senator who introduced that bill and the Senator who reported it both seem to be absent. I suggest that it go over without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over, retaining its place.

ARMY PROMOTIONS.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask that Order of Business 380, which was just passed over, be substituted for Order of Business 234, and be now taken up. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] withdraws his objection.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 328) to establish lineal promotion throughout the several lines of artillery, cavalry, and infantry of the Army was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, to strike out section 1, as follows:

That from and after the passage of this act all promotions in the several lines of artillery, cavalry, and infantry of the Army up to the grade of colonel shall be by seniority in the next lower grade according to original entry into the regular service as a commissioned officer: Provided, That no officer who has lost rank by the operations of a sentence of a court-martial or of an examining board shall by virtue of this act regain any rank so lost: And provided further, That any officer who has been reinstated in the Army by act of Congress with original status of rank shall, for the purposes of this act only, be deemed to have been continuously in the service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out, on page 2, the words "Section 2."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 5, after the word "repealed," to strike out "but the promotion hereinbefore provided for shall be subject to the examinations required in said act;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of section 1 of an act dated October 1, 1890, entitled "An act to provide for the examination of certain officers of the Army, and to regulate promotions therein," as is contained in the proviso of the said section is hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I objected to the consideration of this bill when it was reached in its order because I desired to examine it. I have received a very earnest protest from an officer in the Army who has been a lieutenant for twenty-five years and who thinks that under existing laws he has been discriminated against and promotions of those who were juniors to him in the service have taken place. He says that the bill as it now reads, if it becomes a law, will simply prevent anything being done to make amends for the wrong which has been done to him and which has been done to other officers under similar circumstances.

I am not prepared to discuss the bill and I do not like to prevent its consideration simply by interposing an objection, but I desire to voice his protest against it now.

Mr. PROCTOR. I do not doubt that the Senator's correspondence may have suffered in rank by the old system of promotion. This bill abolishes that. It is to prevent further repetitions of that wrong.

The committee considered very carefully whether any readjustment could be made of the evils which had been suffered in the past, and were unanimously of the opinion that it was impracticable. The Major-General commanding, the Adjutant-General, and the War Department have considered this matter. The proviso in the present law, which is repealed by this act, has been the cause of a good deal of trouble. I think there can be no question but that the general good of the Army calls for this act, which does not prevent any proper readjustment.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator means does not prevent it by legislation, but prevents any adjustment simply by the appointing power. It regulates the appointments hereafter, so that this injustice can not be corrected by the appointing power, but it would require legislation to adjust these differences.

Mr. PROCTOR. If there is no law passed, there can be no readjustment. The officer does not stand any worse if this bill passes than he would without it. It merely fails to provide any readjustment, and however much the committee and others would wish to see some equitable method adopted, after very full consideration they failed to discover any method of readjustment without doing very great injustice in many cases while it might in a very few afford relief.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has the bill been passed?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate, and the question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JEROME E. MORSE.

The bill (S. 822) for the relief of Lieut. Jerome E. Morse, of the United States Navy, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, in line 9, after the words "of the," to strike out "date of his retirement, by the naval board of the United States Navy" and insert "passage of this act;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby authorized and empowered to transfer Lieut. Jerome E. Morse, of the retired list of the United States Navy, from the half-pay list to the 75 per cent pay list of retired officers, under section 1588 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and the said transfer shall take effect as of the passage of this act; and the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized to allow to Jerome E. Morse an amount which, with the payments heretofore made to him, will be equal to 75 per cent of the sea pay of the grade held by him at the date of his retirement, said amount to be paid out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF MARIAN F. HAYNIE.

The bill (S. 578) for the relief of Marian F. Haynie was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments, in line 4, after the words "pay to," to insert "the legal representatives of," and in line 5, after the words "widow of," to strike out "the said;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the legal representatives of Marian F. Haynie, widow of H. H. Haynie, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $300, which shall be in full for all sums due said H. H. Haynie for said services and for all claims for extra pay under the act of Congress approved March 3, 1865, and under the rulings of the Secretary of the Navy: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy finds that the statements above made are true and correct.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would suggest that the proviso, beginning in line 11, on page 2, should be stricken out.

Mr. PERKINS. I make that motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proviso will be reported.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy finds that the statements above made are true and correct.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Marian F. Haynie."

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the preamble be stricken out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The preamble will be stricken out, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF DOUGLAS DALE.

The bill (S. 10) for the relief of the legal representatives of Douglas Dale, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that go over under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

SAMUEL TATE.

The bill (S. 49) for the relief of Samuel Tate was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Samuel Tate $1,000, in full satisfaction for the rent of his house in what is known as the Gayoso Block, in the city of Memphis, Tenn., for three months and thirteen days, from May 30, 1865, to September 30, 1865, at the rate of $333.33 per month, the contract price agreed upon on the 30th of September, 1865.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS W. WICKHAM.

The bill (S. 2251) for the relief of Francis W. Wickham was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of War to remove from the records on file in his office the charges of desertion appearing thereon against Francis W. Wickham, under the name of Frank W. Wickham and Frank Wickham, private of Company D, Ninth Regiment Michigan Cavalry Volunteers, and substitute therefor, "absented himself without leave and was enrolled on November 26, 1863, and mustered into the service as trumpeter or bugler on December 1, 1863, in Company A, First Regiment Michigan Cavalry Volunteers, under the name of Franklin Waggle or Frank Waggill, transferred to Company E of same regiment, and was honorably discharged from the service on March 10, 1863," as a bugler.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGREEMENT WITH TONKAWA INDIANS.

The bill (S. 1796) to ratify an agreement with the Tonkawa tribe of Indians in Oklahoma Territory, and to make an appropriation to carry the same into effect, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no necessity for immediate action upon that bill. Let it be passed over without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. DAWES. Why should the bill be passed over?

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there any necessity for immediate action on this bill?

Mr. DAWES. I do not know that there is any immediate necessity, but I should like to have the bill disposed of as soon as I can.

Mr. COCKRELL. It may lead to discussion, and it is such a long bill that I thought we had better pass it by and call it up at some other time.

Mr. DAWES. The difficulty is in getting action under those circumstances.

Mr. COCKRELL. It will stand at the head of the Calendar, practically.

Mr. DAWES. I have no objection if the course proposed will accommodate any other Senator.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill remain on the Calendar where it is, in its present order.

Mr. PERKINS. I do not imagine that the bill will provoke much discussion, though it is a pretty long bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think it may lead to discussion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over without prejudice, retaining its place.

PROTECTION OF FISH IN THE POTOMAC RIVER.

The bill (S. 1028) to continue in force the provisions of an act approved March 2, 1885, and entitled "An act to protect the fish in the Potomac River, and to provide a spawning ground for shad and herring in the said Potomac River," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PORT OF FERNANDINA, FLA.

The bill (S. 1393) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, A. D. 1880, by extending the privileges of the first section thereof to the port of Fernandina, Fla., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS IN SOUTH DAKOTA.

The bill (S. 697) to provide for building and maintaining an Indian industrial school at or near Chamberlain, in the State of South Dakota, and at or near Rapid City, in the State of South Dakota, and to provide a farm in conjunction therewith, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator introducing and reporting that bill is absent. Let it be passed over for the present, as it may lead to discussion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. KYLE. The provisions of that bill have been incorporated in an appropriation bill, and, as I understand, the appropriation is for the exact amount named in this bill. I suppose we are not required to pass it a second time.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then let the bill go over under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over under Rule IX.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 7818) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 11th instant, approved and signed the act (S. 2056) to repeal the provisions of an act entitled "An act to amend sections 4488 and 4489 of the Revised Statutes, requiring life-saving appliances on steamers," approved March 2, 1889, so far as they relate to steamers plying exclusively upon any of the lakes, bays, or sounds of the United States.

PURCHASE OF SILVER BULLION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting, in response to a resolution of the Senate of April 7, 1892, a statement prepared by the Director of the Mint of the amount of silver bullion offered to the Government from August 13, 1890, to April 1, 1892, and the amount purchased during that period under the act of July 14, 1890, with a list of all persons, firms, or associations offering the same, the amount and price thereof, the persons, firms, or associations from whom silver was purchased, with the amount purchased and the price paid and the place at which delivered; which, with the accompanying papers, on motion of Mr. SHERMAN, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, this day received from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

The bill (H. R. 1105) for the relief of Henry S. Cohn, late of the One hundred and sixth Ohio Volunteers—to the Committee on Military Affairs;

The bill (H. R. 2713) in relation to the execution of declarations and other papers in pension claims—to the Committee on Pensions;

The bill (H. R. 1418) for the relief of Sarah A. Clapp—to the Committee on Military Affairs;

The bill (H. R. 649) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department—to the Committee on Claims; and

The bill (H. R. 7818) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Appropriations.

GEORGE ALCOTT.

The bill (S. 1638) to remove the charge of desertion now standing against George Alcott on the rolls of the War Department, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment in line 8, after the word "discharge," to insert "to date, June 13, 1865;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove from the rolls and records of the War Department the charge of desertion now standing on the said rolls against George Alcott, late a private in Company C, One hundred and fifty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and to issue to him an honorable discharge, to date June 13, 1865, and that said George Alcott be restored to all rights suspended or lost by said record.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXPLORATION AND SURVEY OF ALASKA.

The bill (S. 775) authorizing the Secretary of War to cause an exploration and survey to be made of the interior of the Territory of Alaska was considered in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of War to cause an exploration and survey to be made of the interior of the Territory of Alaska by such force of officers and enlisted men as he may deem necessary, and appropriates $100,000, to be immediately available, to meet the expenses of such exploration and survey. Such skilled astronomers, topographers, geologists, and naturalists as may be necessary to the success of the expedition may be detailed from the several scientific bureaus of the Government, and the heads of Departments may render such assistance in the way of transportation and equipment as shall appear desirable.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I wish to inquire of the Senator having this bill in charge—it is a very interesting one indeed—whether it is the purpose of the bill to preclude the Government from having the services of eminent naturalists to come from civil life who are not in the Departments of the Government? If that be true, I am quite sure that there will be very much less valuable results than otherwise would be obtained. There must be a great many very eminent naturalists in this country who would not accept service in the various bureaus of the Government because they can get better pay elsewhere or for other reasons.

Mr. COCKRELL. Lines 10, 11, and 12 provide for all that.

Mr. HOAR. That is what I wish to inquire about.

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill reads, beginning in line 10:

Such skilled astronomers, topographers, geologists, and naturalists as may be necessary to the success of the expedition may be detailed from the several scientific bureaus of the Government.

Mr. HOAR. That is just what I am commenting upon, and just what it does not provide for, if I understand it correctly.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator wants civilian appointees.

Mr. HOAR. My question is whether it should not be in the power of the Government to appoint temporarily for this service persons who are specially skilled?

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not think the language of the bill would prevent that. There are a great many men of high scientific attainment who are on duty without pay in the Smithsonian Institution and other of the scientific departments of the Government, notably Prof. Marsh. I do not think that Prof. Marsh is under any compensation whatever for the very eminent services as a scientist which he has rendered to the country. I think there are many of those gentlemen who serve gratuitously and who are recognized as a part of the scientific force of the Government.

Mr. HOAR. But there are a great many who are not a part of that force whom it might be well to secure for this special purpose.

Mr. MANDERSON. It would be very easy for them to report to the scientific bureaus of the Government for such duty. I do not think that this expedition, being, as it is, under the direction of the War Department, should be burdened by volunteers; that is to say, that anyone who desires to go should be permitted to go. I do not think the detail of scientists for this expedition, which is one of great moment and force and should be had as speedily as possible, should be burdened by those who simply desire to accompany it.

Mr. COCKRELL. If they would take volunteers, there would, as a matter of course, be a thousand or more who would volunteer to go to see the country.

Mr. HOAR. That is not the suggestion. My proposition is that there may be eminent scientific men in this country who do not belong to any bureau of the Government, and yet who would be the fittest persons for this service, and without whom it would not be complete. Take Agassiz, for instance, the son of the eminent Agassiz, now deceased. Does anybody doubt that it would be desirable that he should accompany such an expedition if he would?

The Senator from Nebraska suggests that Prof. Marsh is attached to some bureau of the Government. I did not know that, but I know one person, perhaps the most eminent man in the country in the way of the preparation of birds and so on, a very eminent ornithologist, especially skilled in the preservation and preparation of specimens, who was applied to by the Government to attend an expedition to Alaska a little while ago, but who was unable to do it on account of being connected with an educational institution, and who would have gone at any other time. It seems to me that might be met by inserting in line 13 the words "or may be appointed, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, from civil life," or something of that sort.

Mr. MANDERSON. I see no objection to that.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no objection to that.

Mr. MANDERSON. That will accomplish all the Senator desires.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest the insertion of the words "or may be appointed, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, from civil life."

Mr. COCKRELL. Let those words be inserted after the word "Government," in line 13.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 13, after the word "Government," it is proposed to insert "or may be appointed, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, from civil life;" so as to read:

Such skilled astronomers, topographers, geologists, and naturalists as may be necessary to the success of the expedition may be detailed from the several scientific bureaus of the Government, or may be appointed, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, from civil life, and the heads of Departments may render such assistance in the way of transportation and equipment as shall appear desirable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT MONTGOMERY MILITARY RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 1709) to grant to the Champlain and St. Lawrence Railroad Company a right of way across the Fort Montgomery military reservation was announced as next in order.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move that Order of Business 490, being House bill 4275, be substituted for Senate bill 1709. It is substantially the same.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 4275) to grant to the Champlain and St. Lawrence Railroad Company a right of way across the Fort Montgomery military reservation was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, after the word "New York," at the end of line 7, to strike out "in consideration of the payment to the United States Government of $50 per year in each September, commencing with September, 1891, and the further consideration," and insert "as now used by said company, on condition;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That a right of way 100 feet in width and about 4,000 feet in length, across the Fort Montgomery military reservation in the State of New York, is hereby granted to the Champlain and St. Lawrence Railroad Company, a corporation created under the laws of the State of New York, as now used by said company, on condition that the said railroad company shall provide and maintain good and sufficient fences along each side of the right of way thus granted: Provided, That the right to repeal this act, if the interest of the United States should so demand, is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senate bill 1709, on the same subject, will be indefinitely postponed.

ENGINEER CORPS OF THE NAVY.

The bill (S. 139) terminating the reduction in the numbers of the Engineer Corps of the Navy was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the reduction in the numbers of the Engineer Corps of the Navy provided for in the act approved August 5, 1882, shall be considered as having ceased on the 30th day of June, 1891.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY E. LAW.

The bill (S. 2018) granting a pension to Mary E. Law, widow of Capt. Richard L. Law, United States Navy, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Mary E. Law, widow of Capt. Richard L. Law, late of the United States Navy, granting her a pension of $50 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARGARET M. RICE.

The bill (S. 2187) granting a pension to Margaret M. Rice was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Margaret M. Rice, surviving widow of Charles Rice, deceased, late a private in Company D, Fifty-first Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and to pay her a pension of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; read the third time and passed.

PROMOTION OF ENLISTED MEN IN THE ARMY.

The bill (S. 1722) to provide for the examination and promotion of enlisted men of the Army to the grade of second lieutenant, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in section 3, line 11, after the word "based" to strike out, "and all who can not be appointed second lieutenants shall, at any time during the year, subsequent to their examination, if they shall so elect, receive an honorable discharge and one year's pay and allowances of the grade occupied at the date of discharge;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the vacancies in the grade of second lieutenant heretofore filled by the promotion of meritorious noncommissioned officers of the Army, under the provisions of section 3 of the act approved June 18, 1878, shall be filled by the appointment of competitors favorably recommended under this act, in the order of merit established by the final examination. Each man who passes the final examination shall receive a certificate of eligibility, setting forth the subjects in which he is proficient and the especial grounds upon which the recommendation is based: Provided, That not more than two examinations shall be accorded to the same competitor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGREEMENT WITH KICKAPOO INDIANS.

The bill (S. 1797) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Kickapoo Indians in Oklahoma Territory, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. That bill is a very long one, and it may lead to discussion. I want it to retain its place by unanimous consent on this Calendar, and not on the other Calendar, so that it may be called up any morning. Let it be passed over, retaining its place on the present Calendar.

Mr. DAWES. The other bill remains on this Calendar, too, does it not?

Mr. COCKRELL. The same thing.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

CLAIMS OF SHAWNEE AND DELAWARE INDIANS.

The bill (S. 1633) supplementary and amendatory to an act entitled "An act to refer to the Court of Claims certain claims of the Shawnee and Delaware Indians, and the freedmen of the Cherokee Nation, and for other purposes," approved October 1, 1890, was announced as next in order.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, in line 13, after the word "whatsoever," to strike out:

And the said court is hereby authorized to examine and adjudicate the same on their substantial merits, taking into consideration all the treaties, agreements, rights, and obligations involved, and such adjudication shall go to the extent and shall become a full and final settlement between the said parties, under and in accordance with the general terms of the aforesaid act of Congress.

And insert:

Arising out of treaty relations with the United States, rights growing out of such treaties, and from contracts, expressed or implied, under such treaties made and entered into by and between the said Shawnees and Cherokees, and between them or either of them and the United States.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Shawnee tribe or band of Indians, whose claims and demands against the Cherokee Nation and the United States were referred to the United States Court of Claims for adjudication under the act of Congress passed and approved October 1, 1890, entitled "An act to refer to the Court of Claims certain claims of the Shawnee and Delaware Indians and the freedmen of the Cherokee Nation, and for other purposes," shall present to the said court all their claims against the United States and the Cherokee Nation, or against either or both of them, of every description whatsoever, arising out of treaty relations with the United States, rights growing out of such treaties, and from contracts, expressed or implied, under such treaties made and entered into by and between the said Shawnees and Cherokees, and between them or either of them and the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WASHINGTON AND WESTERN MARYLAND RAILROAD COMPANY.

The bill (S. 1702) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington and Western Maryland Railroad Company," was announced as next in order.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask that this bill may go over without prejudice in the absence of the Senator reporting it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

NATIONAL-BANKING ASSOCIATIONS.

The bill (S. 675) to amend the laws in regard to national-banking associations, to retire their circulation, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DOLPH. Let that go over. It is reported adversely.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it go over under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over under Rule IX.

B. H. TREFETHEN.

The bill (S. 135) for the relief of D. H. Trefethen, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Navy to pay to D. H. Trefethen, recently master joiner at the navy-yard at Portsmouth, N. H., compensation at the regular rate per diem for such workmen from April 5, 1887, until December 20, 1887, and from June 16, 1888, until July 23, 1888, during which periods he was disabled by an injury to one foot, caused by the breaking down of a planing machine which he was operating while in the discharge of his duty.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REMAINS OF ENSIGN D. F. TERRELL.

The bill (S. 570) to provide for the removal of the remains of the late Ensign D. F. Terrell, United States Navy, from Sitka, Alaska, to his home in the State of Mississippi, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOUTHERN RAILROAD ASSOCIATION.

The bill (S. 982) for the relief of the Southern Railroad Association, lessees of the Mississippi Central Railroad Company, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the Southern Railroad Association, lessees of the Mississippi Central Railroad Company, $4,636.01 in payment of certain Post-Office Department drafts in favor of W. Goodman, president of the Mississippi Central Railroad Company, dated August 17, 1861, in payment for mail transportation from April 1 to May 31, 1861, returned and canceled in April and May, 1866.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PARDONS AND RESPITES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. PERKINS. The Senate has passed Order of Business 297, being the bill S. 1886. Subsequently to the reporting of that bill House bill 4429, Order of Business 420, was reported. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the Senate bill was passed and to take up the House bill, which is on the Calendar, and which is the same as the Senate bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4429) to empower the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to grant respites and pardons in certain cases. It authorizes the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to grant pardons and respites for offenses against the late corporation of Washington, the ordinances of Georgetown, and the levy court, the laws enacted by the legislative assembly, and the police and building regulations of the District.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask that the Senate bill on the same subject be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The vote by which the Senate bill on the same subject was passed will be reconsidered, and the bill will be indefinitely postponed, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

ROBERT CARRICK.

The bill (S. 1458) for the relief of Robert Carrick, late first lieutenant of the Eighth United States Cavalry, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PROCTOR. At the request of the Senator who reported that bill I ask that it be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

NOAH SEANOR.

The bill (S. 1636) for the relief of Noah Seanor was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Commissioner of Pensions, in lieu of pension certificate numbered 199010, issued February 24, 1883, to Sarah A. Seanor, dependent mother of Harrison Seanor, to issue a certificate to Noah Seanor for $1,990.13, the amount of arrears of pension granted and about to be paid to Sarah A. Seanor when she died, and transmit the same to Noah Seanor, with proper vouchers; and, upon the return of the vouchers to the Pension Office properly executed, there shall be made and transmitted to Noah Seanor a check for $1,990.13, which when paid shall be a final and full satisfaction of the pension granted Sarah A. Seanor of the 24th day of February, 1883, aforesaid.

Mr. COCKRELL. The word "of," in line 18, should be stricken out and "on" inserted. It should be "on the 24th day of February, 1883."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 18, after the name "Seanor," it is proposed to strike out "of" and insert "on;" so as to read:

A final and full satisfaction of the pension granted the said Sarah A. Seanor on the 24th day of February, 1883, aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

FIREPROOF BUILDING FOR NATIONAL MUSEUM.

The bill (S. 1758) to provide for the erection of an additional fireproof building for the National Museum was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator reporting and introducing that bill is not here. Let it be passed over without prejudice, retaining its place on the present Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

BUILDING FOR UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

The bill (S. 823) authorizing the purchase of a site for a building for the accommodation of the Supreme Court of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be passed over without prejudice. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

STATUE OF CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS.

The joint resolution (S. R. 15) for the erection and location of a bronze statue of Christopher Columbus and the removal of the Naval Monument to a new site was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that bill be passed over without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

INCREASED PAY OF ARMY NONCOMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

The bill (S. 1721) to increase the pay of certain noncommissioned officers of the Army was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 7, after the word "sergeant," where it occurs the second time, to strike out "thirty" and insert "thirty-four;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after the 1st day of July, 1892, the pay per month of the following noncommissioned officers of the line of the Army shall be as follows:

Sergeant-major, $30; regimental quartermaster-sergeant, $30; first sergeant, $34; sergeant, $20; corporal, $16; and all shall receive the increase of pay for length of service as provided by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BROCKTON, MASS.

The bill (S. 699) for the erection of a public building at Brockton, Mass., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT GRAND ISLAND, NEBR.

The bill (S. 1574) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Grand Island, in the State of Nebraska, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLASSIFICATION OF CEREALS.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I ask the consent of the Senate for the consideration of Order of Business 456, which I think, on being read by its title, will convey the reasons for it. I think it ought to be passed. It is in regard to fixing a uniform classification of wheat, corn, oats, barley, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The title of the bill will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 797) to provide for fixing a uniform classification and grading of wheat, corn, oats, rye, barley, and for other purposes.

Mr. COCKRELL. If it will take no time and lead to no discussion I shall not object; otherwise I shall.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it will take no time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 797) to provide for fixing a uniform classification and grading of wheat, corn, oats, rye, barley, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, with an amendment at the end of section 3 to insert:

Provided, however, That in interstate trade or commerce in grain, if the consignor thereof, or his authorized agent, shall so direct, public inspection, classification, or grading shall not be required nor made when said grain is consigned to the owner thereof or to his authorized agent or to a mill or private storehouse; or, for deposit in a special bin, to a public warehouse; or, the purchaser consenting, to a purchaser thereof; or, if consigned to a market where the usages of trade recognize sales of grain by sample, when the consignor shall direct its sale by sample.

Mr. GRAY. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio to state briefly what is the scope of this bill. I tried to listen to the reading of it, but whether it comes under the constitutional power to regulate weights and measures I did not understand, so far as I could gather from the reading.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think the question of the power of Congress to deal with these matters is included, because I think it comes fairly within the provision authorizing the establishment of weights and measures.

The passage of this bill is, I believe, requested by nearly all of the Farmers' Alliances in the United States, especially in the Northern States, where wheat and these cereals are grown.

Hitherto the rules of classification have been determined by boards of trade; for instance, at Chicago we might have one rate, in Wisconsin another, up at the headwaters of Lake Superior another, at Buffalo another, and at Cleveland another. There is some discrepancy in their rules, and this bill is to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to determine the correct classification, etc., and it is made a matter of record. It does not interfere with the right to make contracts for any other mode of classification, but merely establishes certain grades.

Mr. GRAY. I ask the Senator, for information, this question: It appears from what the Senator has just said that the bill refers to the classification of quality and grading of the different cereals spoken of in the bill, and not at all to fixing the standard of weights and measures?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think there is any doubt about that. It does not interfere with contracts, but it does make uniform certain classifications which are established by this bill. I do not think there is any question about the power of Congress to do what is proposed.

Mr. PADDOCK. It does not bear any relation whatever to the standard of weights and measures. It does not in any respect affect the standard of weights and measures.

Mr. GRAY. Does it refer, or can it be referred to at all, to the power granted in the Constitution to fix the standard of weights and measures? If it can not, to what legislative power can it be referred?

Mr. PADDOCK. It relates simply to interstate-commerce transactions and nothing else, transactions between States—the shipments of grain from one State to another. It is a carefully drawn and conservative bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is a regulation of commerce.

Mr. GRAY. Does the bill so state?

Mr. PADDOCK. The bill clearly states that it refers to interstate commerce, and the rule as to the standards of weights and measures under existing law is recognized and is in no respect to be interfered with.

Mr. GRAY. I should like to have that part of the bill read again. I think it is a matter of some importance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The part of the bill referred to will be read.

Mr. SHERMAN. Read the third section again.

The Chief Clerk read section 3 of the bill as proposed to be amended, as follows:

SEC. 3. That from and after thirty days after such classifications and grades have been determined upon and fixed, and duly placed on record as herein provided, such classification and grading shall be taken and held to be the standard in all interstate trade and commerce in grain in all cases when no other standard is agreed upon: Provided, however, That in interstate trade or commerce in grain, if the consignor thereof, or his authorized agent, shall so direct, public inspection, classification, or grading shall not be required nor made when said grain is consigned to the owner thereof, or to his authorized agent, or to a mill or private storehouse; or, for deposit in a special bin, to a public warehouse; or, the purchaser consenting, to a purchaser thereof; or, if consigned to a market where the usages of trade recognize sales of grain by sample, when the consignor shall direct its sale by sample.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was about to say that not only have some of the Legislatures asked for this uniform rule, but the Farmers' Alliances have requested it. I have had many letters about it. This bill was prepared to carry out their views, so that there may be no dispute or litigation in regard to the grade of wheat that is sold.

Mr. GRAY. Who is to make the classification?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Secretary of Agriculture is to have charge of the matter. The bill provides for that.

Mr. HOAR. The gist of the bill is in the first six lines of the third section. Let those be read again. The other is merely a definition or classification established by this public officer.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The lines referred to will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the lines referred to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us vote on the bill or let it go over, one or the other.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Were the lines read by the Secretary stricken out?

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, no.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF ISAAC W. TALKINGTON.

The bill (S. 118) for the relief of the estate of Isaac W. Talkington, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the estate of Isaac W. Talkington, deceased, late of Pope County, in the State of Arkansas, $200, erroneously paid to the United States for the north half of southeast quarter of section 21, township 7 north, range 18 west, of the fifth principal meridian.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORFEITURE OF RAILROAD LAND GRANTS.

The bill (S. 1380) to amend an act entitled "An act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads," and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments, in line 7, after the word "persons," to strike out "in possession of" and insert "actually residing upon;" and in line 9, after the word "quantities," to insert "and upon the terms;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of an act entitled "An act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes," be, and the same is, amended so as to extend the time within which persons actually residing upon lands forfeited by said act shall be permitted to purchase the same in the quantities and upon the terms provided in said section at any time within three years from the passage of said act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PURCHASERS OF TIMBER AND STONE LANDS.

The bill (S. 2275) for the relief of purchasers of timber and stone lands under the act of June 3, 1878, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that hereafter all necessary affidavits and proofs required by law of any purchaser of lands under the provisions of an act entitled "An act for the sale of timber lands in the States of California, Oregon, Nevada, and Washington Territory," in order to perfect his title to those lands, may be made before any officer qualified to take proof in homestead cases.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

R. B. WOODSON.

The bill (S. 1940) for the relief of R. B. Woodson was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. In line 4, I move to insert the letters "on," after the word "Woods," so as to read "Woodson;" and then insert "postmaster at Gaines;" so as to make the bill correspond with the report and read: "R. B. Woodson, postmaster at Gainesville."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads with an amendment, in line 6, before the word "funds," to strike out "postal order" and insert "money order;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster-General be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to allow R. B. Woodson, postmaster at Gainesville, Ala., a credit for the sum of $142, money-order funds collected by him and lost in transit from Gainesville, Ala., to Mobile, Ala., on or about September 23, 1880, and which the Postmaster-General was unable to allow to said postmaster as a credit under existing laws, and which amount was paid and lost by said postmaster. The Postmaster-General is authorized and directed to refund said sum of $142 to said Woodson, and take his receipt in full satisfaction of said claim. An amount sufficient to refund said sum of $142 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FOND DU LAC INDIAN RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 2081) to grant to the Duluth, Missabe and Northern Railway Company a right of way through the Fond du Lac Indian Reservation, in the State of Minnesota, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move at the end of the bill to strike out the period and insert a semicolon, and to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

That is omitted I see in the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GUN FACTORY ON PACIFIC COAST.

The bill (S. 537) to provide for the establishment of a gun factory for the finishing and assembling of heavy ordnance on the Pacific coast was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that bill be passed over.

Mr. DOLPH. Let it be passed over without prejudice. The bill was introduced by me, but the Senator who reported it is not present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

CONTROL AND SAFETY OF NATIONAL BANKS.

The bill (H. R. 5681) for the better control of and to promote the safety of national banks was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am afraid that bill will lead to discussion. Let it go over.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think not. It is a very important bill, to which everybody will assent. If there is any objection, it may go over. It is a House bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Finance with amendment.

The first amendment was to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 4. That upon any deposit already or hereafter made of any United States bonds bearing interest in the manner required by law, any national banking association making the same shall be entitled to receive from the Comptroller of the Currency circulating notes of different denominations, in blank, registered and countersigned as provided by law, not exceeding in the whole amount the par value of the bonds deposited: Provided, That at no time shall the total amount of such notes issued to any such association exceed the amount at such time actually paid in of its capital stock.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire simply to place myself on record in this matter as being opposed to this amendment in toto, or to any amendment that has the appearance of giving continued existence to the national-banking system of this country, or the right of the national banks to issue or control the paper circulation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 5. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. HOAR. I have an amendment which will come in before that. I move to add to section 4:

The Comptroller of the Currency shall prescribe a form of bond which shall hereafter be used by all national banks to secure the fidelity of cashiers and all other officers of whom bonds are required. The examiners of national banks shall from time to time report the amount and character of the sureties of such bonds taken by any bank by them examined, and the said Comptroller may require any bank to take such other or further surety as he may think fit.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I discovered to my surprise some little time ago that the ordinary form of bond taken by national banks in the part of the country where I live merely secures the bank against such malfeasance by the cashier as is the subject of indictment. That is in substance the language of the bond. So for leaving the bank vaults unlocked and exposed to theft, or a thousand other forms of gross carelessness, in the matter of discount where those are committed to the discretion of the cashier alone, there is no security whatever.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no objection to the Senator's amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to make this statement, if the Senator pleases. On examination it appears that the form of the bond and the amount of the bond of national banks is a matter of discretion with the directors of the individual bank. I called the attention of the Comptroller of the Currency to this matter, and he said it was a great evil, but that he had no power to remedy it without legislation.

The amendment was agreed to:

Mr. CALL. This is a very important bill, and I do not think it is generally understood on this side of the Chamber. It is a bill that passed the other House, and I suggest if there is no objection that it go over and that we be given time for its consideration.

Mr. SHERMAN. As far as I know, the bill met with the unanimous approval of the Committee on Finance, and it was deemed to be very important. The first provisions of the bill, inserted by the other House, are intended to guard against the common abuse of loaning money by a bank to the president and officers of the bank. That is an evil probably greater than any other connected with the banking system. More banks have failed by inordinate loans to the officers of banks than from all other causes combined. That, so far, was considered very important.

The fourth section was added by the Committee on Finance because of the present market value of the United States bonds. Certainly bonds are a security for the face value of the notes. That provision has passed the Senate several times, but it has not usually been acted upon by the other House. The provision now inserted in regard to the bonds of cashiers I think is a wise one, if there has been any difficulty in regard to previous bonds.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee adding section 5 to the bill.

Mr. CALL. I do not wish to make any objection, and I shall not do so. The bill may be in all respects correct. I only meant to say that it is an important subject and that very few of us on this side understand what its provisions are, except from the statement just made by the Senator from Ohio, and the Senate is quite thin. That is the only point I make.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SHERMAN. In order to promote the final passage of the bill, I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives upon the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. ALDRICH, and Mr. HARRIS were appointed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2133) to repeal the internal-revenue tax on the circulation of bank notes issued under State authority was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. FRYE. That bill was reported adversely.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that bill be passed over. It was reported adversely.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without prejudice?

Mr. COCKRELL. Without prejudice; and also let the next bill be passed over without prejudice.

The bill (S. 1234) amending an act entitled "An act to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the confederated bands of Ute Indians in Colorado for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same," was announced as the next bill in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be passed over without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. CALL. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to change the reference of the bill (S. 2303) for the relief of Meda A. Coyle, granddaughter and administratrix de bonis non of Lieut. Joseph Wheaton, deceased. The bill was introduced by me some days since, and by mistake it was referred to the Committee on Claims. It is a Revolutionary claim, and I ask that the mistake be corrected, and the bill referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the Committee on Claims will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it will be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims. It is so ordered, in the absence of objection.

DAVID S. CORSER.

The bill (S. 1530) granting an increase of pension to David S. Corser was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of David S. Corser, late of Company H, Fourteenth New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $16 per month, in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EARNEST C. EMERSON.

The bill (S. 1637) granting a pension to Earnest C. Emerson, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Earnest C. Emerson, dependent and imbecile child of Orrin M. Emerson, late a private in Company H, First Rhode Island Cavalry, at $18 per month, payable to his legally constituted guardian.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANK L. AVERY.

The bill (S. 1528) granting an increase of pension to Frank L. Avery was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Frank L. Avery, late of Company D, Fifth New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $50 per month, in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IRA INGRAHAM.

The bill (S. 1540) granting a pension to Ira Ingraham was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in the lines 4 and 5, strike out the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws," and in line 7, after the words "at the rate of," to strike out "pension provided for assistant surgeons of volunteers" and insert the words "twelve dollars per month;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Ira Ingraham, volunteer surgeon from Rhode Island during the war of the rebellion, at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGREEMENT WITH UTE INDIANS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I asked that Senate bill 1234 be passed over. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] says that it proposes an immaterial amendment of the existing law. Let it be taken up and passed. On my request it went over without prejudice.

The bill (S. 1234) amending an act entitled "An act to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the confederated bands of Ute Indians in Colorado for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF PETER DELLA TORRE.

The bill (S. 132) for the relief of Frank Della Torre and Susan F. Della Torre, heirs of Peter Della Torre, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be passed over without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

PAY OF INDIAN SCOUTS.

The bill (S. 360) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to pay the Yankton Sioux Indians who served as scouts under Gen. Sully in 1864 the amount due them, and making an appropriation therefor, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I was requested by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], who is absent, to ask that that bill may be passed over when reached on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

INVESTIGATION OF CITY SLUMS.

The joint resolution (S. R. 46) providing for an investigation relative to the "slums of cities," was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Commissioner of Labor to make a full investigation relative to what is known as the slums of cities, confining such investigation to cities containing 200,000 inhabitants and over, as shown by the Eleventh Census. It provides that the investigation shall relate to the occupations, earnings, sanitary surroundings, and other essential facts necessary to show the condition of residents of such localities, and appropriates $20,000 to defray the expenses of the investigation.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not like to object to anything that does not cost more than $20,000, but I confess I can not see the necessity and the duty involved in the joint resolution. The "slums of cities" is a phrase that it is not easy to interpret. You will find a difference of opinion in a city. One portion will say that the other is perfectly qualified to be so considered, and those whom you think the real slums will retort upon what they call the "bloated aristocracy," and all that sort of thing. I think that the social investigation into the crime, poverty, unwholesomeness, and general misfortunes and calamities of such regions belongs rather to State government. I think that on the whole we have discovered here during the time I have been in Congress that we have about as much as we can do within the limits imposed upon us by the Constitution. I do not care to make anything like a contest against a joint resolution of this kind, but I regret it. I believe it is reaching out after work when we do not need any more work.

Mr. KYLE. I sincerely hope there will be no objection to the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Connecticut has not objected.

Mr. HAWLEY. No; I will not object to it if they keep out of my State, because there will be a serious difference of opinion as to what the slums are when it comes to bring a foreign committee into Connecticut. We shall be relieved in one respect. We have no city of 200,000 inhabitants.

Mr. KYLE. The joint resolution has, I understand, the assent of all the members of the Committee on Education and Labor. It was introduced at the instance of several organizations of the United States—the Federation of Labor, the Knights of Labor, and several others. They have been earnestly petitioning the committee and individual members of the Senate that the measure be called up at an early day, and that the investigation shall be begun under the auspices of the Commissioner of Labor. The Commissioner of Labor is in hearty sympathy with the joint resolution, and is willing to begin the investigation the moment that he has the authority from Congress.

I sincerely hope that there will be no objection to the joint resolution, and if there is any objection in regard to the expense, I trust an amendment will be made right here that will enable the measure to go through and authorize the investigation.

Mr. GRAY. I should like to ask the Senator who is authorized by the measure to make the investigation?

Mr. KYLE. The Commissioner.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Commissioner of Labor, Carroll D. Wright.

Mr. FRYE. There is no objection to its present consideration, I understand.

Mr. PLATT. I move to amend the joint resolution by inserting, after the word "localities," in line 10:

And to show, so far as it may be done, the condition of such residents compared with the residents of cities of similar size in other countries.

Mr. GRAY. It seems to me that the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut very much enlarges the scope of this investigation. To compare the condition of cities of this country with cities of the same size in other countries would involve an examination of those cities in other countries, and the Commissioner of Labor or his subordinates must visit Europe and institute the comparison. I do not see at present on what ground this is claimed as a matter of legitimate federal legislation, and I must ask that the joint resolution go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made and the joint resolution goes over.

Mr. KYLE. Without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Shall the joint resolution retain its place on the Calendar?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. GRAY. I have no objection. Upon further examination it may be shown to be legitimate legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will go over without prejudice, retaining its place on the Calendar.

WILLIAM WOLFE.

The bill (S. 31) for the relief of William Wolfe, of Shelby County, Mo., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of War to cause to be investigated by the Quartermaster-General of the United States Army the circumstances, character, and extent of the claim of William Wolfe, of Shelby County, Mo., for the loss of the schooner Anna Sophia, belonging to him, and for freight, while on a voyage from New Orleans, La., to Indianola, Tex.; the schooner alleged to have been lost, together with her cargo of public stores, while in the military service of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JEFFERSON BARRACKS MILITARY RESERVATION LANDS.

The bill (S. 1239) for the benefit of sundry persons residing in the vicinity of Jefferson Barracks, Mo., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to release the title of the United States to certain lands lying and being within the boundary lines described in the deed of the town of Carondelet to the United States, dated October 25, 1854, and now claimed as a portion of Jefferson Barracks military reservation, situated in the county of St. Louis, Mo.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WAR DEPARTMENT RECORD AND PENSION OFFICE.

The bill (S. 2305) to provide for the permanent preservation and custody of the records of the volunteer armies, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to establish as now organized the division for the preservation and custody of the records of the volunteer armies under the name of the record and pension division, to be hereafter known as the record and pension office of the War Department; and the President is authorized to select an officer of the Army whom he may consider to be especially well qualified for the performance of the duties, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint him in the Army to be chief of the office, who shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a colonel, and shall, under the Secretary of War, have charge of the military and hospital records of the volunteer armies and the pension and other business of the War Department connected therewith.

Mr. HAWLEY. I made some objection to this bill that was passed at a previous Congress. If I recollect aright, it was vetoed; it failed to become a law, at any rate. I do not care to renew that objection if anybody will assure me that the General of the Army, an accomplished soldier, and the President of the United States, an admirable lawyer as well as statesman, are satisfied with this form of bill. Does anybody know?

Mr. COCKRELL. There is a letter from the Commanding General expressly approving it, and I say, not officially, that the Attorney-General has approved of it.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is not a question of legality. I do not care so much about the opinion of the Attorney-General upon this as I would upon some other questions. It is a question of the wisdom of giving a promotion of two grades and a permanent office to a gentleman holding a position in the Army. The bill makes him a colonel in the Army practically for life, performing civil duty, and not a removable officer, as I understand it, like other officers, who are removable or whose details may be changed. I am not questioning in any degree the remarkable ability and merit of this gentleman, Maj. Ainsworth, and I say I do not renew any real objection to the bill. I do not think it is a wise way of rewarding merit. I would gladly vote him a salary of $5,000 a year, and if necessary a vote of thanks from Congress. I do not object to the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLAMETTE RIVER LIGHTS AND BUOYS.

The bill (S. 720) making an appropriation for the establishment and maintenance of range lights and buoys at twenty-five different points on the Willamette River, between the cities of Salem and Portland, in the State of Oregon, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, in line 3, before the word "dollars," to insert "five thousand;" in line 6, after the word "maintaining," to strike out "range lights and buoys at thirty-five" and insert "beacon lights and buoys at twenty-five;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $5,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of establishing and maintaining beacon lights and buoys at twenty-five different points on the Willamette River between the cities of Salem and Portland, Oregon, the same to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill making an appropriation for the establishment and maintenance of beacon lights and buoys at twenty-five different points on the Willamette River, between the cities of Salem and Portland, in the State of Oregon."

ESTATE OF JAMES L. DAY.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PLATT. I wish the Senator would withhold the motion until the next bill is considered. It will not take any time.

Mr. McMILLAN. Very well.

The bill (S. 2271) for the relief of Nancy E. Day, administratrix of the estate of James L. Day, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay Nancy E. Day, administratrix of the estate of James L. Day, deceased, late of Norwich, Conn., $3,041.66, in payment and satisfaction of the amount found due from the United States to her by the Court of Claims upon a reference of her claim to that court by the Postmaster-General, under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1883, entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 14, 1892, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 13, 1892.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Henry Z. Osborne, of California, now collector of customs for the district of Wilmington, in the State of California, to be collector of customs for the district of Los Angeles, in the State of California, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 31, 1892.

SURGEON IN MARINE HOSPITAL SERVICE.

Passed Assistant Surg. William A. Wheeler, of Indiana, to be a surgeon in the Marine Hospital Service of the United States.

CHIEF ENGINEER IN NAVY.

Passed Assistant Engineer John A. B. Smith, to be a chief engineer in the Navy, from the 16th of February, 1892, vice Chief Engineer Montgomery Fletcher, retired.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

Cavalry arm.

Capt. Myles Moylan, Seventh Cavalry, to be major, April 8, 1892, vice Montgomery, Tenth Cavalry, retired from active service.

First Lieut. John C. Gresham, Seventh Cavalry, to be captain, April 8, 1892, vice Moylan, Seventh Cavalry, promoted.

Second Lieut. Selah R. H. Tompkins, Seventh Cavalry, to be first lieutenant, April 8, 1892, vice Gresham, Seventh Cavalry, promoted.

Second Lieut. Charles W. Farber, Eighth Cavalry, to be first lieutenant, April 5, 1892, vice Dravo, Sixth Cavalry, who resigns his line commission on accepting his appointment as captain and commissary of subsistence.

APPRAISER OF MERCHANDISE.

William C. Ralston, of California, to be appraiser of merchandise in the district of San Francisco, in the State of California, to succeed Charles M. Leavy, removed.

POSTMASTER.

Charles L. Perry, to be postmaster at New Rochelle, in the county of Westchester and State of New York, in the place of John F. Cashen, whose commission expired March 20, 1892.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 13, 1892.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CORRECTION.

Mr. SCOTT. I desire to state that on page 2195 of the daily RECORD there is an error in my statement as it was printed. My statement was that "during the year ending June 30, 1891, there were imported over 1,000,000,000 pounds of tin plate. The RECORD shows that I said "over 1,000,000 pounds of tin plate" were imported.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

EXPENSES OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Attorney-General, submitting estimates of deficiencies in the appropriations for expenses of United States courts for the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CHIEF CLERK, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, explaining the importance of a chief clerk being provided for the office of Indian Affairs; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

WILLIAM WIRTZ, DECEASED.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of William Wirtz, deceased, against the United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. RUSK, for five days, on account of important business.
To Mr. CUTTING, for one week, on account of important business.

THIRD DIVISION OF THE JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF KANSAS.

Mr. BRODERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk, which went over yesterday.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the counties of Miami, Linn, Bourbon, Crawford, Cherokee, Labette, Neosho, Allen, Anderson, Coffey, Woodson, Wilson, Montgomery, Chautauqua, Elk, and Greenwood, in the State of Kansas, shall constitute the third division of the judicial district of Kansas, and that a term of the circuit and district courts for said district shall be held therein at the city of Fort Scott, on the first Monday of May and the first Monday of November of each year. The remaining counties heretofore embraced in the first division of the judicial district of Kansas shall constitute the first division thereof.

SEC. 2. That all civil suits which shall hereafter be brought against a defendant or defendants who reside in said third division of said district shall be brought in said third division; but if there are two or more defendants residing in different divisions of said district, such suit may be brought in either division of said district in which any defendant or defendants reside, and all mesne and final process subject to the provisions of this act, issued in either of the divisions of the judicial district of Kansas, may be served and executed in either or all of the divisions.

SEC. 3. That all crimes and offenses against the laws of the United States heretofore committed within the counties comprising the third division of said district, and all crimes and offenses against said laws known and defined as infamous heretofore committed within the limits of the Quapaw Indian Reservation, in the Indian Territory, and of which the courts in Kansas have heretofore had jurisdiction, shall be prosecuted, tried, and determined at the terms at the district court hereinbefore provided for: Provided, That all such crimes and offenses heretofore committed within said district shall be prosecuted, tried, and determined in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed.

SEC. 4. That the clerks of the circuit and district courts for said district and the marshal of said district shall each appoint a deputy, who shall reside and maintain an office at the city of Fort Scott, each of whom shall, in the absence of the clerks or marshal, exercise all the powers and perform all the duties of his principal within the division for which he shall be appointed: Provided, That the appointment of such deputies shall be approved by the court for which they shall be respectively appointed, and they may be removed by such court at pleasure, and the clerk and marshal shall be responsible for the official acts and neglects of all their deputies.

SEC. 5. That all civil suits and proceedings now pending in the circuit or district court of said district of Kansas which would, if instituted after the passage of this act, be required to be brought in the third division of said district, may be transferred by consent of all the parties to said third division of said district, and there disposed of in the same manner and with like effect as if the same had been there instituted; and all process, writs, and recognizances relating to such suits and proceedings so transferred shall be considered as taken at and returnable to the term of court in the third division of said district in the same manner and with like effect as if they had been issued or taken in reference thereto originally.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. McMILLIN. I am informed that this was passed over yesterday morning in order to give the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] an opportunity to look into it. I do not see him in his seat, and I hope the gentleman will withhold it until he is present.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will state to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] that this bill does not create any new office. It simply provides for the holding of a term of the circuit and district court at Fort Scott. The same clerk or the same deputy clerk will perform the duties.

Mr. McMILLIN. Have they a public building at Fort Scott?

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not know.

Mr. FUNSTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. McMILLIN. You have a court-house there?

Mr. FUNSTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. McMILLIN. How many districts are there in the State?

Mr. BRODERICK. There are two divisions of the district.

Mr. McMILLIN. How many places are there at which court is held?

Mr. BRODERICK. The Federal court is held at three places now. This will make a third division, but a fourth place at which terms of the Federal court are held.

Mr. McMILLIN. I understand it does not increase the expense?

Mr. CULBERSON. No, sir.

Mr. BRODERICK. I would not call up this bill in the absence of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], if it were not for the fact that I have a note from a reputable gentleman, saying that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] told him last evening that he would withdraw any opposition to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRODERICK. I move to amend the bill by striking out the word "reservation," in line 6, section 3, and substituting therefor the word "agency."

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, this verbal amendment will be considered as agreed to?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there any other amendment?

Mr. BRODERICK. No other amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there no amendment reported by the Committee?

Mr. BRODERICK. No; there are no further amendments.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BRODERICK, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

EXPLANATION.

Mr. BRAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I had the honor to submit some remarks on the 23d of March last on the bill for the free coinage of silver. Immediately after the conclusion thereof I was asked by the Official Reporters whether they should print the speech as delivered or whether I would withhold it for revision, as the custom was. The remarks were withheld for revision, and appeared in the RECORD on the 25th of March. The RECORD of the 24th of March, however, made no reference to the fact that those remarks were delivered on the 23d. I called attention to it at the time, my own attention having been directed to the matter, and it was said to be a mere omission through the inadvertence of some person. I did not think it worth while at the time to have it publicly corrected, as it seemed a matter of no significance. But the omission has been made the subject of injurious comment; and, in the interest of accuracy, I desire that the RECORD be corrected and that it shall appear as the fact was.

The SPEAKER. The statement of the gentleman will go into the RECORD, which will answer the gentleman's purpose.

ASSESSMENT OF PROPERTY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the preamble and resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the board of assessors are about completing an assessment upon property in the District of Columbia, and from an estimate furnished by the District Commissioners to the Committee on Appropriations it appears that this new assessment is to exceed the old by only 25 per cent; and

Whereas said old assessment on the land values alone in the District is $76,000,000, when it should be more than $300,000,000, this shows an extraordinary undervaluation, and what is still worse, the greatest injustice between the valuation of the land used for business purposes, which in many cases is assessed at less than 14 per cent of its true value, and land used for residence purposes, especially where the small homes are situated, is assessed at from 70 to 80 per cent of its true value, while in many cases land held for speculation is assessed at less than 10 per cent of its true value. The foregoing facts were brought out by an expert valuation on enough land in the District to furnish an average. A public hearing was held by the Commissioners in which this subject was thoroughly discussed, and after a careful examination they say "the figures embraced in these showings seem to have been carefully and conservatively prepared;" and

Whereas the new assessment should not only show the true value of the property in lawful money, as required by law, but should also preserve an equality in assessment of the land in different localities, and not bear more heavily in some sections than in others. Therefore,

Be it resolved, That a select committee, consisting of three members, be appointed by the Speaker, which shall have power and authority to investigate and report upon the method of ascertaining land values by the board of assistant assessors in the District of Columbia; to inquire whether there is in the assessment now being prepared discrimination in favor of any section over others, and generally to inquire into all alleged inequalities pertaining to the assessment of land values.

Such committee shall have power to send for persons and papers, to examine the witnesses under oath, may employ a stenographer and one clerk, and shall report the result of its investigation to the House, with such recommendation as it may deem proper to make. The expense of such investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that matter ought to go to one of the standing committees of the House for investigation.

Mr. STOUT. I hope the House will take action upon the resolution at this time, as it is a very important matter.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that we are multiplying committees to a greater extent than usual, and they are attended with expense; but I understand that this is a very important inquiry and I shall not object.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think that resolution had better go to some committee.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. If there be present objection to the consideration of the resolution, I hope it will go to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. DINGLEY. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

RIGHT OF WAY TO GAINESVILLE, OKLAHOMA AND GULF RAILWAY COMPANY THROUGH INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk. The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3927) to grant to the Gainesville, Oklahoma and Gulf Railway Company a right of way through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, that bill has been read at length to the House once, and I will say that it is in the regular form, precisely as such bills are usually passed by the House. I therefore ask to dispense with the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of this bill; and, pending that, the gentleman asks that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. BURROWS. I think it had better be read.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think the gentleman's bill is right, but perhaps it had better be read.

Mr. BAILEY. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say that the bill has been read at length in the House once.

Mr. BURROWS. I was not here, and I should like very well to hear the bill read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Gainesville, Oklahoma and Gulf Railway Company, a corporation created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Texas, be, and the same is hereby, invested and empowered with the right of locating, constructing, owning, equipping, operating, using, and maintaining a railway, telegraph, and telephone line through the Indian Territory, beginning at a point to be selected by said company on Red River, north of the west part of Cooke County, in the State of Texas, and running thence by the most practicable route, through the Indian Territory in a northwesterly direction to a point on the southern boundary of the State of Kansas.

Sec. 2. That a right of way of 100 feet in width through said Indian Territory is hereby granted to the Gainesville, Oklahoma and Gulf Railway Company, and a strip of land 200 feet in width, with a length of 3,000 feet, in addition to the right of way, is granted for such stations as may be established, but such grant shall be allowed but once for every 10 miles of the road, no portion of which shall be sold or leased by the company, with the right to use such additional grounds where there are heavy cuts or fills as may be necessary for the construction and maintenance of the roadbed, or as much thereof as may be included in said cut or fill: Provided, That no more than said addition of land shall be taken for any one station: Provided further, That no part of the lands herein granted shall be used except in such manner and for such purposes only as shall be necessary for the construction and convenient operation of said railroad, telegraph, and telephone line, and when any portion thereof shall cease to be used such portion shall revert to the nation or tribe of Indians from which the same shall have been taken.

Sec. 3. That before said railway shall be constructed through any lands held by individual occupants according to the laws, customs, and usages of any of the Indian nations or tribes through which it may be constructed, full compensation shall be made to such occupants for all property to be taken or damage done by reason of the construction of such railway. In case of failure to make amicable settlement with any occupant, such compensation shall be determined by the appraisement of three disinterested referees to be appointed by the President, who, before entering upon the duties of their appointment, shall take and subscribe before competent authority an oath that they will faithfully and impartially discharge the duties of their appointment, which oath, duly certified, shall be returned with their award. In case the referees can not agree, then any two of them are authorized to make the award. Either party being dissatisfied with the finding of the referee shall have the right, within ninety days after the making of the award and notice of the same, to appeal by original petition to the courts, where the case shall be tried de novo. When proceedings have been commenced in court the railway company shall pay double the amount of the award into court to abide the judgment thereof, and then have the right to enter upon the property sought to be condemned, and proceed with the construction of the railroad. Each of said referees shall receive for his services the sum of $4 per day for each day they are engaged in the trial of any case submitted to them under this act, with mileage at 5 cents per mile. Witnesses shall receive the usual fees allowed by the courts of said nations. Costs, including compensation of the referees, shall be made a part of the award and be paid by such railroad company.

Sec. 4. That said railroad company shall not charge the inhabitants of said Territory a greater rate of freight than the rate authorized by the laws of the State of Texas for services or transportation of the same kind, provided that passenger rates on said railway shall not exceed 3 cents per mile. Congress hereby reserves the right to regulate the charges for freight and passengers on said railway and messages on said telegraph and telephone lines until a State government or governments shall exist in said Territory, within the limits of which said railway or part thereof shall be located, and then such State government or governments shall be authorized to fix and regulate the cost of transportation of persons and freight within their respective limits by said railway, but Congress expressly reserves the right to fix and regulate at all times the cost of such transportation by said railway or said company whenever such transportation shall extend from one State into another or shall extend into more than one State: Provided, however, That the rates of such transportation of passengers, local or interstate, shall not exceed those above expressed: And provided further, That said railway company shall carry the mail at such prices as Congress may by law provide, and until such rate is fixed by law the Postmaster-General may fix the rate of compensation.

Sec. 5. That said railway company shall pay to the Secretary of the Interior, for the benefit of the particular nations or tribes through whose lands said railway may be located, the sum of $50, in addition to compensation provided for by this act for property taken or damage done by the construction of the railway, for each mile of railway that it may construct in said Territory, said payments to be made in installments of $500 as each 10 miles of road is graded. Said company shall also pay, as long as said Territory is owned and occupied by the Indians, to the Secretary of the Interior, the sum of $15 per annum for each mile of railway it shall construct in the said Territory. The money paid to the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of this act shall be apportioned by him, in accordance with the laws and treaties now in force among the different nations and tribes, according to the number of miles of railway that may be constructed by said railway company through their lands: Provided, That Congress shall have the right, so long as their lands are occupied and possessed by said nations and tribes, to impose such additional taxes upon said railroad as it may deem just and proper for their benefit: Provided further, That if the general council of either of the nations or tribes through whose lands said railway may be located shall, within four months after the filing of maps of definite location as set forth in section 6 of this act, dissent from the allowances provided for in this section and shall certify the same to the Secretary of the Interior, then all compensation to be paid to such dissenting nation or tribe under the provisions of this act shall be determined as provided in section 3 for the determination of the compensation to be paid to the individual occupant of land, with the right to appeal to the courts upon the same terms, conditions, and requirements as herein provided: Provided further, That the amount awarded or adjudged to be paid by said railway company for said dissenting nation or tribe shall be in lieu of the compensation that said nation or tribes would be entitled to receive under the provisions of this section. Nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit Congress from imposing taxes upon said railway, nor any Territory or State hereafter formed through which said railway shall have been established from exercising the like power as to such part of said railway as may lie within its limits. Said railway company shall have the right to survey and locate its railway immediately after the passage of this act.

Sec. 6. That said railway company shall cause maps showing the general route of its located line through said Territory to be filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, and also to be filed in the office of the principal chief of each of the nations or tribes through whose lands said railways may be located; and after the filing of said maps no claim for subsequent settlement and improvement upon the right of way shown by said maps shall be valid against said company: Provided, That when a map showing any portion of said railway company's located line is filed as herein provided for, said company shall commence grading said located line within six months thereafter or such location shall be void as to any occupant thereof.

Sec. 7. That the officers, servants, and employees of said company necessary to the construction, operation, and management of said road and telegraph and telephone lines shall be allowed to reside while so engaged upon said right of way, but subject to the provisions of the Indian intercourse laws and such rules and regulations as may be established by the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with said intercourse laws.

Sec. 8. That the United States circuit and district courts for the northern district of Texas, the western district of Arkansas, the district of Kansas, and such other courts as may be authorized by Congress shall have, without reference to the amount in controversy, concurrent jurisdiction over all controversies arising between said Gainesville, Oklahoma and Gulf Railway Company and the nations and tribes through whose territory said railway shall be constructed. Said courts shall have like jurisdiction, without reference to the amount in controversy, over all controversies arising between the inhabitants of said nations or tribes and said railway company; and the civil jurisdiction of said courts is hereby extended within the limits of said Indian Territory, without distinction as to citizenship of the parties, so far as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

Sec. 9. That said railway company shall build at least 100 miles of its railway in said Territory within three years after the passage of this act, or this grant shall be forfeited as to that portion not built; that said railroad company shall construct and maintain continually all road and highway crossings and necessary bridges over said railway wherever said roads and highways do now or may hereafter cross said railway's right of way or may be by the proper authorities laid out across the same.

Sec. 10. That said Gainesville, Oklahoma and Gulf Railway Company shall accept this right of way upon express condition, binding upon itself, its successors, and assigns, that they will neither aid, advise, nor assist in any effort looking toward the changing or extinguishing the present tenure of the Indians in their lands, and will not attempt to secure from the Indian nations any further grant of land or its occupancy than hereinbefore provided: Provided, That any violation of the condition mentioned in this section shall operate as a forfeiture of all the rights and privileges of said railway company under this act.

Sec. 11. That all mortgages executed by said railway company conveying any portion of its railroad, with its franchises, that may be constructed in said Indian Territory shall be recorded in the Department of the Interior, and the record thereof shall be evidence and notice of their execution, and shall convey all rights and property of said company as therein expressed.

Sec. 12. That Congress may at any time amend, add to, alter, or repeal this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken on ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading; and the Speaker announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Division.

Mr. LOUD. I hope the gentleman will show a quorum.

The House divided; and there were—yeas 49, noes 2.

Mr. CHIPMAN. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I will ask for the yeas and nays. I am not willing that a bill that I offer shall be passed without a quorum any more than a bill offered by any other gentleman. [After a pause.] It is suggested that I can save time by taking the vote by tellers; and I therefore ask that the vote be taken by tellers.

The SPEAKER. No quorum having voted, the Chair will appoint tellers, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CHIPMAN] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] will take their places as tellers.

The tellers took their places, and the House proceeded to divide.

Pending the division,

Mr. HOLMAN said: Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 136, nays 3, not voting 189, as follows:

YEAS—136.

Mr. ENGLISH with Mr. BERGEN, on all political questions, until Wednesday and Thursday.

Mr. KRIBBS with Mr. HUFF, on all political questions, until Thursday next.

Mr. OWENS with Mr. ENOCHS, on all political questions, from April 2 until April 12, inclusive.

Mr. CAUSEY with Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania, on all political questions, until April 13.

Mr. SNODGRASS with Mr. HOUK of Tennessee, on all political questions, from April 6 until April 21, inclusive.

Mr. HOAR with Mr. BROSIUS, for one week.

Mr. JONES with Mr. HERMANN, for one week, commencing Monday, April 11, 1892.

Mr. NORTON with Mr. POWERS, for two weeks, from April 12, 1892.

Mr. BUNN with Mr. ATKINSON, from March 30, 1892, until canceled by consent of both.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I am paired, but I have voted in order to make a quorum.

The SPEAKER. There is no quorum.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, when my name was called the first time I did not hear it, and the second time I was examining some papers and my name was passed before I could answer.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman fail to hear his name?

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I heard it called, but did not answer in time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman understands the rule. If the gentleman states that he was in the Hall of the House and failed to hear his name, his vote will be recorded.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I was.

The vote of Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa was recorded.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall and did he fail to hear his name called?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Yes, sir.

The vote of Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee was recorded.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Speaker, although paired, I have voted to make a quorum.

Mr. McKEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, I was in the Hall and heard my name, but did not vote because I did not understand the measure. If it is in order I desire now to vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not entertain the gentleman's request, under the rule.

Mr. HUFF. Mr. Speaker, I voted to make a quorum. I am paired with Mr. KRIBBS.

The SPEAKER. On this vote the yeas are 136 and the nays 3. No quorum has voted.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that another vote be taken, which I have no doubt will show the presence of a quorum.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, can not that request be modified so as to provide for taking the vote on the passage of the bill instead of on the engrossment and third reading? I ask unanimous consent that the vote may be taken on the passage of the bill.

Mr. CHIPMAN rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the roll call having disclosed the absence of a quorum, no business is in order but a call of the House or a motion to adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The roll was called, when the following-named members failed to answer:

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state that my colleague on the Committee on Indian Affairs [Mr. PEEL] failed to respond because he was and is now engaged in a conference on the Indian appropriation bill at the Senate end of the Capitol.

The SPEAKER. The roll call shows the presence of 189 members.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs—

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, the bill before the House is interfering with the regular business on which we were engaged yesterday. I ask that the call for the yeas and nays on this bill be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] made a request which the Chair will now put—a request which would cover the gentleman's proposition.

Mr. BURROWS. As my colleague has this matter in charge, I withdraw my request.

The SPEAKER. What is the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT]?

Mr. HERBERT. I ask unanimous consent that the call for the yeas and nays upon the pending bill be dispensed with. There seems to be no objection to the bill itself.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays were ordered on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Very few members here seem to know what this bill is. It appears to be a measure of great importance. There has been no discussion, no explanation of the bill; the report has not been read. I do not know whether it is safe legislation or unsafe.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. CHIPMAN. Under the circumstances, I can not withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the pending bill be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I object.

Mr. CULBERSON. I hope that this bill will not be postponed. I wish to state that it is an ordinary bill granting right of way through the lands of the Indian nation for a railroad. It contains every safeguard usually put in a bill of this sort. It is an exact copy of hundreds of bills which have been passed here. I ask my friend from Michigan [Mr. CHIPMAN], in view of the fact that the gentleman from Alabama wishes to proceed with the appropriation bill, to withdraw his demand for the yeas and nays, and let this bill be passed.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Mr. Speaker, I find it impossible to refuse to grant any request made to me by the gentleman from Texas. [Laughter.] I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. As the yeas and nays were ordered by a vote of the House, unanimous consent is necessary to dispense with the call. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the order for the yeas and nays be revoked.

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being taken on the passage of the bill, there were on a division (called for by Mr. BERGEN)—ayes 101, noes 1.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. CULBERSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WARWICK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles: when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 418) to change the times for holding the circuit and district courts of the United States for the western district of Missouri;

A bill (S. 1342) for the relief of John R. Blankenship; and

A bill (S. 2388) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Oregon and Washington Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Columbia River, between the State of Oregon and the State of Washington, and to establish it as a post-road."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER, as the regular order of business, proceeded to call the committees for reports.

ACTING ASSISTANT SURGEONS DURING CIVIL WAR.

Mr. ROCKWELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 278) to commission acting assistant surgeons of the United States Army who served as medical officers during the late civil war; which was laid on the table.

Mr. ROCKWELL. As this is an important matter, I ask that the report be printed.

The report was ordered to be printed.

PERMANENT CENSUS BUREAU.

Mr. WILLCOX, from the Committee on the Eleventh Census, to which was referred a resolution introduced March 2, 1892, by Mr. TILLMAN, proposing that the committee inquire as to the expediency of the establishment of a permanent Census Bureau, reported the following resolution: which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That said committee [on the Eleventh Census] shall have power to send for persons and papers and to examine such witnesses as it may deem necessary to furnish to the committee the proper information relating to the subject of said inquiry; and that a sum not exceeding $1,000 be appropriated for that purpose, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. WILLCOX. I desire to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman now for that purpose. The regular order has been demanded.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The call of committees having been completed,

Mr. HERBERT said: I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. SHIVELY in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7093) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose last evening, the question pending was a point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER] is entitled to the floor on the point of order.

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Chairman, the interval since the close of yesterday's session has no doubt afforded you ample opportunity to investigate the point of order under discussion; hence I deem it unnecessary at present to make any further remarks. I reserve such comments as I may desire to make upon the general merits of the bill for the establishment of a dry dock at Algiers, La., for a future occasion.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, in the discussion on this question of order last evening, the whole drift of argument was applied to the maintenance of the idea of the great importance of the naval works to be provided for by the section of the bill in question.

It must be apparent to anyone who will consider the point of order without sentiment or prejudice, that a point of order could not be raised upon a question of mere advisability of a proposed work. It is merely a point of legal method of procedure under the rules of this House.

Section 2 of Rule XXI of the rules of this House reads as follows:

2. No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

There are two questions to be decided by the Chair. First, does the section in question propose "an expenditure not previously authorized by law"? It is admitted by the friends of the measure that the dry dock proposed to be built has not been authorized by law, nor has the purchase of the land for such work been authorized by any act of legislation.

The second question is, is the proposed expenditure in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress?

Every act of construction of works suggested in the section of the bill in question is an original work. But were this not the case the rule would apply unless the expenditure were in continuation of an appropriation. There is no pretense that any appropriation authorized by any former Congress is in process of application to any public work at Algiers, La., the location in question in this section of the bill.

If there has been no former appropriation for such work, there is no appropriation for this to be "in continuation of," as demanded by the rule.

So much for the technical and logical support of the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. It is certainly well taken, as I have no doubt the Chair will decide.

But permit me to present a few points in justification of the rule itself. What is the object of this rule, which prevents original legislation upon appropriation bills? It is quite evident that when this House adopted this rule the intention was to make every bill for a public work stand upon its own merits.

We have to-day a pointed exemplification of the necessity for thus guarding our legislative actions and preventing undue haste.

On this general appropriation bill for naval service this House has already agreed to limit the time for general discussion to five hours, and such general discussion is, by said agreement, not to begin until the section is reached which touches the subject of free ships.

That agreement compels the discussion of all prior sections under the five-minute rule. This section, which we are now indirectly considering, is thus to be acted upon, if not defeated by this question of order, under the five-minute rule.

It is evident that under such a rule no comprehensive consideration of the section for building a dry dock is in any manner possible.

One point I have in mind at the present time suggesting the situation in which we shall be placed if it should be decided that this kind of legislation is proper on an appropriation bill.

The Senate, as appears on page 1217 of the RECORD of the present Congress, has passed a bill covering this same subject, and that bill is now pending in this House. If the merits of the proposition should come up in the discussion of that bill we would have the privilege of unlimited debate, or at least debate with such limit as might then be agreed upon, whereas now, on this proposition to legislate upon an appropriation bill, we are confined to the discussion of a very important matter under the five-minute rule.

The very object of the rule against legislation on appropriation bills is that questions of great importance, like this, may have proper consideration before this House.

The case cited, the Senate bill, is instructive at this point. A bill is now pending upon the Speaker's table providing for this very work, and yet we assume here, in an appropriation bill, to legislate to establish this Government institution at that point, without proper consideration, in this quick, five-minute debate, and under the rule applicable in Committee of the Whole to bills at this stage. I think the value of this rule is very apparent.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is the Senate bill to which you refer?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, a Senate bill. It is now on the Speaker's table, having been held there under the rule. That covers the ground exactly, showing the object of the rule. It is a wise provision. It is a balance wheel to the machinery of legislative action.

Its wisdom is unquestioned, and in this case its application is direct. The rule only allows the expenditure when an appropriation formerly made is in process of expenditure "for public works and objects already in progress," when an additional appropriation may be made to continue such work.

Such a condition does not exist in this case, and it seems to me the point of order can not be otherwise than sustained by the Chair.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Mr. Chairman, this clause of the rule,

"for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress," presents, it seems to me, a very clear case in support of the pending proposition. The importance of this naval establishment will not, of course, and can not properly enter into this discussion. But it may have an effect on my mind, as I am very anxious to see the work inaugurated. I propose, however, to present briefly, without any desire to detain the Chair but a few moments, the legal aspects of the case as they strike me.

This enterprise is not now inaugurated for the first time. Under a resolution of the two Houses of Congress a Commission was raised to select a site for a navy-yard on the southern or Gulf coast. That Commission, as I understand, in pursuance of that law has already selected the point upon which this navy-yard and dry dock shall be constructed. Therefore I say it occurs to me that it is an object already in progress within the language of the rule. Anything once commenced—inaugurated—is in progress. This rule does not undertake to say how far an enterprise shall have progressed before it shall come within the terms of the rule; and admitting the construction of the rule placed upon it by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BUTLER], that this is simply to enable the House to well consider appropriations and not to enact law expending additional amounts of money upon an appropriation bill, it is sufficient answer to say that this enterprise has already been considered by the House and is a work already in progress. It has been commenced under the legislation of Congress: it is now in progress of location and construction so far as this Commission has been able to go; the location has been selected; it has been determined that a navy-yard and dry dock shall be established on the southern coast, and therefore the work is in progress.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Mississippi will pardon an interruption, is it not a fact that a bill has been passed by the Senate and is now pending in the House for this same purpose?

Mr. STOCKDALE. I do not know whether it has come to the House or not.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, yes; it is on the Speaker's table. It came from the Senate.

Mr. STOCKDALE. But that being true, Mr. Chairman, I do not think it will alter the situation before the Chair at this time. The action of the Senate could have no possible effect upon this House, or the rules of the House, and no effect upon the mind of the Chair, unless it be simply persuasive, as expressing their construction of the present status of this enterprise. The Senate might have passed the same bill, and yet passed an appropriation bill like this in all respects. If you want to go further and prescribe how much land shall be used, what shall be the size of the yard, what the manner of construction shall be, what materials shall enter into the construction of this great public improvement, even if there were a bill pending in this House now, introduced here, reported back by the Committee on Naval Affairs, it would not, in my judgment, alter the status of the pending proposition on the question of order now before the Chair.

I go upon the language of this rule. The Chairman of this committee must construe the rule; it can not be collaterally or inferentially construed by any possible action of the Senate. It must depend upon its own language; but it must depend to some extent, as all laws do, from the fundamental law of the land down, all must depend somewhat upon the history surrounding their passage. The history surrounding the passage or the adoption of this rule of the House, as it has been said, was to prevent the Committee on Appropriations from injecting into their bills new legislation that perhaps the House would not understand or perhaps the committee itself would not understand, and no opportunity would be given for that consideration to which such propositions are entitled. But that does not apply in the present instance, for the reason that this is not—if it can be called a general appropriation bill at all—this is not a bill that comes from the Committee on Appropriations. It comes from the committee specially raised to consider the very subject with which it deals here. The committee is presumed to know and understand what the country needs in this behalf better than any other committee of the House; and it is also a committee that is presumed to know and understand the force of the rules under which they act.

I for one would rather depend on the judgment of the Committee on Naval Affairs of this House, in the construction of such a rule, than to depend upon any collateral action of the Senate that might bear upon a construction of our rules.

The language of the rule strictly considered does not prohibit this construction of it, and unless this rule itself prohibited it, the Chair has no right to prohibit it. The argument of the gentleman from Indiana, as well as of the gentleman from Georgia, that this rule has saved this House millions of dollars, or such a rule as this, has nothing whatever to do with the legal construction of the rule. That would be a good argument in favor of the adoption of the rule. But surely if we are to be confined to the legal proposition, neither that nor the importance of the rule itself has anything to do with this construction, and the only thing that the Chair can take cognizance of is the language of the rule, its obvious intent, and the history surrounding its adoption by the House.

Now, the Chair will see, if he will look at that rule, that it does not prohibit any object that is in process of construction. The rule specifically excepts objects that are in progress. Now, how far must it progress before the Chairman can say that it is in progress? The history of this enterprise is that it is already in progress. It has gone very far towards construction. There has been the authorizing of this commission to select a point, which they did after a very thorough investigation all along the Atlantic coast and all along the Gulf coast, and they concluded to locate it here, 100 miles from the sea, on fresh water. That is progress. It is no objection to this construction to rail against it; it is simply a question of construction of the rule, upon its own language and its own history. I say this work is in progress. If that be true the Chair can not say that this paragraph is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on this question. The pending section of the bill under consideration provides, first, for the adoption of a site for a timber dry dock; second, for the purchase of land for such site, and third, for the construction of such timber dry dock. Against this section the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] raises the point of order that the appropriations contemplated are forbidden by section 2 of Rule XXI. That rule provides that—

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditures not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

No existing law has been called to the attention of the Chair authorizing the adoption of a site or the purchase of the land for such site or the erection of a structure thereon. The section under consideration is therefore in conflict with the rule. Then the question arises: Does this section come within the exception to the rule? It appears that no previous appropriations have been made for the purchase of land as a site or the erection of a structure upon such site, nor can the objects of the proposed appropriations be held to be public works or objects already in progress.

The intent of the rule is to exclude from general appropriation bills such subject-matter as involves new and original themes of discussion and new objects of appropriation. This is a general appropriation bill, and to such bills the rule by its terms is confined. An examination of the precedents that have been called to the attention of the Chair discloses a conflict of authority. As there is such conflict of authority, and as the provisions of the pending section appear to be in conflict with both the rule and the exception thereto, the point of order is sustained.

The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Having read as follows—

Bureau of provisions and clothing—

Mr. HERBERT said: I ask to strike out, on page 20, in line 5, and wherever else they occur on pages 20 and 21, the words "provisions and clothing," and to insert the words "supplies and accounts;" so that it will read:

Bureau of supplies and accounts.

The same words occur in line 19, and also in lines 7 and 8, on page 21.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman have the kindness to send that amendment to the Clerk's desk?

Mr. HERBERT. I will do so.

The Clerk read as follows:

On pages 20 and 21 substitute the words "Bureau of supplies and accounts," for the words "Bureau of provisions and clothing," wherever the same occur.

Mr. EVERETT. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill what is the object of this change?

Mr. HERBERT. I will state that the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing has been enlarged so that now that Bureau purchases all the supplies and keeps the accounts of the Navy, and this is a proper name to be substituted for the old name. The change was recommended by the present Secretary. It is simply for convenience, and the name is more appropriate. I am instructed by the committee to ask this amendment. It has no effect except merely to change the name.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For incidental expenses for naval vessels, yards, and the Bureau, such as foreign postage, telegrams, advertising, freight, photographing, books, stationery, and instruments, $10,000: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be applied to the engines, boilers, and machinery of wooden ships where the estimated cost of such repair shall exceed 10 per centum of the estimated cost of new engines and machinery of the same character and power; nor shall new boilers be constructed for wooden ships: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall deprive the Secretary of the Navy of the authority to cause the necessary repairs and preservation of the United States ships Hartford and Kearsarge, or to order repairs of the engines, boilers, and machinery of ships damaged in foreign waters or on the high seas, so far as may be necessary to bring them home.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] if there should not be an amendment on page 27 under the head of Bureau of Steam Engineering. There are three items. The last item of the three I will read.

For incidental expenses for naval vessels, yards, and the Bureau, such as foreign postage, telegrams, advertising, freight, photographing, books, stationery, and instruments, $10,000: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be applied to the engines, boilers, and machinery of wooden ships where the estimated cost of such repair shall exceed 10 per cent of the estimated cost of new engines and machinery of the same character and power; nor shall new boilers be constructed for wooden ships.

Now, my friend will see that that proviso only applies to the last paragraph, which appropriates $10,000. I suggest that the way to correct that would be to insert the words "in all" so much, and then add the proviso. Otherwise it will only apply to the last paragraph.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask unanimous consent that that correction be made. It is simply a transposition.

Mr. HOLMAN. Or you can add the words below.

Mr. HERBERT. I will offer that amendment. I move to amend by inserting, in line 3, page 27, before the proviso, the words "in all, $650,000."

Mr. HOLMAN. Then the proviso will apply to the whole.

Mr. HERBERT. Those words I think were in the original bill, but somehow or other they were omitted from the printed bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. That will cover the whole bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For repair of barracks: At Portsmouth, N. H.; Boston, Mass.; Brooklyn, N. Y.; League Island, Pennsylvania; Annapolis, Md.; headquarters and navy-yard, Washington, D. C.; Norfolk, Va.; Pensacola, Fla.; Mare Island, California; and Sitka, Alaska; and per diem for enlisted men employed under the direction of the Quartermaster's Department on the repair of barracks and other public buildings, $10,000.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the section just read, by inserting, after the word "California," in line 8, on page 36, the words "Port Royal, S. C."

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by inserting, in line 8, after the word "California," the words "Port Royal, S. C."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent Marine Corps: For freight, ferriage, tolls, cartage, funeral expenses of marines, stationery, telegraphing, rent of telephones, purchase and repair of typewriters, apprehension of stragglers and deserters, per diem of enlisted men employed on constant labor for a period not less than ten days, repair of gas and water fixtures, office and barracks, furniture, mess utensils for enlisted men, such as bowls, plates, spoons, knives, forks, packing boxes, wrapping paper, oilcloth, crash, rope, twine, camphor, and carbolic paper, carpenter's tools, tools for police purposes, iron safes, purchase and repair of public wagons, purchase and repair of harness, purchase of public horses, services of veterinary surgeons and medicine for public horses, purchase and repair of hose, repair of fire extinguishers, purchase of fire hand grenades, purchase and repair of carts and wheelbarrows, purchase and repair of cooking stoves, ranges, stoves, and furnaces where there are no grates, purchase of ice, towels, and soap for offices, postage stamps for foreign postage, purchase of newspapers and periodicals, improving parade grounds, repair of pumps and wharves, laying drain and water pipes, introducing gas, and for gas, gas oil, and maintenance of electric lights, straw for bedding, mattresses, mattress covers, pillows, wire bunk bottoms for enlisted men at the various posts, furniture for Government houses and repair of same, and for all emergencies and extraordinary expenses arising at home and abroad, but impossible to anticipate or classify; in all, $27,500.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment. On page 38, in line 6, after the words "purchase of," insert the word "books;" and also, in line 8, insert, after the words "water pipes," the word "water." It does not change the amount of the appropriation, but inserts words that were omitted.

The amendments were read, as follows:

On page 38, line 6, after the words "purchase of," insert the word "books;" also, in line 8, insert, after the words "water pipes," the word "water."

The amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

INCREASE OF THE NAVY.

That for the purpose of further increasing the naval establishment of the United States, the President is hereby authorized to have constructed, by contract, one armored cruiser of about 8,000 tons displacement of the general type of armored cruiser No. 2 (New York), to cost, exclusive of armament, not more than $3,500,000, excluding any premium that may be paid for increased speed and the cost of armament. The contract for the construction of said cruiser shall contain provisions to the effect that the contractor guarantees that when completed and tested for speed, under conditions to be prescribed by the Navy Department, it shall exhibit a speed of at least 20 knots per hour, and for every quarter knot of speed so exhibited above said guaranteed speed the contractor shall receive a premium over and above the contract price of $50,000; and for every quarter knot that such vessels falls of reaching said guaranteed speed there shall be deducted from the contract price the sum of $50,000. In the construction of said vessel all the provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled "An act to increase the naval establishment," as to material for said vessel, its engines, boilers, and machinery, the contract under which it is built, the notice of and proposals for the same, the plans, drawings, specifications therefor, and the method of executing said contract, shall be observed and followed, and said vessel shall be built in compliance with the terms of said act, save that in all its parts said vessel shall be of domestic manufacture. If the Secretary of the Navy shall be unable to contract at reasonable prices for the building of said vessel, then he may build such vessel in such navy-yard as he may designate.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on this paragraph, under the head of "Increase of the Navy." I make the point of order that the provision is out of order, under the second clause of Rule XXI. I submit to the Chair that the question presented is identical with that in regard to the dry dock, upon which the opinion of the Chair has already been pronounced.

Mr. DINGLEY. Does not the gentleman know that the principle in that case is entirely different from this? The construction of vessels has been entered upon, and they are a part of the naval establishment. This is simply a continuance of work already in progress, and the question has been ruled upon many times.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will say to the gentleman from Maine that this stands upon the same footing as a dry dock does to the naval establishment. A light-house is connected with the other light-houses and is an auxiliary to the naval establishment. Now, a light-house is just as much an auxiliary to the naval establishment and a dry dock is just as much an auxiliary to a naval establishment as a ship. They stand upon the same footing. If a dockyard, a light-house, or a ship, or either one is to be considered a continuation of a work already in progress, why then all the others come under the same heading? The logic is inevitable.

I admit that there have been conflicts of opinion upon this subject; but I submit as adjuncts, as pertaining to the naval establishment, there are three things pertinent and practical. One is a ship, another is a dockyard, and the other is a light-house. The Chair has already held that as to the dockyard, it is subject to the point of order, because it is not a "work in progress." How can my friend in the chair, looking at this from a practical standpoint, rule that a ship, which is part of a general system of work, but independent in itself, to be a continuation of a public work, and at the same time hold that we can not appropriate money for the construction of a light-house until a law had been enacted to authorize the construction of that light-house? How can the Chair decide two different ways on this question?

Mr. DINGLEY. Does not the gentleman know that each light-house is a separate and independent work, and that it has no connection with any other, just as a hospital at Eastport is different from a hospital at San Francisco?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do; and a ship floating on the North Pacific or on the North Atlantic, thousands of miles away from each other, is connected with the same branch of the public service. Such a ship and a light-house stand upon the same footing.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is not my friend aware that a provision providing for a new ship for the Navy has invariably been ruled to be in order, not only by several Speakers some years back, but also by Speaker CARLISLE. In the case he decided a point of order was made against the construction of a naval vessel, and he held that it was not good.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the rulings have been conflicting, and it has been held not to be in order. I do not think Speaker CARLISLE ever held, and I think the gentleman will not be able to find a case where he ever indicated, that the construction of a ship which has not been provided for by previous law was in order on an appropriation bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is not my friend aware that for several Congresses, during each session of Congress, the construction of vessels has been provided for on appropriation bills, and none was ever ruled out on a point of order?

Mr. HOLMAN. In the last Congress an objection was raised by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] to such a provision, and Mr. Butterworth (then in the chair) expressed no opinion himself, except one of regret, as I think I may properly say, that the subject had been passed upon; but he felt bound by the precedents. Now, the precedents are not all one way.

Mr. HERBERT. Does my friend mean to say that Mr. KILGORE did not follow the precedents?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am speaking of what Gen. Butterworth said.

In the Forty-ninth Congress, when the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY] was in the chair, when this point of order was made, he overruled the point of order on the ground of precedents. A careful examination of all the precedents bearing on this class of legislation and subjects simply reveals a conflict of opinion. But the language of this rule is too plain to talk about. How is it in the nature of things possible that a ship costing a million of dollars can be considered as a work already in progress? Here is a ship the cost of which is proposed to be $3,500,000. How can it be possible that a light-house costing $10,000 or a public building costing $35,000 is not in order on an appropriation bill, and yet a vessel costing $3,500,000 can be put on an appropriation bill without previous legislation? The object of the rule was to require deliberation and to prevent riders. The purpose was that there should first be legislation, and upon that basis of legislation you should make an appropriation; and if any gentleman in the House has been more strenuous than another against riders it has been my friend from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

Mr. DINGLEY. Certainly; but this is not a rider.

Mr. HOLMAN. And yet it is obvious that if it is possible to build one ship it is possible to build a navy on an appropriation bill without a word of preceding legislation authorizing it. It is possible to go further; it is possible to build any structure connected with the Navy. A ship is no more a part of the naval system, no more under the control of the Navy Department, than a light-house.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is exactly what I thought the gentleman's idea of the Navy was, that it had nothing to do with ships. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. A ship is no more a necessary part of the naval system than a light-house or a dry dock. You can not carry on navigation without ships, or without dry docks, or without light-houses. How can you navigate the high seas without light-houses? How can you carry on navigation without having means and appliances for repairing your ships?

Mr. POST. Columbus did not have any. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCOTT. And he had "a rocky time," too. [Laughter.]

Mr. DINGLEY. Does my friend [Mr. HOLMAN] deny that it has always been ruled in this House that an item in an appropriation bill providing for the construction of a new naval vessel was in order? Has not that been the established precedent and ruling here, without going into other points?

Mr. HOLMAN. I will say this. The first ruling of that character that I remember was the one made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY], presiding over the Committee of the Whole. That was in the Forty-ninth Congress. But let us understand the point of difference under this Rule XXI. I assume, of course, that it is claimed that the construction of a ship in this way is authorized under the exception in the rule. The rule provides that—

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law—

Now, my friend, [Mr. DINGLEY], has always insisted on that principle.

Mr. DINGLEY. Read further.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly. I am going to read further— unless in continuation of an appropriation for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

"In continuation of an appropriation." Can my friend say that this provision in the pending bill is a continuation of an appropriation for a public work, this provision for a new ship costing three millions and a half, never appropriated for or authorized before?

Mr. DINGLEY. But has not that question been settled by repeated precedents here?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have conceded twice that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY] did so rule, very much to my regret.

Mr. DINGLEY. Not only he, but others.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not remember any other case.

Mr. DINGLEY. Speaker CARLISLE also.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will my friend from Indiana permit me to remind him that Speaker CARLISLE, Mr. Cox—

Mr. HOLMAN. No; not Mr. Cox.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Yes; Speaker CARLISLE, Mr. Cox, Mr. Wellborn, Governor MCCREARY, of Kentucky, and Mr. Butterworth of Ohio, consecutively, have ruled that the construction of a ship or ships is a necessary and essential part of the maintenance of the naval establishment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now I understand my friend's proposition, and I concede a part of what he contends for. Mr. Cox, however, did not rule on this question.

Mr. BOUTELLE. He ruled on a cognate question.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, on a cognate question, and I am arguing this question on the force of cognates. [Laughter.] I am arguing that a light-house is cognate to the Navy and that a dry dock is cognate to the Navy. I concede that in some sense these matters are all cognate. Mr. Cox simply ruled that, on public ground, at your West Point Academy, you might erect an additional building connected with the existing educational system at that Academy.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Does the gentleman draw a distinction between the construction of a building connected with the system of education at West Point and the construction of a ship connected with the naval system.

Mr. HOLMAN. We have to draw the distinction, or else what shall we do with the light-houses?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I am not doing anything with the light-houses.

Mr. WATSON. You wanted to, though, just as much as you want this.

Mr. HOLMAN. We exclude a light-house costing only $10,000 unless there has been proper legislation authorizing it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I am not excluding anything.

Mr. HOLMAN. But we do exclude it. We exclude that light-house, costing $10,000, and yet the gentleman contends that a vessel costing three and a half millions may come in under this rule! The injury to the rule, the injury to the principle of proper legislation, the injury to the public service is just as great in the one case as in the other, and the amount involved is much greater.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But the gentleman from Indiana understands perfectly well that the question of what is excluded and what is not excluded by the provisions of our rules is entirely a matter of precedent and construction, and the construction of the House has been uniformly for ten years past as I have stated.

Mr. HOLMAN. In the first place I have shown to the satisfaction, I think, of even the gentleman from Maine that the decision cited as having been made by Mr. Cox is not in point.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But Mr. Cox cited Speaker CARLISLE'S previous decision on the very question of ships; Mr. Cox's ruling was based, as I stated, upon the principle involved in the previous ruling of Speaker CARLISLE in regard to ships.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have never seen any such decision of Speaker CARLISLE, though I have made as careful search for it as I could. Mr. Cox must certainly have referred to some passing expression of Speaker CARLISLE—not to a deliberate decision—at least I think not. As I have stated, I have not been able to find any such decision.

Now, as to the opinion of Mr. Butterworth, he expressed regret that the precedents seem to be in favor of this ruling. But the subject has never been so fully discussed since I have been in this House as it was yesterday—

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman will allow me to say that the ruling of Mr. Butterworth was clear and explicit.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, read it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Cox, in the West Point decision, made this statement—

Mr. HOLMAN. I know as to that. Let us hear the Butterworth decision.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman will allow me to cite the language of Mr. Cox:

Without reference to other decisions made from the Chair, either in Committee of the Whole or otherwise, the present occupant of the chair is informed that the Speaker of the House, on a former appropriation bill, held that an appropriation for the construction of a new vessel was in continuation of the general object of maintaining the Navy; and that decision of the Speaker runs on all-fours with the decision which the Chair now makes when he overrules the point of order

Mr. HOLMAN. Does Mr. Cox mention when or in what particular case that decision of Speaker CARLISLE was made?

Mr. BOUTELLE. No, sir, but—

Mr. HOLMAN. And nobody else has ever done so on this floor.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have no question of the fact that such a decision was made; I simply have not looked it up.

Mr. HOLMAN. It can not be found.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I should suppose that three, four, or five consecutive rulings year after year would sufficiently establish the policy of the House to convince even the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, I hope my friend will read the Butterworth decision.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Here is the decision of Mr. Butterworth. He cited this very ruling—

Mr. HOLMAN. That is to say, he cites the fact that Mr. Cox had said that Speaker CARLISLE had so ruled.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Butterworth refers to the fact that Mr. Cox had so ruled on the West Point case. Mr. Butterworth says—

A decision was rendered covering the same point by the gentleman from New York (Mr. Cox). The Chair thinks it is in order to make an appropriation for the construction of the Navy on this appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is that all he says?

Mr. BOUTELLE (reading):

The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, I know; but does he not say something preceding that, as to the precedents?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not see anything.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does he not express some doubt—

Mr. BOUTELLE. He does not express any doubt in this ruling.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly he does in his statement of the case.

Mr. BOUTELLE. After examining the whole question, Mr. Butterworth says:

A decision was rendered, covering the same point, by the gentleman from New York (Mr. Cox). The Chair thinks it is in order to make an appropriation for the construction of the Navy on this appropriation bill. The Chair overrules the point of order, but will recognize the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Cannon) to move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to say a single word. Either I do not understand the reason of the rule, or the Chair does not. I will ask the Chair if he has had his attention called to the last sentence in clause 2 of Rule XXI?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did have his attention called to that; and the decision of Mr. Cox covers the very point which the gentleman states.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, we know what Mr. Cox decided, and how plausible the decision was, and how different the question then was from that now before the Chair.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But the same gentleman went on to cite still another ruling. He cited the ruling of Mr. Wellborn and that of Speaker CARLISLE.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, I have never seen the Wellborn decision. We can only determine this question by the decisions which have been brought before the House.

Mr. SCOTT. I wish to ask this question: Supposing that Mr. Cox, Mr. Butterworth, and other gentlemen when acting as chairmen of the Committee of the Whole did decide in the manner cited, has not this House the right to interpret its rules for itself?

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, yes; that is what I have been contending for. In this matter the three branches of the naval service can not be distinguished from each other; the light-house, the dry dock, and the ship are parts of one common system; yet we all agree that as to two of these, the light-house and the dry dock, there must be preceding legislation before under this rule you can make an appropriation of money for such purpose in a bill of this kind.

Mr. HERBERT. Will the gentleman allow this question, which I hope he will answer—

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HERBERT. You say that there are conflicting decisions upon this point?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask the gentleman whether there have been any conflicting decisions, then, upon this question, when it was presented directly, of the power to put on an appropriation bill a provision for the building of a new ship? I say there has been no conflict of authority in that case, and I want the gentleman to answer if he knows of any exception to it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why, Mr. Chairman, I have conceded that the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. McCREARY) so decided, and further, since the RECORD has been searched, it seems that Mr. Butterworth so decided. I have never seen the decision of Mr. Wellborn of Texas, which has been referred to. But I submit, sir, that this rule, as I contended on yesterday in the discussion of a similar point, does not admit of interpretation. A court could not interpret it, because the language is clear, distinct, and explicit: no man can contend in reference to the decisions or the class of decisions holding that a light-house can not be appropriated for without preëxisting law or that a dockyard can be provided for without law. I say, in view of such decisions, no man can put any other interpretation upon this rule than that no ship can be constructed without preëxisting law.

Mr. BOUTELLE. If the gentleman will pardon me, he is hardly justified in stating as broadly as he does that the rulings of the House have been against the building of dockyards.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why, undoubtedly.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. That is not the case. The question has been brought up here and repeatedly decided that an appropriation for constructing a dry dock at an existing navy-yard was in order under this rule, and we have appropriated time out of mind on our bills for just such structures.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is in harmony, as my friend will see, with the decision of Mr. Cox. But this is an entirely different proposition.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will the gentleman, even from his insular position on the banks of the Ohio River, undertake to say to this House and the country that the building of a dry dock is more appropriate for the maintenance of the naval establishment than the construction of a ship?

Mr. HOLMAN. No; not at all. They stand on the same footing. They are a part of the same thing.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Exactly, a part of the Navy. That is just what I say. But the ship is the essential part.

Mr. HOLMAN. And the rule of the House has been repeatedly construed that the dry dock, where you purchased land for its erection, must be constructed only after the law has been enacted making provision for such construction.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Oh, the gentleman from Indiana is entirely in error. Ever since I have been a member of this House we have appropriated for five or six dry docks on the naval appropriation bill, on the principle that it was for the maintenance of the naval establishment.

Mr. HOLMAN. When the point of order was made?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Yes; made and overruled.

Mr. HOLMAN. In what case?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Why, I think the gentleman himself made the point as far back as the Forty-ninth Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no recollection, but it may be correct.

Mr. DINGLEY. If the gentleman will pardon me, there is a distinction in principle between an appropriation for the construction of a dry dock in an existing navy-yard and where the yard does not exist.

Mr. HOLMAN. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the construction of a ship is an entirely different question from the construction of a dry dock at a navy-yard or a building at the West Point Military Academy.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Why?

Mr. HOLMAN. For this reason, as the gentleman will see at once: In the construction of a dry dock at a navy-yard and the erection of a building on the West Point grounds it may be held that the ruling of Chairman Cox was correct; but here you do not propose that this ship shall be constructed in a given navy-yard.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Why, certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no; you may let it out by contract to any of the great ship-yards in the Delaware River or elsewhere.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Ah, but the gentleman entirely misses the analogy that the building of a dry dock as a part of a navy-yard stands precisely on the same footing as the building of a ship as a part of the Navy.

Mr. HOLMAN. But, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. BOUTELLE. But before the gentleman closes I want to call his attention to the further point, and ask if it is not a fact, that in the interpretation of our rules, the precedents that have been fixed and established—collated, compiled, and printed in our Manual—indicate clearly that the rulings in favor of the building of ships on appropriation bills were uniform, and that there is not a single ruling to the contrary.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not know of the existence of any rulings except those which have been referred to in the course of this debate.

But I wish to say, and my friend must see, that this rule should be enforced, and that if it is not there is no protection to the Treasury, for you can give such latitude to construction in favor of appropriations as against the interests of the Treasury as would be a serious matter to the people of the country.

The trouble is here: You try to put an interpretation upon this rule which will throw open the doors of the Treasury, while the rule is intended to protect the Treasury.

Mr. BOUTELLE. My answer to that is that there is not one thing in connection with the Navy against which a point of order ought not to lie more emphatically than against the building of ships; because if there is any one thing that preeminently and paramently goes with the maintenance of a naval establishment, it is the building of ships.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why, certainly, just as much as a light-house.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is the beginning and end and object of a navy.

Mr. HOLMAN. A light-house is equally necessary and convenient. Now, Mr. Chairman, the point to which I wish to call the attention of the Chair is this, that this is not a structure which must necessarily be constructed in a Government navy-yard, because the last clause contains these words:

If the Secretary of the Navy shall be unable to contract at reasonable prices for the building of such vessel, then he may build such vessel in such navy-yard as he may designate.

But before that, by the terms of this provision, the language is as follows:

That for the purpose of further increasing the naval establishment of the United States, the President is hereby authorized to have constructed by contract—

Not upon Government grounds, not in a Government navy-yard, but by contract, at any place—

Mr. BOUTELLE. If the gentleman will read a little further he will find that if the Secretary of the Navy fails to make such contract, he is authorized to do the work in the navy-yards of the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly; but he may build them by contract.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Of course he may.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, then, the effect is the same as if the other clause was not in there at all?

Mr. DINGLEY. This is an old provision.

Mr. BOUTELLE. This is not a new provision.

Mr. DINGLEY. That was in the old appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is new on this bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It is identical with the words of the law of 1886, passed by a Democratic House.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the rule is not to protect the public Treasury, the hard earnings of our people, then of course my friend is right.

Mr. BOUTELLE. We do not expect to build ships and then cheat the contractors out of the price. If the gentleman from Indiana expects these ships to be paid for—it is not to be expected that they are to be paid for out of the pockets of individuals.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Will my friend from Indiana allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Do I understand you to say that you introduced what is known as the Holman amendment—

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not say anything about it.

Mr. CUMMINGS (continuing). That you introduced section 2 of Rule XXI for the express purpose of preventing the building of vessels by an act passed in an appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I said nothing about it. I have not referred to the Holman rule, or any other rule, except the rule that is known as the second clause of Rule XXI.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Did you say that you had this object in view?

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not say that I had any object in view.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Oh, this is an aimless kind of a rule.

Mr. HOLMAN (continuing). Except the public safety.

Mr. HERBERT. I asked the gentleman from Indiana, while he was on the floor, if he could cite any decision at all upon the direct question now before this committee that was contrary to these decisions to which the Chair has been cited. He has failed to give us any such decision. In fact, he admits that there is none. When he says that there is a contrariety in the decisions he undertakes to show that contrariety or contradiction by citing decisions which he says are upon analogous cases, as, for instance, in the matter of light-houses. Now, the gentleman went too far out of the way when he said that a light-house was a part of the Navy.

Mr. HOLMAN. An adjunct to the Navy.

Mr. HERBERT. Light-houses are not even under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. HOLMAN. Light-houses are adjuncts to the Navy.

Mr. HERBERT. They are under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, and not the Secretary of the Navy at all. They form no part of the Navy whatever, and I was surprised to hear the gentleman say he supposed they did form any part of it. Now, he says the decision already made by the Chair covers this case, that the point is the same; yet he argued yesterday evening that there was a difference.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. HERBERT. The difference is—and it might well have been in the mind of the Chair—that a new navy-yard is not as necessary a part of the Navy as ships are; that a dock to be erected at a navy-yard or upon a naval reservation might itself bear the same relation to that naval reservation that the ships bear to the Navy; but the dock itself does not bear the same relation to the Navy as ships bear to the Navy. I have no idea in the world that the Chair, in making that ruling, intended to overturn these uniform decisions from 1887 down to the present time.

The first time, according to my knowledge, that the direct question was ever brought before the House, was in the Forty-ninth Congress, on February 26, 1887. The decision in that case was rendered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY], who was Chairman at that time. I state to the Chair now that after a consultation with Speaker CARLISLE as to how I, as chairman of the committee, could properly get before the House a provision for new ships, he suggested to me that I should put it upon the appropriation bill.

We put it there, or the committee put it there at my instance. We brought it into the House, and the same gentleman from Indiana who makes this point made the point then. Mr. McCREARY was in the chair and he ruled on it directly. That gentleman in his ruling said:

The general rule has been stated by the gentleman from Indiana. It is laid down in subsection 3. of Rule XXI, and provides that—

3. No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law.

But to that general rule there is an express exception, as follows:

Unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

That is to say, if the work be a public work, or if the object is a public object, and it is already in progress, then there need not be any previous legislation authorizing it. The Chair believes that the construction of a navy is a public object or a public work, and the language of the bill which we have been considering, and the appropriation made at the last session show that the construction of the Navy is in progress. It may be said, also, that the proposed amendment providing money for the construction of vessels does not change existing law, and is not prohibited by law.

It is very agreeable to the present occupant of the Chair to be able to refer to a precedent bearing upon the point of order now raised. In the Forty-sixth Congress [Mr. CAULFIELD in the Chair] it was decided "that appropriations for public works and objects," already in progress could be included in general appropriation bills, or could be inserted as amendments; and that the word "objects" meant something in addition to the word "works," and must be held to include the public Departments of the Government, and the civil, military, and naval establishments recognized by law and supported by the Government.

Mr. HOLMAN. That goes too far for you.

Mr. HERBERT. It covers a great deal more than this. The point of the decision is this, that this provision of this bill is in order. It is a direct, a point blank decision; and that decision has been followed from that day to this. I believe there has been no session of Congress since then at which we did not order the building of some ships. At every session every ship ordered was upon an appropriation bill, and our friend from Indiana has been instant on every occasion to make this same objection; and every time it has been made it has been overruled. Now, if decisions become fixed rules of action, the decision in this case certainly has.

Mr. HOLMAN. Upon analogous cases the rulings have been, but in other cases they have been otherwise.

Mr. HERBERT. I am speaking about this proposition upon this particular question. It does not admit of reasoning at all. We need not go here and there to hunt up analogous decisions. We have decisions on the same point Congress after Congress, by Chairman after Chairman; the objection being made in every case by the same gentleman and every Chairman overruling him on the point.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no; others have had the honor of making the same point of order.

Mr. HERBERT. And others have had the honor of being overruled on the same point of order. But that does not matter. The simple question before the Chair now is, whether he will overrule decisions which have been uniform for five years. It is useless to go here and there to find analogous cases. The gentleman from Indiana sought to get the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] to say that Mr. Butterworth, when he was in the chair, said that he made the ruling with "regret."

Mr. HOLMAN. With "reluctance."

Mr. HERBERT. With "reluctance." Well, now, I am very glad to have that called out. That shows what a gentleman like Mr. Butterworth, an able lawyer, thinks of the force of precedents. That is conclusive that, although he himself did not agree with the reasonings upon which these rulings had been made prior to that time, although he followed them with reluctance, yet he felt bound to do it. Bound why? Because as a lawyer he knew, as any lawyer raised in America knew, the binding force of precedents.

Mr. DINGLEY. Now, I desire to call the attention of my friend from Alabama for a single moment to the fact that these decisions have been uniform, not simply for five years but for twelve years.

Mr. HOLMAN. Only four cases have been decided, and the point of order was not made by me except in two instances.

Mr. HERBERT. I am simply addressing myself to the cases that were precisely identical with the question here.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HERBERT. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. HERBERT. I yield for a question.

Mr. BUTLER. Suppose in the appropriation bill for the military service there was a section providing for an increase in the regular Army by five regiments and an appropriation of money to carry it out, would you consider that work in progress?

Mr. HERBERT. I shall not be driven from the one point that I make to the Chair, and to this committee, and that is that this is a decided question. If there is anything whatever in the doctrine of stare decisis, it applies here. There can not be any doubt about it, and it has additional force here for this reason: Every Congress adopts its own rules. When that ruling was made in the Forty-ninth Congress upon this point, under Rule XXI, and when we find a succeeding House, the Fiftieth, adopting the same rule, then the law says, and the decisions all are, that the adoption of a previous law without any change in that law, is to be taken as an adoption of the law, with the decisions under it.

That was done by the Fiftieth Congress. Then the Fifty-first Congress came along and adopted the same rule with the super-added decisions made in the Fiftieth Congress. Then we come to this Fifty-second Congress and this House adopts the rule again, with the decisions made in the Fifty-first and the Fiftieth and the Forty-ninth Congresses. And I call the attention of the Chair to the fact, which I stated yesterday, that when this rule was presented to this House for adoption, having been reported from the Committee on Rules, I considered the question whether or not there was anything in it that would prevent an appropriation for the building of ships, and discussing it with my colleagues on the Naval Committee, we came to the conclusion that there was not.

We also took the pains to come to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and ask him whether there was anything in the language of Rule XXI that would make the decision on a point of this kind different from what it had been in preceding Congresses, and he said no, although he did not agree with those decisions. Now, here is a rule, adopted in Congress after Congress, acted upon, Congress after Congress, by members of this House when they voted that it should become the rule of this House; and if, after all those precedents, this Chair is to overrule every one of them and hold, on some vague analogies which the gentlemen from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has brought up, that this point of order is well taken, then he must do it on the ground that, so far as he is concerned, he has no respect for the decisions of his predecessors.

He may, in the language of Mr. Butterworth, "regret" to follow their ruling, but he is bound to do it, as Mr. Butterworth did; and when that distinguished gentleman, Mr. Butterworth, followed the established ruling, with regret, as he said, feeling bound to do so, that was another added decision to make any subsequent Chairman indisposed to disturb the settled rule and practice of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the gentleman sits down I wish to call his attention to a case exactly in point.

Mr. HERBERT. Is it about ships? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. It is about a little ship. This was in 1886, on the bill containing appropriations for the customs service. I have not had time to read anything but the point made and the decision of the Chairman.

I read now from the RECORD:

The Clerk read as follows:

"Watch Point light station, Lake Champlain, New York: For the reestablishment of a light on Watch Point, Lake Champlain, New York, $500."

That is not three millions and a half, I admit, but it may illustrate this point.

"Steam tender for the fourth light-house district: For building and completing new steam tender for service in fourth light-house district, $68,300." Mr. McMILLIN. I make the point of order on the provision for the steam tender.

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order upon the preceding provision in regard to Watch Point light station.

Mr. LONG. Too late.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Clardy] addressed the Chair while the Clerk was passing to the next paragraph.

Mr. RANDALL [who appears to have had charge of the bill]. I do not desire to take advantage of anybody here.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Clardy] to make the point of order on this provision in regard to Watch Point light station?

Mr. CLARDY. I undertook to make the point, because this is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. If that fact is not controverted the point of order will be sustained. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CANNON. I would be glad to know what paragraph this point is made on.

Mr. McMILLIN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on this steam-tender paragraph. It may be a very proper appropriation, but there is no law to authorize it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have not had time to look back to see who was the Chairman, but I have no doubt that he was properly in the chair and made a proper decision.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to be heard upon that point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CANNON. I raise the question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. Randall discussed the subject, Mr. McMILLIN and others discussed it, and the finale seems to be this:

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and from that decision an appeal has been taken to the committee. The question is now, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee? The decision of the Chair was sustained.

I simply read that by way of interlude, so that my friend from Alabama may discuss the point.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Does the gentleman think that is an analogous case?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to make a single remark. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is of course aware that provisions similar to the one now under discussion have been reported on the naval appropriation bill in former Congresses. Can the gentleman direct the attention of the Chair to a case in which such provisions have been ruled out on a point of order?

Mr. DINGLEY, Mr. BOUTELLE, and others. That is it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not think it possible for the gentleman to refer the Chair to a case where such a provision as this has been ruled out on the naval appropriation bill on a point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have already stated that except the decision of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY]—

A MEMBER. What decision was that?

Mr. BOUTELLE (to Mr. HOLMAN). You understand the Chair asks whether you can point to any decision where, on a point of order being raised, an appropriation of this kind has been ruled out on a naval appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understood the question of the Chair. With the exception, as I have already stated, of the decision made by the gentleman from Kentucky—

Mr. BOUTELLE (to Mr. McCREARY). You did not rule out any such provision as this?

Mr. McCREARY. I desire to say that I specially ruled in a provision of this kind.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will come to that in a moment. I say that with the exception of the decision of the gentleman from Kentucky—

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman—

Mr. HOLMAN. Permit me to answer this question. I have already stated that with the exception of the decision made by the gentleman from Kentucky, which the Chair well understands, and that by Mr. Butterworth—with the exception of those two decisions—

Mr. BOUTELLE. And the decision of Mr. Wellborn.

Mr. HOLMAN. No; I mention only those two. I have never seen the decision of Mr. Wellborn; it is not presented here. I say again that with the exception of those two decisions, both of which are before the Chair, I do not recall any ruling on this question. But I submit—

Mr. McCREARY. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. McCREARY. The decision rendered by myself, to which the gentleman refers, was, I believe, in the year 1887.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think so.

Mr. McCREARY. I desire to ask the gentleman whether he does not remember that the same decision was rendered when the naval appropriation bill was under consideration in 1888 and in 1889—

Mr. HOLMAN. By whom?

Mr. McCREARY. By myself. I was in the chair, but no exception was made to that ruling; no appeal was taken.

Mr. HOLMAN. The opinion of the gentleman from Kentucky is before the Chair.

Mr. McCREARY. I wish to say to my friend from Indiana that I know of no decision rendered by any Chairman of the Committee of the Whole when the naval appropriation bill was under consideration that was in opposition to the decision rendered by me. If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has such a decision let him present it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, the opinion of the gentleman from Kentucky has been before the Chair all the time—yesterday as well as to-day. The Chair understands exactly what the gentleman decided. I am only saying that the decision made by the gentleman from Kentucky and that made by Mr. Butterworth are the only decisions on this point that I recall; and they were both in favor of retaining in the bill an appropriation for the building of a ship.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I again remind the gentleman of the decision of Mr. Wellborn, of Texas.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have not seen that.

Mr. McCREARY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana one other question.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. McCREARY. After the decision rendered in 1887, admitting an amendment appropriating money for the construction of war ships, was there ever even a point of order raised on similar provisions in the three succeeding years when the naval appropriation bill came up?

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman understands very well that, he being in the chair on each of the occasions referred to, of course no point of order was made. The first decision was, of course, his decision; certainly he did not expect that the same point of order would be submitted to him over and over again. Of course he would not go back on his own record.

A MEMBER. And the committee would not.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the indulgence of the Chair for only two or three moments longer. I call attention to the fact that here is a case strictly in point:

Watch Point light station, Lake Champlain, New York: For the reestablishment of a light on Watch Point, Lake Champlain, New York, $500.
Steam tender for the fourth light-house district—

Does any gentleman say that an appropriation for a ship is any more an appropriation in continuation of a public work in progress, or is any more a part of the naval system, than an appropriation for a light-house and tender is a part of the light-house system?

Steam tender for the fourth light-house district: For building and completing a new steam tender for service in the fourth light-house district, $98,300.

This provision the Chair ruled out of order as not authorized by existing law; an appeal was taken, and the House sustained the Chair.

I have the pleasure of presenting a case analogous, clearly in point, where the House decided what the rule was—the House itself on an appeal.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BUNTING having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles: in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 136) for the presentation of badges to the officers and men of the Greely relief expedition;

A bill (S. 263) for the relief of the heir or heirs of John Howard Payne;

A bill (S. 349) to increase the rate of pension for certain cases of deafness;

A bill (S. 1391) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle the account stated between the General Government and the State of Florida by the said Secretary, under the authority of the act approved March 2, 1889, known as the deficiency appropriation act, and to pay the balance found to be due said State;

A bill (S. 1910) to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the pension of certain soldiers and sailors who are totally helpless from injuries received or from diseases contracted in the service of the United States," approved March 4, 1890;

A bill (S. 1956) to amend an act entitled "An act establishing a customs collection district in Florida to be known as the collection district of Tampa, and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1889, and to make Punta Gorda a subport of entry;

A bill (S. 1982) for the relief of Avery D. Babcock and wife of Oregon;

A bill (S. 2107) to enable the Centennial Board of Finance, incorporated by an act approved June 1, 1872, to close its affairs and dissolve said corporation; and

A bill (S. 2137) to amend an act entitled "An act amending the pension law so as to remove the disability of those who, having participated in the rebellion, have since its termination enlisted in the Army of the United States and become disabled," approved March 3, 1877.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following concurrent resolution; in which concurrence was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That there be printed 15,000 copies of Senate Report No. 2130, Fifty-first Congress, second session, being tariff compilation of 1891, prepared by the Senate Committee on Finance under authority of the act of Congress of August 30, 1890, of which number 5,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 10,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

It also announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment the bill (H. R. 5978) to extend the time for making assessments of real estate, etc., in which concurrence was requested.

It also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 6286) to amend the charter of the Rock Creek Railway Company.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is entitled to the floor, if he desires to proceed.

Mr. HOLMAN. A single moment further, Mr. Chairman. I wish to read an extract from the decision of Gen. Butterworth, to which reference has been made here, a paragraph that I sought to reach through my friend from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] when he was on the floor. I had made the statement that Gen. Butterworth manifestly rendered this decision with reluctance; and I think in that I am correct, as will appear from the language of the decision itself.

He says:

If this was an original question or proposition, the present occupant of the chair is not clear that he would hold any part of the paragraph to be in order; but as the point has been, after full discussion, adjudicated, the Chair does not feel authorized to depart from the precedents already established, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Manifestly, then, he decided with reluctance. I think myself that a gentleman occupying that chair should decide what he himself believes to be the proper construction of the rules of the House on all such occasions.

Mr. BOUTELLE. If the Chair will pardon me, I desire to call the attention of the Chair, as well as of the committee, to the fact that the whole point of the controversy here is as to whether the appropriation now pending comes under the provision of the rule as an appropriation for a "work or object already in progress." We have already cited repeated rulings bearing directly upon this question, but I wish to call attention for a moment to the law itself.

This provision, Mr. Chairman, is asked for in this appropriation bill, and is provided for here on the basis of existing law establishing the Navy Department and providing for the exercise of the functions of that Department. Title X, section 415 of the Revised Statutes, provides that—

There shall be at the seat of government an executive department, to be known as the Department of the Navy, and a Secretary of the Navy, who shall be the head thereof.

That provision dates back to the 30th of April, 1798.

Section 417 provides:

The Secretary of the Navy shall execute such orders as he shall receive from the President relative to the procurement of naval stores and materials and the construction, armament, equipment, and employment of vessels of war, as well as all other matters connected with the naval establishment.

The pending appropriation bill is the regular annual appropriation for the maintenance of the naval establishment for the year ending June 30, 1893, and has incorporated in it as one of its provisions an appropriation for one of the principal functions assigned in the organic law to the Navy Department; that is, for the building of a ship, constituting the primary and fundamental part of the naval establishment.

It seems that it ought to go without saying that the primary function of a naval establishment is the construction of ships. There can be no navy without ships; there can be no navy until ships are constructed; ships can not be constructed until appropriations are made for them. This bill makes appropriation for the construction of ships; and instead of there being an opportunity to make even a plausible argument to the effect that the construction of ships has a remote or auxiliary connection with and dependency on a naval establishment, the fact should stare every man in the face that the building of ships is the essential or primary function of maintaining the naval establishment.

I do not think it necessary, Mr. Chairman, to go further into the elucidation of that exceedingly plain point.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Maine allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BOUTELLE. With pleasure.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. In case Congress authorizes the appropriation of the money provided by this bill, it empowers the proper officer to make a contract for the construction of this ship?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Yes.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Now, could that officer make that contract unless he had this authority?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Why no.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Is it not, then, new legislation?

Mr. BOUTELLE. No more than for the repairs of a ship, or the purchasing of some provisions, coffee, tea, or any one of the thousand and one minor articles which are auxiliary to maintaining the naval establishment. On the point assumed by the gentleman from Tennessee, if that rule should apply, then the Secretary could not even pay the salary of an officer; on this provision he could not pay the salary of a single sailor—

Mr. COX of Tennessee. But do not you draw a distinction between paying the salary of an officer or seaman and the construction of a naval vessel?

Mr. BOUTELLE. The only distinction is that the building of the ship is more primary, more fundamentally necessary, so to speak, for the naval establishment than the employment of a man to sail the ship after she is built.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] is recognized.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman from Maine one more question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield?

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly, unless the Chair objects.

Mr. COX of Tennessee (to Mr. BOUTELLE). Would you hold that the Postmaster-General, or any officer of the Government, under an appropriation bill for the Post-Office Department, would have the power to erect buildings for post-offices?

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is a matter of usage and custom. He has the power to establish new post-routes. He has the power to establish new post-offices, and to fix the salaries of new post-masters.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the ruling made by Mr. Butterworth, to which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has already referred, for the purpose of showing the argumentation indulged in at that time by gentlemen who were favoring and opposing the point of order. It will appear that the very same argumentation was offered to the Chair on that occasion as on this, and for the reason that the question then was identical with this, save in the designation of the object. We are in the habit of providing in the sundry civil appropriation bill for the Light-House Service. That service, like the Navy, has been in existence for many years, was then a continuing service, and is in existence to-day. There was a proposition to build a new light-ship. It was in the bill, and the point of order was raised against it. Mr. Cannon of Illinois submitted an argument against the point of order, which I desire to read, as showing the processes of thought on this occasion to be the same as on that occasion.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The same as one side.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am going to read your side of it. I quote from the RECORD, June 21, 1886, page 5978 of the RECORD of the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress:

The CHAIRMAN. Under clause 3 of Rule XXI no appropriation for any expenditures not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works as are already in progress, can be made. Under that clause of the rule the Chair sustains the point of order.

This decision was made by Mr. Butterworth, a gentleman whose intelligence and familiarity with questions relating to appropriations and the rules governing them are well known by those who were associated with him in the past.

Mr. HOLMAN. Was Mr. Butterworth the Chairman then?

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes.

Mr. BOUTELLE. When?

Mr. BLOUNT. This was in 1886. I understand the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to have quoted from a decision by Mr. Butterworth. I understand him to say that he was Chairman at this time. I take the gentleman's statement for it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not say who occupied the Chair at this particular time. I have not had time to look at the RECORD.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then, as far as that is concerned—

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will remind the gentleman that no gentlemen of Mr. Butterworth's politics succeeded in breaking into the Chair until a later date than that. At that time the House was Democratic.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understood the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to be quoting from the decision of Mr. Butterworth.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did, but upon another occasion.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understood it to be Mr. Butterworth who made this decision.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not know who was presiding at the time mentioned by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BLOUNT (after examining the RECORD). Mr. REAGAN of Texas was in the chair at the time, and made this ruling.

Mr. HOLMAN. An old and experienced member.

Mr. BLOUNT. An old and experienced member of the House, and afterward, as is well known, a member of the Senate. I will read further from the RECORD:

Mr. CANNON. I did not understand distinctly the ruling of the Chair. Did the Chair sustain the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CANNON. Well, Mr. Chairman, with all due respect to the Chair, I desire, before we pass further, to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Randall] whether he does not think an appeal ought to be taken from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not mean to appeal.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. CANNON. Then I will appeal, Mr. Chairman; and I wish to say a word on this appeal.

There is upon the statute book a law constituting a Light-House Board; there is a law constituting the fourth light-house district; there is a law providing for buoys, seamen, vessels, and all the appliances for this service.

Mr. BOUTELLE. When was this?

Mr. BLOUNT. This was in 1886.

Mr. DINGLEY. What was the point?

Mr. BLOUNT. It was on the building of a light-ship, on the sundry civil bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is a permanent attachment, like a light-house.

Mr. HOLMAN. A part of the same system.

Mr. BLOUNT. Let me get through, and then gentleman can argue. I quote further from Mr. Cannon:

The Book of Estimates contains, in a note, the statement that this appropriation is for a steamer—

"To take the place of the Geranium, a wooden side-wheel steamer. There were long periods during last winter when it was impossible to replace important buoys because of the peculiar construction of this tender. She can be removed to some district where such arduous service is not required."

Mr. HOLMAN. This was Mr. Cannon's argument.

Mr. BLOUNT. This is Mr. Cannon's argument, just the same line of argumentation that we have heard here to-day. He says:

So that here is a harbor upon which are buoys, adjacent to which are light-houses; and a small steamer is necessary to replace the buoys and protect under general law this harbor. The proposition now is to appropriate for that small steamer. I understand the point of order to be that this appropriation can not be made unless, in the first place, there is passed a separate, independent law authorizing this steamer to be provided. If this is to be the construction of the rule, where are we to stop? If that is what the rule means, if that is what the decision of the point of order means, can we under such a construction buy a skiff, can we buy anything, unless there is a prior special law authorizing the expenditure? In my opinion the House of Representatives, in adopting the rule now invoked, never intended to place such a limitation upon the power of the House in making appropriations.

The replacing of buoys is a matter incident to the maintenance of the light-house service; and for that purpose this small steamer is required. This is a necessary incident to the execution of existing law under the Constitution. The buying of fuel, the buying of skiffs, the construction of steamers of wood or iron, necessary to carry on this business, is a mere matter of appropriation for a work in being, a work in progress; and I believe that under the rules of the House we have authority to make such an appropriation on a general appropriation bill—not as a matter of new law, but in carrying out the Constitution under existing law, the Constitution being known to all the people, and the existing law declaring these harbors to be harbors, constituting the Light-House Board, and authorizing the conduct of the business of that board.

The same line of argument was indulged in by Mr. Long when the question was before the committee:

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. What is the question before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. CLARDY. According to the theory of the gentleman from Massachusetts, because there had been light-houses at a few harbors the Committee on Appropriations would have complete jurisdiction to have gone on and made new appropriations therefor.

Mr. LONG. I hold so and held so in the committee.

Mr. CLARDY. But the committee did not vote so.

Mr. LONG. No, it did not.

Mr. McMILLIN. The committee held otherwise, that the old light-house could not be supplanted by a new one, and properly referred the subject to the Committee on Commerce. The gentleman from Massachusetts concedes his case away.

The question is on the appeal from the ruling of the Chair. The question is whether the ruling is right or wrong.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Long] says the question is so close either ruling might be sustained.

Without reading further, Mr. Chairman, I have read enough to show—

Mr. HOLMAN. Quote the decision of the committee.

Mr. BLOUNT. The Chair was sustained by the committee. I have read, Mr. Chairman, enough to show that the very same discussion that has been had here to-day was then had. The same point of order was raised, and the same arguments made for and against it on either side. An appeal was taken from the ruling of the Chair, and the committee sustained the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. TERRY. What was the opinion of the Chair?

Mr. BLOUNT. I have not time to tell you; but it is there in the RECORD.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But that has nothing to do with the Navy.

Mr. BLOUNT. It had nothing to do with the Navy. Why, that is quite clear, but it has something to do with the rule. It has to do with the interpretation of the rule. An appeal was taken from the interpretation of the Chair, and the Chair was sustained by the committee.

It has been stated here in the course of argument that the first ruling at all that ships were in order on an appropriation bill was made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY]. So far as my memory serves me, that is the first ruling ever made of that kind; and in so far as the reasoning of it is concerned, it seems to me that it is entirely untenable. What are we doing with these appropriation bills? We are not building ships or navy-yards. They are intended for the current expenditures of the Government. They are not supposed to contain any policies for the future in reference to the organization of the Navy, or the number of ships that are necessary for the public service. You have denied to your Committees on Appropriations the right of legislation on that class of questions, and heretofore—

Mr. HOLMAN. Except for retrenchment.

Mr. BLOUNT. Except for retrenchment. (Continuing.) Up to that period it had been the practice when ships were to be built, from a period before the war, even during the Mexican war and until that time, they reported them from the Committee on Naval Affairs. I remember, sir, that before the war a struggle between the Ways and Means Committee and the Committee on Naval Affairs, in which Mr. SHERMAN participated, in which the question of jurisdiction was contested, and it was decided in favor of the Naval Committee. What more proper thing, sir, than that to a committee charged with all questions relating to your naval policy, in connection with its size and with the class of ships, should be added the general and special charge of that subject. That being true, that the appropriation went to that committee for the current expenses, it carried with it all the rules relating to appropriations and the practices of the House.

Now, then, Mr. Chairman, as to the opinion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY]. What is it based upon? That argumentation of this point had here to-day gives the idea of a navy, the idea of the right of building a ship on an appropriation bill, because it was an "object" of the Government to have a navy and to build ships. You might, sir, under that construction, not only build a ship, but you might build a navy-yard, or you could provide a place for the construction of guns.

Mr. HOLMAN. And light-houses.

Mr. BLOUNT. And light-houses—anything you desired, wherever you showed it had the slightest relation to the naval service in any way. Could that doctrine be sustained? I have never known, until that decision, since I have been a member of this House, the placing of the construction of a ship upon a naval appropriation bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE. How was it in the Forty-seventh Congress?

Mr. BLOUNT. That was when Mr. Robeson was chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. DINGLEY. Here are cases in the Forty-seventh Congress where we have naval vessels placed on an appropriation bill. [Exhibiting the statutes.]

Mr. BLOUNT. And that against a point of order?

Mr. DINGLEY. I do not know. I simply know it was in the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. Oh, Mr. Chairman, that does not signify anything. You can find anything on appropriation bills.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is it not true that ever since the Forty-seventh Congress there has been on every naval appropriation bill a provision like this for the construction of a new naval vessel, and that it has never been ruled out on a point of order?

Mr. BLOUNT. I think the question has been raised but once.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has raised it at least three times.

Mr. BLOUNT. Well, suppose there have been such provisions in these naval appropriation bills, and suppose the disposition of the House has been not to dispute their right to be there; suppose nobody raised a point of order against them, as it appears nobody did until the question was raised when it was decided by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY], what does all that prove? Absolutely nothing. It has nothing to do with the question.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It proves the practice of the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am discussing this question of order upon the reason of the thing. There are many practices in the House that are very loose and totally indefensible. But the Chair is now called upon to interpret this rule. When the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY] made that ruling that was the first time, and I believe the only time that such a construction was placed upon the rule.

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman from Georgia must have been out during the discussion that has been going on here. Did he not hear anyone speak of the decision made by the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Butterworth? It has been referred to here over and over again.

Mr. BLOUNT. I did not hear that.

Mr. HERBERT. I supposed not.

Mr. BLOUNT. What was the point in that decision?

Mr. HERBERT. The same point, precisely.

Mr. BLOUNT. Well, conceding that it was decided in the same way, then that makes two decisions.

Mr. HERBERT. And the uniform practice?

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. BLOUNT. Not the uniform practice. The gentleman has just heard read a decision in regard to the building of a light-house ship.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is not a case like this.

Mr. HOLMAN. Exactly analogous.

Mr. BLOUNT. The question is as to the admissibility of this kind of legislation on an appropriation bill under the rule, but these gentlemen on the other side seem to have got the idea that if a decision under this rule happens to be about any other subject than ships it has no relation to their naval bill. This is a question of order, and I am discussing it as such. I regret very much that I did not hear the citation of the ruling of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Butterworth], but, not having heard it, and not having had an opportunity to examine it, I shall not undertake to comment upon it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I read here in the presence of my friend a paragraph from that decision in which Mr. Butterworth said that he made it with hesitation.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Before he had consulted the precedents; but after he had consulted them his ruling was clear, distinct, and unequivocal.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] had heard what I read from Mr. Butterworth. He said he hesitated about the decision, but in view of the fact that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY] had decided the same point three or four times, or at least once, he would follow that decision. So, in fact, there was but one decision of the point made.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then if that be the case the decision was placed entirely on that one precedent.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman, of course, does not wish to obscure this point.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am trying to make it clear.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I would not, of course, undertake to correct the gentleman in any argument he might make, but the statement of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is not quite accurate. Mr. Butterworth's decision was not based merely on one decision; he distinctly cited two previous decisions.

Mr. HOLMAN. But Mr. Cox's opinion is not in point.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That may be the opinion of the gentleman from Indiana, but in the opinion of the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Butterworth, it was in point, because he cited it in support of his ruling.

Mr. HOLMAN. But I do not think the gentleman himself [Mr. BOUTELLE] would say that that decision was in point.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then, Mr. Chairman, we have these contradictory decisions. We have Mr. Butterworth basing his ruling on the previous ruling of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] and we have also the opinion of Mr. Reagan. And we have, up to that period, the absence of any similar ruling.

Mr. LOUD. Can the gentleman state whether this point of order has ever been sustained in this connection on the naval appropriation bill?

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California asks me if this point has ever been sustained on the naval appropriation bill. I have had no opportunity to look through the Journal with the view of examining that point, but I am quite clear in my recollection that time and again there has been not only an effort to build ships but an effort to build dry docks and to buy sites for the construction of navy-yards, etc., and that up to a certain period those efforts were ruled out of order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will the gentleman permit me, at that point, to ask him one question? I wish to ask him whether it is not the fact that the action of the House taken year after year, even if no point is raised, does not carry with it, ex necessitate, a presumption that the procedure is in accordance with the rule; and also whether it is not the fact that every year, certainly every year since I have been a member of this House, from the Forty-seventh Congress on, there have been provisions of this kind in the naval appropriation bills, which have been passed upon by the House and never ruled out.

Mr. HOLMAN. But let my friend remember that the decision of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] was made the very first year to which he refers, and that the same gentleman presided, according to his own statement, for four successive years afterwards. Now, of course the point of order would not be made before him more than once.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana—

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to proceed.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman from Indiana certainly would not argue that it detracts from the force of this decision that a gentleman so distinguished as the gentleman from Kentucky had repeatedly, year after year, with deliberation, and on consultation with such a parliamentarian as Speaker CARLISLE, adhered to his former ruling.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend misapprehends. The question was never raised before, according to my recollection, except once; and when the opinion of the gentleman from Kentucky was known, of course no further points of order were made.

Mr. BLOUNT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am quite sure that up to a very recent period the rulings have been very strict in requiring that the Committee on Appropriations confine their appropriations to current expenditures, expenditures for the continuation of works and objects already in progress. I remember quite well a case where the Secretary of the Navy had placed in Mr. Roach's yard several vessels and made contracts for their repair without the authority of law; an effort was made to put appropriations for those contracts on an appropriation bill; and the provision was ruled out of order because there was no authority of law for the making of those contracts.

If it be true, as alleged here, that this is not new legislation on an appropriation bill, why is this language used?

That for the purpose of further increasing the naval establishment of the United States the President is hereby authorized to have constructed by contract one armored cruiser, etc.

Why is this legislative provision inserted here? Simply because otherwise there would be no authority to carry out this object; simply because Congress holds within its own hands the power to provide for what objects money shall be appropriated. How different the language of this bill when you come to ordinary current expenses.

MARINE CORPS.

Pay, Marine Corps: For pay of officers on the active list: For one colonel commandant, one colonel, two lieutenant-colonels, etc.

Pay of officers on the retired list: For three colonels, three lieutenant-colonels, one quartermaster, etc.

BUREAU OF PROVISIONS AND CLOTHING.

Provisions, Navy, Bureau of Provisions and Clothing: For provisions and commuted rations for the seamen and marines, commuted rations for officers and naval cadets on sea duty, etc.

So we might go through the various paragraphs of this bill, without finding any legislative authority of this kind; but when we come to this paragraph we find clearly an appropriation for which there is no previous authority of law. You provide that the President may make contracts; and it is a necessary implication that no authority now exists for this purpose.

The language of the provision necessarily implies that the Committee on Naval Affairs themselves recognized the fact that there was no preëxisting authority of this kind, and therefore they placed it in this bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. Probably no one would claim that the President has authority under existing law to make any such contract.

Mr. BLOUNT. My friend is mistaken about that. Have not my friend from Maine and others claimed that, as we have a navy, therefore we have a right to put in this bill anything that we wish.

Mr. McMILLIN. But the point I was making—

Mr. BLOUNT. I agree with my friend as to his point; but he wants me to assent to his statement that no one would differ with him. I can not do that in the presence of the fact that gentlemen have been arguing here that no previous legislation is necessary to authorize an appropriation of this kind. It appears to me there can be no doubt that this is new legislation. Let us recur to the language of the rule. As the Chair has seen, there have been different decisions by gentlemen temporarily in the chair.

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

The proposition is that you may make an appropriation of this kind "in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress," not for something that has not been begun. What is the object of the provision in this bill? By its very terms it is to provide for the construction by contract of one armored cruiser. There is no escape from that language. These gentlemen have printed it in this bill, and it is here under the eye of the Chair. That is the object. Has there been any law authorizing this construction? Has there been a dollar spent upon it? If not, why not? The committee themselves have recognized that there is no law on this subject.

Mr. Chairman, as I stated yesterday, this is an important question. The Chair has already ruled that a proposition for the building of a dry dock is new legislation and not in order under this rule. A dry dock is important for the repair of ships: it is important for the purpose of keeping ships in condition for naval service. It is just as much a part of the naval establishment as a ship is. The difference in the object does not vary the principle.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Can the gentleman cite any ruling on this point?

Mr. BLOUNT. I have not cited any special ruling. I am treating this question argumentatively upon the language of the rule; and I want it distinctly understood that I am inviting the intelligent opinion of the Chair upon the construction of this rule in connection with the language contained in the pending paragraph.

As I had stated, when interrupted, there is no difference between the building of a dry dock without the authority of law, and the building of a ship, or the construction of a public building, or the doing of any other thing outside of the current expenditures for the Department for which the bill is making appropriation. In the present case there is no authority for building the ship—

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman from Georgia will remember that we have provided for the construction of dry docks on these bills constantly, and the points of order have been overruled.

Mr. HOLMAN. The point of order was sustained.

Mr. BLOUNT. As I remember it, the point of order was sustained.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The point of order was sustained yesterday; but the gentleman from Georgia certainly does not propose to evade the clear distinction that is apparent here.

Mr. BLOUNT. Oh, I do not evade anything. This is no place for evading.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The provision for the dry dock, on which the point of order was made yesterday, was ruled out on the ground that it is no part of the existing law. But we have, since I have been a member of this House, made provision for from four to six dry docks in navy-yards already established; the Chair, when the point of order was made, refusing to rule them out on the ground that it was an essential part of the navy-yard.

Mr. BLOUNT. I was discussing the proposition now pending before the Chairman of this committee, and my friend from Maine has patched on some ruling that we have not before us.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But the point of order on which that ruling was made was "on all fours," the gentleman will concede, with the point of order made here, the conditions being similar.

Mr. BLOUNT. Well, I am only stating my own opinions. They may be entirely wrong.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Is it the opinion of the gentleman from Georgia that this ruling of the Chairman on the point raised yesterday covers the point now made?

Mr. BLOUNT. I think so.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Does the gentleman think that if this dry dock, so stricken from the bill on the point of order, had been a proposition for a dry dock at the Norfolk or New York navy-yard that it would have been stricken from the bill?

Mr. BLOUNT. I do.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Well, I am very sure that the Chair did not intend to make any such ruling; and as I recollect the language of the ruling itself, I think I will be sustained by an examination of it.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, it is impossible to state anything connectedly in the midst of so many interruptions.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Georgia to decline further interruptions.

Mr. BLOUNT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not concerned so much about this ship in the present bill as I am for the principle that is involved, and that there shall be a correct ruling in relation to these provisions for new legislation on appropriation bills. I remember when this rule in relation to such provisions on these bills was first introduced into the House, and adopted by this body. In the Forty-fourth Congress it was presented by a distinguished gentleman from Indiana, Speaker of that House, in connection with the distinguished gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HOLMAN, and also in connection with the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Randall, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

I know the principle which animated them and which was infused into the rules of this House; a principle which has found its interpretation, until these later days, by presiding officers in that chair in the interest of retrenchment and in the interest of the American people. By reason of that spirit, which I now invoke from the Chairman in the interpretation of that rule, there were enormous savings year in and year out, until gentlemen in opposition to the party which introduced that rule, finding how carefully the House was protected from just such legislation as this, when they came into power in the Forty-seventh Congress adopted the same rule. It has been here and there battered away, in part by hasty decisions, battered away in part by impulse, to enlarge the Navy and accomplish other objects, but still exists as a rule of this House; and I rose trusting that the Chair, recurring to the spirit in which that rule was adopted, and in view of the great benefits to be gained in the future by confining appropriation bills to the actual current expenditures of the various Departments, by excluding carefully therefrom any legislative provision of a general character, which necessarily could not have that consideration which they deserve, would still sustain that rule in its integrity.

As I have already stated, the building of a ship is not a part of the current expenditures of the Navy Department. The building of one ship, or two ships, or ten or twenty ships, involves a question of the policy of the American Congress in relation to the size of the Navy. If, sir, it be in order to put the provision for this ship into this bill, I would like to know on what principle you could exclude the building of twenty ships. I would like to know on what principle there could be excluded the building of an unlimited number of dry docks, and the purchasing of land for that purpose. I trust the Chair will see fit to carry out the idea that in the matter of these appropriation bills, there shall be nothing in them except such sums as are necessary to carry on the current expenditures of the Department in accordance with law; and when it comes to the question of the policy of the Government, as to whether we shall have a great or a small navy, or a great or a small army; an army of 25,000 men or an army of 100,000 men, that the Chair will give such construction to the rule as will guard us against such sudden, unauthorized, and dangerous propositions.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on this question.

Mr. MCCREARY. I do not desire to say anything further on the point of order. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] has referred to me often in connection with the decision I rendered on a point of order similar to the one now pending, but I think the Chair is ready to rule on the point of order. I shall not occupy the time of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has made up his mind.

Mr. MCCREARY. I know of no decision that has ever been rendered by a Chairman of the Committee of the Whole sustaining a point of order like that now pending, and I do not propose to occupy the time of the committee in defense of a decision which I rendered after the most careful consideration, and which I believe the present occupant of the chair will sustain by overruling the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point.

If the question now presented to the Chair were an original proposition, or were there a conflict of authority among the precedents on the specific question now presented, the Chair would be inclined, under the provisions of Rule XXI, clause 2, to rule that this whole section should go out of the bill; but as the precedents on precisely analogous provisions in analogous bills are uniformly in favor of the retention of such items of the bill, the Chair, in deference to the force of such precedents, as precedents, is constrained to overrule the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the entire proposition under the head of "increase of the Navy."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] moves to strike out the proposition providing for the increase of the Navy.

Mr. HERBERT. There is also a contemplated amendment to perfect the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana to strike out.

Mr. HERBERT. But there is an amendment contemplated to perfect the section, and that amendment would be in order before the motion to strike out. The proposition to perfect the section would come in before the motion to strike out, and if such an amendment is intended to be offered, as I understand it is, I would like to have it offered, in order that both may be pending at the same time, and then the general debate will be in order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, in accordance with the understanding reached last evening, by which the general debate on this bill was deferred until we reached this clause, I offer the following amendment to the section which the gentleman from Indiana moves to strike out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the proposed amendment to the section which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] moves to strike out.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 39, strike out all after the word "dollars," in line 10, to and including the word "designate," in line 22, and insert:

"The President is hereby further authorized to have constructed by contract two sea-going coast-line battle ships, designed to carry the heaviest armor and most powerful ordnance upon a displacement of about 10,000 tons, with a coal endurance of about 5,000 knots on the total coal capacity at the most economical rate of speed, and to have the highest practicable speed for vessels of their class, to cost, exclusive of armament and of any premiums that may be paid for increased speed, not exceeding $4,000,000 each; and ten torpedo boats, at a cost not to exceed $120,000 each.

"In the construction of all said vessels, including said armored cruiser, all other provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled 'An act to increase the naval establishment,' as to materials for said vessels, their engines, boilers, and machinery, the contracts under which they are built, the notice of any proposals for the same, the plans, drawings, specifications therefor, and the method of executing said contracts shall be observed and followed, and said vessels shall be built in compliance with the terms of said act, save that in all their parts said vessels shall be of domestic manufacture. And in the contracts for the construction of each of said vessels, except said armored cruiser, such provisions for minimum speed and for premiums for increased speed and penalties for deficient speed may be made, subject to the terms of this bill, as in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy may be deemed advisable. If the Secretary of the Navy shall be unable to contract at reasonable prices for the construction of any of said vessels, then he may build said vessel or vessels in such navy-yards as he may designate.

"And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to readvertise for proposals for the construction of one swift torpedo cruiser of about 750 tons displacement, which was authorized by the act making appropriations for the naval service, approved June 30, 1890, and the limit of cost of said torpedo cruiser is hereby extended to $512,000, exclusive of armament."

Mr. BOUTELLE. I suppose general debate is now in order.

Mr. HERBERT. I submit that as this is a triangular fight, a motion being made on one side to strike out, a motion being also made to amend, and the majority of the committee insisting on the provision as it is in the bill, that we ought, before we begin the discussion, to adjust the time between us. There was an agreement on yesterday that we should take two hours and a half each. That contemplated that there were two parties. Now, there are three parties to this contest, and I suggest that we have six hours, two hours on a side.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The understanding was that there should be two hours and a half on a side.

Mr. HOLMAN. But there are now three parties.

Mr. HERBERT. There are three parties now, and I suggest that the time should be divided into three parts.

Mr. BOUTELLE. With all deference to the candor of my friend, it strikes me that this is a good deal like the Indian's trade, where it was "Heads I win, tails you lose."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine will suspend a moment. The Chair desires to call the attention of the committee to the agreement that was made in Committee of the Whole yesterday, that when this clause of the bill was reached general debate would be had, two hours and a half on each side.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Is there a proposition to modify that agreement?

Mr. HERBERT. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are now three parties.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I understand the gentleman to state that, inasmuch as the gentleman from Indiana has made a motion to strike this entire section out, that divides the body of the committee into three parties, and they want to take half an hour away from the Navy side and give two hours to the additional section of our membership here who are proposing to fight the bill in another way. As I said, that looks very much like the Indian trade—"Tails I win and heads you lose." The question involved in this proposition is whether we shall go on building a navy or stop, and there are only two sides to that question, and you can not get three sides to it.

Mr. HERBERT. If the gentleman will give me his attention for a moment, it occurs to me that he can see that there are three sides to it. The committee in the first place proposes to build one ship, and have reported the bill which proposes to build one ship. The gentleman from Maine proposes to add other ships. The gentleman from Indiana proposes to strike out one ship. That makes three sides. It seems to me the bill is to be cut from two directions, and that it would only be fair to have all sides heard equally. I am just as intent on maintaining that one ship as the gentleman from Maine is on adding other ships.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Precisely; but the gentleman will see at once that the effect of his proposition is to deprive that part of the House who desire additional provisions for ships of a considerable portion of the time allotted to it, and assign it to gentlemen who are not only opposed to his proposition but opposed to mine as well.

Mr. HERBERT. Does the gentleman not see that there are three sides to it?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have no objection to granting additional time to the gentleman from Indiana, but I certainly can not properly surrender time that I have already allotted to the only side of the House who are in favor of making a larger provision for ships than is contained in the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. But my friend from Maine must bear in mind that there are three parties.

Mr. BOUTELLE. When the arrangement was made yesterday it was agreed that I should have exactly two hours and a half on the amendment which I notified the House I intended to offer.

Mr. HOLMAN. Where was that?

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman will find it in the RECORD.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless some arrangement is made the committee will have to proceed in the debate according to the agreement made yesterday.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask that it may be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. What does the gentleman ask to be reported?

Mr. BLOUNT. The agreement made yesterday.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will ask the chairman of the committee if his understanding was not that we should have two hours and a half on each side, and that two hours and a half were given for consideration of the amendment that I was to offer.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand there were to be two hours and a half for those in favor of that proposition, and two hours and a half for those in favor of the provision in the bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I notified the committee and the House of my amendment.

Mr. HERBERT. That is what I understood the gentleman to do.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Let me ask the gentleman from Alabama if he does not recognize the fact that every gentleman who argues in favor of striking out his provision in the bill, as well as every gentleman who argues in favor of one ship only, necessarily argues against the proposition of the gentleman from Maine, and is not that therefore an unfair division of the time, giving to those gentlemen who occupy that position two-thirds of the time? And I also ask if the argument of the gentlemen who are opposed to new ships is not as much an argument against the position of the gentlemen who are in favor of the one ship as against the argument of those who favor the amendment?

Mr. HERBERT. Every argument in favor of adding more ships is an argument in favor of striking out one ship, that is true. Does not the gentleman see that?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think this could be arranged without any trouble. How much time does the gentleman from Maine want?

Mr. BOUTELLE. The "gentleman from Maine," Mr. Chairman, never wants anything more than was agreed to and what the House conceded to him; and he has conceded that time to his colleagues on the Naval Committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. How much time?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Two and a half hours.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that seven and a half hours may be allowed for debate on this proposition. That will be two and a half hours on each side.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have not the slightest objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] asks unanimous consent that seven and one-half hours be devoted to general debate upon this bill. Is there objection?

Mr. CAMINETTI. I object.

Mr. BLOUNT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Chair will cause to be read the agreement.

The CHAIRMAN. In response to the request of the gentleman from Georgia the Chair will read the proposition for an agreement submitted to the House by the gentleman from Alabama yesterday:

Mr. HERBERT. I ask that we now make an agreement that when we reach the portion of the bill to which I have referred two hours and a half on each side be allowed for general debate, to be occupied respectively by those who are in favor of and those who are against the proposition for more ships. I ask that the agreement be now made.

That proposition was submitted to the committee by the Chairman and unanimous consent was given.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I ask that that order be executed.

Mr. HOLMAN. That would cut members of the committee out of two hours and a half, so I propose that we have unanimous consent for seven hours and a half of general debate.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like an interpretation of that agreement. Does it mean that those who are in favor of striking out the provision in the bill for more ships shall have two hours and a half, and that those who are in favor of one more ship or of more ships, shall have two hours and a half?

Mr. HOLMAN. That is it.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, is that the agreement that was made?

The CHAIRMAN. The agreement was plainly expressed in the request of the gentleman from Alabama. He said:

I ask that we now make an agreement that when we reach the portion of the bill to which I have referred two hours and a half on each side be allowed for general debate, to be occupied respectively by those who are in favor of and those who are against the proposition for more ships.

Mr. BUTLER. That means that those who favor striking out this provision are to have two hours and a half, and that those in favor of retaining the provision are entitled to two hours and a half?

Mr. BLOUNT. I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. BOUTELLE. My attention was distracted at the moment, and I did not catch the Chair's decision.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the request for an agreement, as it was submitted by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT].

Mr. HERBERT (interposing). Mr. Chairman, do you construe that agreement as meaning that the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs and others in favor of the proposition as it stands in the bill are to have no time at all?

The CHAIRMAN. Quite the contrary. The Chair has held that the gentleman of the committee, or any other gentlemen who are in favor of the proposition as it stands in the bill, are entitled to two hours and a half, while those who are against the proposition as it stands in the bill are likewise entitled to two hours and a half.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I hope I may have the attention of the committee for a moment. This is a very important question and there are three sides to it. Anyone can clearly see that when the committee comes in here and reports a provision for one ship, those who stand for that provision may be called one side of the question, while those who wish to increase the number of ships are another side, and those who are opposed to any new ships at all constitute a third side.

Mr. SIMPSON. The right side.

Mr. HERBERT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am satisfied that this committee does not desire to do injustice to anybody, and I feel that all parties to this controversy ought to be heard. It would be unfair to apportion two hours and a half to one of these sides and to divide the other two hours and a half between the other two. I think, therefore, we ought to make an agreement that will allow all sides to be heard. That is fair, and this committee can not desire anything else. What we want is to arrive at a proper and just conclusion about this matter, which, as I have said, is a very important one, and I do hope that nobody will interpose any objection to a proposition that two hours and a half be allowed to each of the three sides.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, as I was a party, or labored under the impression that I was a party, to this agreement, I would like to be heard in relation to it for a moment. If the Chair will kindly look again at the words of the agreement, I think he will find that the division of time is based specifically upon those who are in favor and those who are opposed to the provision for "more ships." Now, that certainly does not apply to those who are in favor and those who are opposed to the provision in this bill, because, unfortunately, this bill does not provide for more ships; it provides for only one ship. My amendment provides for "more ships," and that is what was intended to be the subject of discussion. We agreed to wait until the time when I should offer my amendment, of which I gave notice in committee, and of which my colleagues were perfectly advised. Instead of occupying the time of the committee in general debate at the beginning, as is customary, we thought it would tend to a clearer and better understanding of the subject to postpone the general debate until I should offer my amendment providing for more ships, and therefore we amicably agreed to two hours and a half on each side.

Mr. MALLORY. Does the gentleman object to giving two hours on a side to each of these three sides?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will state to the gentleman from Florida that my only reason for objecting is not that I object to giving ample time to any gentleman who wants to discuss this question on any side, but it cuts down the affirmative by half an hour; and I have already arranged to assign time to my colleagues. I do not object to other gentlemen having additional time; but I need the two hours and a half which has already been assigned to the side I represent.

Mr. HERBERT. I propose that two hours and a half be allowed to each of the three sides.

Mr. MALLORY. I believe we can get two hours for each side, but I do not believe we can get two hours and a half.

Mr. HERBERT. I hope that no gentleman will object to this fair proposition—that two hours and a half be granted to each of these three sides—and I ask the Chair to put it to the House.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Gentlemen who are opposed to the Navy, it seems to me, ought to be satisfied with that proposition, for it allows five hours' discussion against the Navy and two hours and a half for it.

Mr. McMILLIN. I hardly think the statement of my friend from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] is fair to the House. As indicated by the chairman of the committee [Mr. HERBERT], there are those who favor more ships than the one provided for in the bill; there are those who favor the bill as it stands; and there are those who are opposed to any provision of this sort. I think the proposition of the gentleman from Alabama makes a fair division of time among these three sides.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I am not going to object to that proposition; but I do not want the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] to think that I am quite so obtuse as not to see that two of the sides which will occupy two hours and a half each are against my proposition.

Mr. McMILLIN. I understood the gentleman from Maine was simply opposed to having any reduction of his two hours and a half.

Mr. BOUTELLE. If I had not great confidence in the righteousness of my cause I might object to this distribution.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman is the first man I have known to object to having his own way. I got up to try to enable him to have it. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] have the kindness to restate his proposition?

Mr. HERBERT. My proposition is that the general debate be confined to seven hours and a half—two hours and a half for those who favor the provisions of the bill as it stands; two hours and a half for those who are against any ship at all, and two hours and a half for those who are in favor of additional ships.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has heard the request of the gentleman. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HERBERT. It will be understood, I suppose, that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will control the time on his side; that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] will control the time on his side, and that I, on the part of the committee, shall control the time in favor of the bill as it stands.

The CHAIRMAN. If the committee gives unanimous consent to that arrangement the Chair will recognize it. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

And then, on motion of Mr. HERBERT, the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHIPLEY reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7093) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. QUACKENBUSH, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for one week, on account of important business.

TAX ASSESSMENTS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio, Mr. WASHINGTON, and Mr. WADSWORTH as the select committee to investigate tax assessments in the District of Columbia.

And then, on motion of Mr. McMILLIN (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2022) granting the right of way to the Mexican Gulf, Pacific, and Puget Sound Railroad Company over and through the public lands of the United States in the States of Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, and Tennessee, and granting the right of way to said railroad company over and through the United States naval and military reservations near Pensacola, in the State of Florida, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2806) to authorize the construction of a telephone line on the coast of Virginia, from Cape Charles to Assateague Island, in aid of the preservation of life and property, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4004) to establish West Point, Va., a subport of entry and delivery in the collection district of Richmond, Va., reported it without amendment.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 48) for the relief of Pearson C. Montgomery, of Memphis, Tenn., reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WALTHALL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2261) for the relief of the legal representatives of Henry W. Freedley, late major in the United States Army, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. BATE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2541) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Dover, Tenn., reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2809) for the relief of Royal E. Dake, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 876) for the relief of the citizens of the States of Oregon, Idaho, and Washington who served with the United States troops in the war against the Nez Percés and Bannock and Shoshone Indians, and for the relief of the heirs of those killed in such service and for other purposes, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4489) for the relief of John Warren, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the resolution of the General Assembly of Maryland concerning legislation by Congress looking to the preservation of "Temple farm" and the "Moore house" at Yorktown, Va., asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; which was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2787) authorizing the restoration of the name of Charles H. Allen, late post quartermaster-sergeant, to the rolls of the Army, and providing that he be placed on the enlisted retired list of the Army, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1232) removing charge of desertion against Lucius W. Hayford, Worcester, Vt., reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 806) for the relief of Ransom L. Harris, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. WALTHALL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 654) for the relief of Henry Lane, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 2910) to authorize Admiral George Brown, Capt. George C. Remey, Lieut. George S. Dyer, Medical Director George W. Wood, Ensign George S. Blow, and Mr. Frank Laviere, United States Navy, to accept certain decorations from the Government of Hawaii; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the papers accompanying the bill from the State Department be printed, and that the bill and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2911) to provide for a settlement with the Indians who were parties to and beneficiaries under the treaty concluded at Buffalo Creek, in the State of New York, January 15, 1838, for the unexecuted stipulations of that treaty; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 2912) for the relief of William A. Lowe; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2913) granting an honorable discharge to James Coughlin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO A BILL.

Mr. CALL submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CHEROKEE INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 500 copies of Senate Executive Document 56, first session Fifty-second Congress, being a message of the President submitting an agreement with the Cherokee Indians for the cession of sundry lands, and Senate Executive Document 63, being a letter of the Secretary of the Interior relative to the title by which the Cherokee Nation hold the Cherokee Outlet, said copies to be delivered to the Senate document room.

ELECTRICITY IN FARMING OPERATIONS.

Mr. PEPPER submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved by the Senate, That the Secretary of State be requested to obtain through our consuls, or otherwise, such information as he can concerning the use of electricity as a power in the propulsion of farm machinery and implements and in the propagation and growth of plants in foreign countries, and report the same to the Senate.

Mr. PEPPER. I ask that the resolution lie over under the rule. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over and be printed.

AGREEMENTS WITH TONKAWA AND KICKAPOO INDIANS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business? If not, that order is closed, and the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order. The first bill on the Calendar will be stated.

The bill (S. 1796) to ratify an agreement with the Tonkawa tribe of Indians in Oklahoma Territory, and to make an appropriation to carry the same into effect, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out section 3, in the following words:

SEC. 3. That whenever any of the lands acquired by this agreement shall be opened to settlement or entry by the proclamation of the President, they shall be disposed of under the general provisions of the act of Congress approved May 2, 1890, entitled "An act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Oklahoma," etc., and also of the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act making appropriation for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department."

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 3. That whenever any of the lands, not mineral, acquired by this agreement, shall, by operation of law or proclamation of the President of the United States, be open to settlement or entry, they shall be disposed of (except sections 16 and 36 in each township thereof) to actual settlers only, under the provisions of the homestead and town-site laws (except section 2301 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which shall not apply): Provided, however, That each settler on said lands shall, before making a final proof and receiving a certificate of entry, pay to the United States for the land so taken by him, in addition to the fees provided by law, and within five years from the date of the first original entry, the sum of $1.50 an acre, one-half of which shall be paid within two years; but the rights of honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors, as defined and described in sections 2304 and 2305 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, shall not be abridged, except as to the sum to be paid as aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The bill (S. 1797) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Kickapoo Indians in Oklahoma Territory, and to make appropriations for carrying the same into effect, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was in line 4, on page 12, after the word "confirmed" to insert:

Except as to Article V, which is modified and changed on the part of the United States so as to read as follows:

"ARTICLE V.

"In addition to the allotments above provided for, and the other benefits to be received under the preceding articles, and as the only further consideration to be paid for the cession and relinquishment of title above recited, the United States agrees to set apart and deposit in the Treasury of the United States the sum of $61,650, for the use of said Kickapoo Indians, which shall bear interest while so set apart at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum: Provided, That the number of allotments of land provided for shall not exceed 300; but if the number of allotments shall exceed 300, then there shall be deducted from the said sum of $61,650 the sum of $50 for each allotment in excess of the 300, said sum and the interest thereon to be subject to expenditure by the Secretary of the Interior, from time to time and in such amounts as he shall deem best, in the construction of roads and bridges, the building of schoolhouses, the maintaining of schools, and in such other expenditures necessary for the promotion of civilization and self-support among such said Kickapoos as hold, exempt from taxation, land in severalty under the laws of the United States."

And as so modified said agreement is accepted, confirmed, and ratified: Provided, That this act shall take effect only upon the acceptance of and consent to the modifications and changes made by the United States to said agreement by the said Indians, in manner and form as said agreement was assented to, which acceptance and consent shall be made known by proclamation of the President of the United States upon satisfactory proof that said acceptance and consent have been obtained in such manner and form.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 11, to strike out "the Secretary of the Interior may determine," and insert "provided in said agreement;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of the foregoing agreement there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $61,650, to be distributed among said Kickapoo Indians per capita, as provided in article 5 of said agreement: Provided, That any portion of said sum which may be deposited in the Treasury of the United States shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, said interest to be expended annually for the benefit of said Indians in such manner as provided in said agreement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 4, in the following words:

SEC. 4. That whenever any lands acquired by this agreement shall, by operation of law or the proclamation of the President of the United States, be opened to settlement, they shall be disposed of under the general provisions of the act of Congress approved May 2, 1890, entitled "An act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Oklahoma," etc., and also of the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department," etc.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 4. That whenever any of the lands, not mineral, acquired by this agreement shall, by operation of law or proclamation of the President of the United States, be open to settlement or entry, they shall be disposed of (except sections 16 and 36 in each township thereof) to actual settlers only, under the provisions of the homestead and town-site laws (except section 2301 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which shall not apply): Provided, however, That each settler on said lands shall, before making a final proof and receiving a certificate of entry, pay to the United States for the land so taken by him, in addition to the fees provided by law, and within five years from the date of the first original entry, the sum of $1.50 an acre, one-half of which shall be paid within two years; but the rights of honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors, as defined and described in sections 2304 and 2305 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not be abridged, except as to the sum to be paid as aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if in reporting this bill he considered the propriety of attaching this territory to one of the organized counties of Oklahoma?

Mr. DAWES. Which is it?

Mr. PERKINS. This of the Kickapoos.

Mr. DAWES. There is pending in the committee a proposition to attach several of these tribes to Oklahoma Territory, and in due time I hope that we may have a bill which will do that. But this particular portion was not considered except that under the Oklahoma bill itself there is a provision that from time to time as the Indian title is extinguished the land shall become attached to the Territory. I am not sure whether that is broad enough to reach this case or not. If not, it evidently should in the bill now pending be made a part of the Territory, but it was not very easy to make it—

Mr. PERKINS. I would say that I have some letters from parties suggesting that the Kickapoo Reservation should be attached to a county for all purposes.

Mr. DAWES. Its destination evidently is there, but there is no provision in this bill for sending it there. That would require, if it were sent there, an arrangement for a land office and other matters which the Committee on Indian Affairs thought more properly belonged to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PERKINS. If the chairman will permit a suggestion, I will say that attaching it to a county organized in Oklahoma Territory would not necessitate the organization of a land district; it would remain as now in the land district to which it belongs. It is suggested in these letters that I have from people living in Payne County that Payne County does not contain the area which the act of Congress of which the Senator speaks directs and provides, and that if the Kickapoo Reservation were attached to a county then the southern boundary of Payne County could be extended farther south and get the area directed by the act of Congress.

Mr. DAWES. My attention has been called to that same matter, but the Committee on Indian Affairs thought that that was rather in the province of the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PERKINS. The committee thought it was not best to put it in this bill?

Mr. DAWES. I have no objection to its going into this bill if it shall attract the attention of the Committee on Public Lands to the extent to see that it is a proper disposition of it.

Mr. PERKINS. Is the Senator willing that the bill shall remain as pending so that a little later we may confer together?

Mr. DAWES. I have no objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over for the present.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire what was done with Senate bill 1796, as I have lately come in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That was passed.

Mr. DAWES. I had some amendments from the committee to offer to that bill, and I ask unanimous consent that the action upon it may be reconsidered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed will be reconsidered. The Chair hears none, and the bill is in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to yield to me for a question.

Mr. DAWES. Very well.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to know whether in either one of these agreements it is provided that the money shall be paid to the Indians at once, or whether the money for their lands is to be deposited in the Treasury and to draw interest according to the usual custom?

Mr. PERKINS. The treaties themselves regulate that.

Mr. DOLPH. I am inquiring about the treaty.

Mr. DAWES. To the bill which has just been passed there are amendments to be offered by the committee for the purpose of disposing of the proceeds of the land. The object of the committee is to provide an amendment to that agreement which will secure the expenditure of this money not by distribution per capita but to be deposited in the Treasury on special deposit to be expended for the benefit of those Indians in what might in general terms be called the internal improvement of their locality and in lieu of taxation. Their locality becomes by the operation of the agreement exempt from taxation for twenty-five years, and yet we take the proceeds of their land and distribute their per capita among them without making the slightest provision for the development of their locality in the light of building roads and bridges, and erecting schoolhouses, and maintaining schools.

Mr. DOLPH. The treaty itself provides that the money shall be paid to them?

Mr. DAWES. The treaty originally required that this money should be distributed per capita. The amendment to be proposed to the Kickapoo bill which is now pending is to the effect that that agreement shall be so modified that this sum of money shall be expended in what I term this kind of internal improvement.

Mr. DOLPH. I think that is right. I shall not, if I know it, vote to ratify a treaty which provides that money shall be paid at once to Indians.

Mr. DAWES. It is for that very purpose I asked a reconsideration of the bill, that I may offer that amendment from the committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill is now in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. DAWES. I propose to amend the bill in the fourth line, on the fourteenth page. I move also to strike out all of the second section and insert what is the amendment the committee instruct me to report. The amendments are all put in the bill at that place, and if the Chief Clerk will use this copy of the bill with those amendments it will carry out the view of the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of line 4 add the following:

Except the sixth article thereof, which is amended and modified by the United States so as to read as follows:

"ARTICLE VI.

"As a further and only consideration for such cession, conveyance, and relinquishment, the United States agrees to pay to said tribe of Indians the sum of $30,000 in manner as follows: Twenty-five dollars to be paid in cash to each member of said tribe within sixty days after this contract shall be ratified by Congress, and the residue of said $30,000 shall be set apart in the Treasury of the United States, bearing interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, payable annually, for the use of said Tonkawa Indians; said sum and interest to be subject to expenditure from time to time, in his discretion, by the Secretary of the Interior, in the construction of roads and bridges, the erection of schoolhouses and the maintenance of schools, and such other expenditure necessary for the promotion of civilization and self-support among such Tonkawa Indians as hold, exempt from taxation, land in severalty under the laws of the United States.

"And as so modified said agreement is accepted, confirmed, and ratified: Provided, That this act shall take effect only upon the acceptance of and consent to the modifications and changes made by the United States to said agreement by the said Indians in manner and form as said agreement was assented to, which acceptance and consent shall be made known by proclamation of the President of the United States upon satisfactory proof that said acceptance and consent have been obtained in such manner and form."

Mr. DAWES. I will explain that proposed modification of the agreement.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is it the same sum mentioned in section 2 of the bill?

Mr. DAWES. Yes. The Tonkawa Indians are a little body of seventy Indians removed a few years since to the Indian Territory and put upon 7,000 or 8,000 acres of land there by Executive order. They are a very poor but quiet and peaceable body of Indians. They have no real title to that property. The Commission, however, thought that it was wise to treat them as having some claim there, because we are obliged to support them. They therefore agreed to give them $30,000 for their claim there, whatever it was, and then provided that they should be set out in severalty, each one of them, with 80 acres of land under the severalty law, and the rest distributed per capita to them.

So it would come to pass that there would be a little body of Indians having seven or eight thousand acres of land there exempt from taxation for twenty-five years, and the money which we give them would be distributed per capita and used up as money always is that is paid to the Indians. Thereupon, if Oklahoma became a State it would be obliged to build all the roads and bridges and schoolhouses, and maintain all the schools for this little body of Indians from taxes of their own outside of this body of land for twenty-five years. It did not seem to be a condition of things that would be acceptable to any State in which it existed. There are other cases more glaring than this.

Therefore the committee thought it was wise that that sum of money should be devoted in lieu of this taxation to the purposes for which ordinarily taxation would be used, and that is the object of this amendment. There is one other amendment that follows it, I believe.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to ask a question. As I understand, this $30,000 in the amendment is the same sum mentioned in the first provision.

Mr. DAWES. Precisely.

Mr. COCKRELL. And not a double sum.

Mr. DAWES. It is precisely the same sum, to be distributed in this way rather than distributed per capita.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Strike out section 2, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of the foregoing argument is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $30,000, to be applied in the manner provided for in said agreement: Provided, That such portion of said amount as may be deposited in the Treasury of the United States shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, which interest shall be applied as provided in said agreement.

And in lieu thereof insert:

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of the foregoing agreement, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $30,000, to be applied in the manner provided for in said agreement: Provided, That such portion of said amount as may be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, which interest shall be applied as provided in said agreement.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, is there a conflict between those two sections or are they the same?

Mr. DAWES. One of these sections, the one which we propose, prescribes what shall be done with it. The other section leaves it between the Indians and the Secretary of the Interior to do with it as they please.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then there are two methods of expenditure?

Mr. DAWES. There are two methods of expenditure.

Mr. COCKRELL. One prescribed absolutely by Congress—

Mr. DAWES. The Senator does not understand. We propose in the place of that to so modify the agreement as to make it read as the amendment says.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. DAWES. If the Secretary will let me have the paper I will try to make it clear. The agreement is recited, and the Senator from Missouri will see what disposition is made in the agreement.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have not read the agreement.

Mr. DAWES. The bill as originally reported ratified the agreement without any amendment or modification, but the bill as I propose to amend it reads thus:

That said agreement be, and the same hereby be, accepted, ratified, and confirmed, except the sixth article thereof, which is amended and modified by the United States so as to read as follows.

The difference between article 6 in the agreement and article 6 in the amendment is what I have tried to make clear.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAWES. The other bill, at the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas, if there be no objection, may stand as it is until it is called up again.

JOHN CHAMBERLAIN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next bill on the Calendar will be stated.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that Order of Business 195, which was passed over without prejudice, being Senate bill 371, be taken up.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 371) granting a pension to John Chamberlain.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This bill was formerly passed by the Senate, and the vote on the passage and third reading was reconsidered.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, has the report in the case been read? If not, I ask that it may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report has been read, the Chair is informed. Does the Senator desire it to be read again?

Mr. PERKINS. The bill was read and passed, and then, I think, reconsidered.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read. I do not think the RECORD shows that the report was read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. GALLINGER, February 2, 1892:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 371) granting a pension to John Chamberlain, have examined the same, and report:

The claimant under this bill was not an enlisted man, and hence can not be pensioned under the general laws. But he did service of the greatest possible value to the Government, for which he richly merits a pension.

Rev. John Chamberlain was commissioned by Governor Nathaniel Berry, of New Hampshire, as an agent to care for sick and wounded soldiers in the Army of the Potomac. Full of patriotic zeal he undertook his mission, and continued in the service until his health was completely wrecked. He acted as chaplain, nurse, physician, and even as soldier on several occasions. One medical man, in writing of him, truthfully said:

"A more faithful, persevering, and self-sacrificing worker I never knew. Wherever duty called he was to be found. Early or late, in sunshine or storm, whether amid the sad, quiet life of the hospital or among the stormy scenes at the front, there John Chamberlain was always to be found, doing something; dropping a word of consolation in the ear of some dying soldier; binding up the wounds of another; and anon writing a few lines to friends at home before closing the eyes of some dying hero. Always busy, active, and untiring; never thinking of self. With him it was always, 'What is there for me to do?' The soldiers all loved him, and if ever a man deserved a rich reward for labor worthily bestowed it is Mr. Chamberlain. I speak from experience, for 'when I was sick and in prison he visited me.' I must say that in all of my experience in the hospitals I never saw a more faithful, unflinching, and devoted Christian man than he. I only wonder that he did not break down sooner from the result of his labors."

It is in evidence that claimant spent more of his own money for the relief of sick and wounded soldiers than he received by way of compensation, and that, among other things, he enlisted a large number of recruits. Affidavits are also attached showing that on several occasions he took the guns from the hands of wounded men and did a soldier's duty. Other affidavits are an-nexed, showing the value of the services that claimant rendered the Government. He is now about 70 years of age, broken in health, and destitute of means.

Your committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the words, "subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws," and inserting instead thereof the words, "at the rate of $12 per month," and that, as amended, the bill be reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

APPENDIX.

Copy of commission.

THE STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Concord, December 16, 1862.

To whom it may concern:

This may certify that the bearer, Rev. John Chamberlain, has been duly commissioned by the executive of this State to care specially for the interests of New Hampshire soldiers in the "Army of the Potomac." Any assistance afforded him that will facilitate the object of his mission will be duly appreciated.

N. S. BERRY,

Governor of New Hampshire.

STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE, SECRETARY'S OFFICE,

Concord, January 12, 1891.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the original instrument issued the Rev. John Chamberlain in 1862.

C. B. RANDLETT,

Deputy Secretary of State

Affidavit of Judge George W. Nesmith.

George W. Nesmith, of Franklin, N. H., states that he well knew Rev. John Chamberlain, of Northfield, in this State, before the war of the rebellion, and when the war came on he knew him as one of the most active and zealous promoters of the cause of the Union. He showed his zeal by enlisting men for the regiments and by frequently addressing the people, urging energetic measures. We early heard of his application to Governor Berry, requesting the privilege of going to the front and looking after the wounded and suffering soldiers. We knew that he succeeded in his application and obtained his commission from the governor, and repeatedly, as early as 1862, repaired to the front, visited our hospitals, and exposed himself by excessive labor and night watches over the sick in infected hospitals, so that he then and there contracted severe disease incident to that climate, being seized early in 1863 with the congestive chills and fever, which prostrated him for a time, and from the effects of which he has not yet recovered.

He suffers in consequence from occasional visitations of these malarial chills, so that he is unable to perform manual labor or discharge the duties of his profession, by losing often the ordinary use of his voice. In addition to the loss of his health and voice as aforesaid, Elder Chamberlain states that in the intercourse with the destitute and friendless sick soldiers that he found it necessary, in order to save their lives or to supply their pressing wants, to furnish relief in several critical cases, advancing his own private funds, hoping to realize subsequently from the individuals thus assisted, and that in this way he had lost by aiding one Rand, of Hanover, the sum of $87; and $65 more from a soldier who had his residence in Woodstock, Vt.; and $16 more from one Ames, then of Penacook; and that his outlay and expenses exceeded what he had realized from Government for his salary. All these circumstances and losses, with frequent disability arising from the original Army visitation, tended to bring him to poverty, and to demand substantial aid from the General Government.

Affidavit of claimant.

I, John Chamberlain, of Northfield, in the county of Merrimack and State of New Hampshire, on oath, say that while our Union forces were on the march from Falmouth to Chancellorsville, in May, 1863, one Joseph McDaniel, a private of Company F, Twelfth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers, was taken suddenly sick and fell out of the ranks, and I took his gun and personally filled his place, marching quite a distance, and should have gone over with the regiment, but Surgeon Fowler rode back and told me to take McDaniel to the general hospital, which I did. I further state that in the winter of 1864 I was sent for, and helped take some five hundred recruits from Boston to Kentucky to fill the New Hampshire regiments at Paris and other places, and I did officer's duty, under the command of Col. (or Lieut. Col.) Craft, of Fifth New Hampshire Volunteers, and Capt. J. M. Durgin, of the Twelfth New Hampshire Volunteers, who was in the invalid corps.

JOHN CHAMBERLAIN.

Sworn and subscribed before me this 11th day of December, 1891.

OLIVER L. CROSS,

Justice of the Peace for the State of New Hampshire.

Affidavit of Dr. H. B. Fowler.

I, H. B. Fowler, late surgeon of the Twelfth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers, war of 1861-'65, do hereby certify that I am well acquainted with Rev. John Chamberlain, now a claimant for pension, or rather for services rendered the sick and wounded during said war. That I saw him many times during the winter and spring of 1862-'63, while we were at Falmouth, Va.; also during the marches in the spring of 1863 that he took sick from the front and on the marches to the general hospitals and their homes. That I can not name dates and circumstances, as it has been so many years, with nothing to call it to mind. That he was untiring in his devotion to the sick, both in the camp and on the march. That I have seen him, the said Chamberlain, since the close of the war in 1865 and believe that he is a victim to the malarial swamps of the South. That the governor of New Hampshire sent the said Rev. John Chamberlain to the front to look after the interest of the soldiers I suppose is true, and believe he is as much entitled to help as many who were enlisted and to-day are drawing pensions. I further certify that I have no interest whatever in this person or claim, only to see that justice is rendered when and where due.

Late Surgeon of the Twelfth New Hampshire Volunteers.

STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE, Grafton, ss:

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 19th day of December, 1890, and I hereby certify that the contents of the above declaration were fully made known and explained to the applicant before swearing, and I have no interest, direct or indirect, in the prosecution of this claim.

Notary Public.

(My certificate on file.)

Affidavit of Dr. Irving A. Watson.

This certifies that I have been acquainted with Rev. John Chamberlain for the past fourteen years. During his residence as a minister at Stark, N. H., which was in the years 1876, 1877, and 1878, I was his family physician, and at different intervals treated him for chills and fever and a resulting dysentery, all of which he informed me were contracted during his service in the war of the rebellion. I have no doubt that his disabilities were so contracted, and I believe that he is morally entitled to a pension. I am cognizant of the fact that he has for many years suffered from malaria, which I have no doubt was contracted in the service of the country.

IRVING A. WATSON, M. D.,
Secretary State Board of Health.

CONCORD, N. H., July 11, 1890.

THE STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE, Merrimack, ss:

Personally appeared the above-named Irving A. Watson and made oath that the above statement by him subscribed is true to the best of his knowledge and belief.

Before me.

C. B. RAUDLETT,
Deputy Secretary of State.

Affidavit of George Roberts.

I, George Roberts, of Northfield, in the county of Merrimack and State of New Hampshire, on oath depose and say that I was a private in Company F, Twelfth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers in the late war of rebellion, and served from August 21, 1862, till I was honorably discharged, June 21, 1865.

I have known and been well acquainted with Rev. John Chamberlain all my life. I saw him frequently while in the Army, and know that he was actively engaged in looking after and taking care of New Hampshire soldiers. I have seen him also at times doing soldier's duty in the ranks. I remember once in particular, while we were on the march from Falmouth to Chancellorsville, he fell into the ranks and took a sick soldier's gun and carried it until Surgeon H. B. Fowler of our regiment got the soldier relieved, and Chamberlain took him to the hospital. That soldier's name was Joseph McDaniel and I saw him when he fell out. I have seen Chamberlain doing soldier's duty at other times, but it is so long ago that I am unable to remember the exact times and places. My post-office address is Northfield Depot, N. H.

GEORGE ROBERTS.

Affidavit of John Keniston.

I, John Keniston, of Northfield, in the county of Merrimack and State of New Hampshire, on oath say that I was a private in Company F, Twelfth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers, in the late war of rebellion, and served from August 21, 1862, till June 21, 1865, when I was honorably discharged. I have carefully read over the foregoing affidavit of George Roberts, and know the facts therein stated to be true. Roberts and I were comrades together, and I was present when Rev. John Chamberlain did soldier's duty as stated in said affidavit. I also state that I have been well acquainted with said Chamberlain all my life, and I know that during the war he was actively engaged in taking care of New Hampshire soldiers, as I frequently met him while in the service. I am confident that I have seen him doing soldier's duty at other times than the one mentioned, but at this late date I can not now recall the times and places.

JOHN KENISTON.

STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE, Merrimack, ss:

DECEMBER 15, 1890.

There personally appeared the above-named George Roberts and John Keniston, and severally made oath that the foregoing affidavits, by them respectively signed, are true.

Before me.

OLIVER L. CROSS,
Justice of the Peace for the State.

Statement of Hon. E. B. S. Sanborn.

FRANKLIN, N. H., December 7, 1888.

I have been acquainted with Rev. John Chamberlain, of Northfield, N. H., for more than forty years.

I know him to be an honest, worthy, and patriotic man.

During the war he served the State as agent to care for the comfort of our soldiers.

In this duty he was at the front, in the hospital, on the march, everywhere, when he could render service to the soldiers or their friends at home. He shared the sufferings of army life with a courage and zeal well known and remembered by our men in New Hampshire.

He is now in seriously impaired health on account of his army service.

He is in needy circumstances, and deserves a pension as well as our heartfelt gratitude.

E. B. S. SANBORN.

This we fully indorse.

WARREN F. DANIELS,
A. W. GALLOWAY.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, this bill was reconsidered at my instance, because it is a bill for pensioning a civilian, an officer of a State, under compensation doubtless from that State, and not in the military service of the United States. I am opposed to adding any class of civilian employes or State employes to the pension rolls of the United States. I desire to enter my protest and record my vote against it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Just a word. I am willing that this matter shall come to a vote. There are hundreds of precedents for this legislation. Every nurse upon the pension roll to-day comes under this class, and I will suggest to the distinguished Senator from Missouri that he is on record himself as having introduced at least one bill similar to this in the Senate of the United States, which was enacted into law. I would furthermore suggest that during the present session a bill introduced, I think, by his colleague from Missouri [Mr. VEST], which carried a pension of $50 a month, was reported by this same committee, was passed without objection, and so far as the Senate is concerned is a law to-day.

Now, Mr. President, it seems to me this bill does not need discussion. This is an old man. He went into the Army, it is true, without being enlisted, and did very remarkable service for the soldiers of the Union. It is in evidence by affidavits that on several occasions Elder Chamberlain, as he is called in my State, took the gun from the ground when soldiers fell by his side and marched in the ranks ready to fight for the cause of the Government. To all intents and purposes he did a soldier's duty, and he is infinitely better deserving of a pension than hundreds of cases that are on the statute books to-day.

That is all I care to say about the bill. I might read the affidavits of such distinguished men as the late venerable Judge Nesmith, of New Hampshire; of the physicians who have treated this man; of the Democratic Congressman from my own district, now a member of the other House; of the Democratic member of the national committee from my State, and of other distinguished men, Republicans and Democrats, in New Hampshire, who are very much interested in this case, who feel that this old man, who gave such important service to the Government, ought to receive this pittance, now that he is almost ready to go to his grave.

I trust a vote will be taken, and that the bill will be passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I beg to say in reference to the point about my having introduced a bill to pension a civilian, an employe, that I notified the Senator that I had introduced that bill, which was to pension a teamster residing at Bado, in Texas County, who was shot all to pieces whilst performing the duty of a teamster with a train under army orders. It was because of his disabilities received in the service, in the line of duty, that that pension was granted, and it is the only one of the kind that I have ever introduced, and I would introduce it again. The Committee on Pensions unanimously approved of it. It was not pensioning a mere civilian without having received actual wounds in battle.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri object to action on the pending bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, no; I do not object to action.

Mr. GALLINGER. In reply I would simply say that if the Senator from Missouri has discovered anything in our pension laws which makes a difference between men wounded in the service of the country and those who wrecked their lives in the service of the Government I have not been able to discover that distinction. Hence his case falls to the ground.

Mr. VEST. As the Senator from New Hampshire alluded to a bill which I introduced here, for which my colleague was not in the slightest degree responsible, I desire simply to make an observation in regard to it.

I have not been enthusiastic upon the subject of pensions, although I have always been willing to vote the largest amount to the actual soldiers of the Federal Army, and have so declared myself repeatedly.

I did introduce a bill giving a pension to an old negro in the State of Missouri, who had been a teamster, and who, while in the actual discharge of his duty, hauling munitions of war and supplies in the shape of provisions to the Federal troops, lost both feet and both hands, and has since declined to receive charity from anyone. I knew personally all the facts in the case, and I am glad to say that the Committee on Pensions in both the Senate and the House unanimously reported in favor of the bill.

I do not rise to oppose this pension bill. I thought at first it was for John Chamberlain, of this city, and I was prepared to vote for it. [Laughter.] I supposed that he had served in the Federal Army without my knowing it, and as I have gotten in the habit of voting for all pension bills and never object to any, I was prepared to vote to give John Chamberlain, of Washington City, the largest pension that was asked. [Laughter.]

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, in aid of this bill I desire to say a word. There are exceptions to all rules, and one of the exceptions in pensioning grows out of the fact that sometimes during the late war men who were not enlisted were in just as bad places as those who were, and by every equity in the world are entitled to as much care and protection from the Government.

I remember very well a bill in which I took a deep interest for an engineer on a boat, who was exposed to the heaviest firing from batteries and gunboats from Memphis to Cincinnati. He was not enlisted, but he was exposed to the most desperate risks of war, and while not being actually hit, was injured by the service, and Congress, after much discussion, granted him a special act, and it was right.

It was only the other day that I had the case of a man who went into the battle of Bull Run as a paid body servant of a very distinguished general, who took all the dangers of that battle, and toward the close of it was taken prisoner, he could not get away fast enough, and was kept a year at Libbey Prison. He was not an enlisted man; but no man with any sense of equity in his heart or mind would say that that man was less entitled to the benefactions of the Government than if he had gone through the mere form of enlistment.

Upon the statement made by the Senator from New Hampshire in regard to his constituent, I have no doubt the case is within the rule. It is a matter which appeals to the discretion of the Senate, and I have never yet known it to be abused.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. HOAR. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be directed, when they report the bill making appropriations for rivers and harbors, to report as to each item thereof, whether the same be contained in the bill as it came from the House or be proposed by way of amendment, the facts tending to show the importance of the work for which the appropriation is proposed, to commerce with foreign nations or among the States.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I desire to say that that resolution has been adopted by the Senate for a number of years past, and while I am sure it is unnecessary now, because the committee have made arrangement to perform that precise duty, I think it is better that the Senate should be recorded as having requested it.

Mr. VEST. There is no objection that I know of to the resolution, but what it requires was done at the last Congress and will be done again.

Mr. HOAR. I said to the Senate—perhaps the Senator did not hear me—that I was aware that the resolution was unnecessary, but it had been passed every year for a series of years.

Mr. VEST. As a matter of course.

Mr. HOAR. I showed the resolution to the chairman of the committee who desired that it should be adopted. I am aware that the committee have made preparations to perform that service for the Senate without any direction, but I think it is better, considering the unjust and unwarrantable abuse which that measure has received in certain quarters, that the fact that the Senate requires it to be done should be on record.

Mr. VEST. There is not the slightest objection to the resolution, and I only spoke because the chairman of the committee was not present.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 3627) to grant to the Gainesville, Oklahoma and Gulf Railway Company a right of way through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 7020) to create a third division of the district of Kansas for judicial purposes, and to fix the time for holding court therein; and

A bill (H. R. 7365) to authorize the Illinois and Iowa Railway and Terminal Company to build a bridge across the Mississippi River at Moline, Ill.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 418) to change the times for holding the circuit and district courts of the United States for the western district of Missouri;

A bill (S. 1442) for the relief of John R. Blankenship; and
A bill (S. 2388) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Oregon and Washington Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Columbia River, between the State of Oregon and the State of Washington, and to establish it as a post-road."

BUILDING FOR NATIONAL MUSEUM.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next bill on the Calendar will be stated.

The bill (S. 1758) to provide for the erection of an additional fire-proof building for the National Museum was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUPREME COURT BUILDING SITE.

The bill (S. 828) authorizing the purchase of a site for a building for the accommodation of the Supreme Court of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that that bill may be passed over without losing its place on the present Calendar in the absence of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

BRONZE STATUE OF CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS.

The joint resolution (S. R. 15) for the erection and location of a bronze statue of Christopher Columbus and the removal of the Naval Monument to a new site, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KANSAS RIVER DAMS.

The bill (S. 2437) granting to the Topeka Water and Electric Power Company of Kansas the right to erect and maintain a dam or dams across the Kansas River, within Shawnee County, in the State of Kansas, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I desire to move an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause of that bill and insert a substitute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert:

That the assent of Congress is hereby given to the Topeka Water and Electric Car Company, a corporation created and organized under the laws of Kansas, its successors and assigns, to erect, construct, and forever maintain a dam or dams across the Kansas River at any suitable place or places within Shawnee County, in the State of Kansas.

Mr. PERKINS. I would say in explanation, that my amendment is a copy of the bill that was originally introduced conferring upon this company the right to construct and to maintain this dam. It was thought at first by the committee that perhaps such a bill ought not to be reported. Subsequently, upon investigation, they learned that from Topeka to the mouth of the Kansas River, there are now twenty railroad bridges spanning the stream, not one of which has a draw span or a swing, and all of them permanent structures, and at Lawrence, some 25 miles below Topeka, there is a dam which was constructed without authority of Congress, but under the general authority granted by the State of Kansas. It seems to me there ought not to be any objection to the amendment I have proposed. It is what the people desire. The Kansas River is not, and has not been for twenty-five years a navigable stream, and the conditions imposed by the bill as reported by the committee ought not to be imposed upon the company that desires to build this dam.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I reported this bill from the Committee on Commerce. We thought that its provisions were absolutely just to all parties. I know personally, however, that the statement of the Senator from Kansas is correct. There is no navigation at all upon the stream which is proposed to be dammed; no steamboat has been up it for years, and none ever will be. I have no objection to the amendment, because navigation is simply impossible there. If the Senate choose to adopt the amendment, I have no objection.

Mr. PERKINS. Technically the stream is considered a navigable one, but really it is not.

Mr. VEST. It is put down on the records of the Engineer Bureau as a navigable stream, but it has been really not a navigable stream for more than twenty years. There will be no navigating interests affected by this legislation.

Mr. PEPPER. I desire to say, in addition to what has already been suggested, that the State of Kansas has all along been exercising exclusive jurisdiction over the Kansas or Kaw River. There are now some twenty-three bridges between the mouth of the river and Topeka, and they are all close, compact structures, without any arrangement for drawing or separating them. The river has not been used for purposes of navigation at any time in its history to any considerable extent, and what little there was of that was by trappers and others many years ago. So a restriction of this kind can not be of any possible service to the Government, and might in some way at some time or other be in the way of our own people.

Mr. VEST. I ask that the amendment be again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again read. The Secretary again read the amendment proposed by Mr. PERKINS.

Mr. VEST. I move to strike out the word "forever." I do not like a word of that kind in a bill.

Mr. PERKINS. There is no objection to that.

Mr. VEST. Then I move to insert the ordinary provision "that Congress shall have the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act."

Mr. PERKINS. There is no objection to that amendment.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The verbal amendments to the amendment will be considered as agreed to, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE AT QUINCY, ILL.

The bill (S. 2254) authorizing the Quincy Pontoon Bridge Company to construct and maintain a pontoon bridge across the Mississippi River at the city of Quincy, in the State of Illinois, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, line 6, after the words "river at," to strike out "some convenient" and insert "a;" in the same line, after the word "point," to insert "suitable to the interests of navigation;" so as to make the section read:

That it shall be lawful for the Quincy Pontoon Bridge Company, its successors and assigns, to build, construct, and maintain a pontoon wagon and foot bridge across the Mississippi River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in or near the corporate limits of the city of Quincy, in Adams County, in the State of Illinois, and extending across said river to the Missouri shore opposite to said city.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 1, after the word "with," to strike out "one" and insert "a;" in line 2, after the word "draw," to strike out "of" and insert "giving;" in line 3, after the word "feet," to strike out "in width in the clear, located over the main channel of said river, which;" and to insert "clear channel way for each navigable channel of the river, and such other openings for the passage of rafts and logs as in the opinion of the Secretary of War may be necessary: Provided, that;" and in line 7, after the word "said," to strike out "draw" and insert "draws;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That said bridge shall be constructed with a suitable pontoon draw giving not less than 10 feet clear channel way for each navigable channel of the river, and such other openings for the passage of rafts and logs as in the opinion of the Secretary of War may be necessary: Provided, That said draws shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signal to allow the passage of boats.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 17, after the word "construction," to insert "or after completion;" so as to read:

And until the said plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be commenced or built, and should any changes be made in the plan of said bridge during the progress of construction or after completion, such changes shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert, at the end of section 3, the following:

And the said bridge shall be constructed with such aids to the passage of said bridge, in the form of booms, dikes, piers, or other suitable and proper structures for confining the flow of water to a permanent and easily navigated channel, for a distance of not less than 1 mile above the bridge location, and for the guiding of rafts, steamboats, and other water craft safely through the draw and raft spans, as the Secretary of War shall prescribe and order to be constructed and maintained at the expense of the company owning said bridge; and the said structure shall be at all times so kept and managed as to offer reasonable and proper means for the passage of vessels through said structure.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 4, after the word "construction," to strike out "of plan" and insert "or any alteration;" in line 5, after the word "bridge," to strike out "made necessary by such action of Congress" and insert "that may be directed at any time by Congress or the Secretary of War;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act, or any part thereof, at any time, by the Congress of the United States, is hereby expressly reserved; and any change in the construction or any alteration of said bridge that may be directed at any time by Congress or the Secretary of War shall be at the expense of the owners of said bridge or the parties operating and controlling the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGES IN ALABAMA.

The bill (S. 2021) granting the right and authority to the Mexican Gulf, Pacific and Puget Sound Railroad Company, a company organized under the laws of the States of Florida and Alabama, to build one bridge over each of the following-named rivers in the State of Alabama, viz, the Alabama River, the Warrior River, the Sipsey River, and the Tennessee River; the said bridges to be used, operated for and in behalf of the Mexican Gulf, Pacific and Puget Sound Railroad Company to carry freight and passengers by rail and otherwise, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, line 5, after the word "is," to strike out "and are;" in line 13, before the word "River" to insert "Sipsey;" and in line 15, after the word "bridges," to insert "and;" and in line 16, after the word "on," to insert "the;" so as to read:

That the Mexican Gulf, Pacific and Puget Sound Railroad Company, a railroad corporation organized under the laws of the States of Florida and Alabama, is hereby authorized and empowered to construct, maintain, and operate one bridge over and across each of the following-named rivers, all in the State of Alabama: The Alabama River at a point in Monroe and Clark Counties, or in Wilcox County, Ala.; the Warrior River at a point in Hale and Greene Counties, Ala., or at a point in Marengo and Green Counties, Ala.; the Tennessee River at a point in the counties of Colbert and Lauderdale, Ala.; the Sipsey River at a point in Pickens or Tuscaloosa Counties, Ala.; and to lay railroad tracks on the said bridges and to run trains on the same:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 16, after the word "built," to strike out:

Constructed, and maintained in such a manner so as not to obstruct navigation; and the plans for said bridges shall be filed with and approved by the Secretary of the Navy; and the said bridges over the said streams shall be built by the plans approved by the Secretary of the Navy, evidenced by his written approval, of which written approval shall be filed and recorded a certified copy in the office of the secretary of the State of Alabama, and the original shall be filed and recorded in the office of the said railroad company; that the said bridges are to be used, operated, and maintained for and in behalf of the said Mexican Gulf, Pacific and Puget Sound Railroad Company to carry freight and passengers, by rail and otherwise, at a reasonable price, not in conflict with the United States or State laws.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

And located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation as the Secretary of War shall prescribe, and to secure that object the said company or corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, designs and drawings of the bridges, and complete hydrographic and topographic maps of the rivers and their banks from 1 mile above to one-half mile below the proposed crossings, and no bridge shall be commenced or built under the provisions of this act until the plan and location thereof have been submitted to and approved by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That said bridges shall be at all times so managed and kept as to offer reasonable and proper means for the passage of vessels through or under them; and for the safety of vessels passing at night there shall be displayed on said bridges, from sunset to sunrise, such lights or other signals as the Light-House Board may prescribe; and all changes in said bridges required by the Secretary of War at any time, or their entire removal, shall be at the expense of the corporations or persons owning or operating said bridges.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That any part of this grant and act not carried out within three years from its passage will become subject to be repealed.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

SEC. 2. That the bridges constructed under this act and according to its limitations shall be lawful structures and shall be known as post routes, and the same are hereby declared to be post routes, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, freight, and the munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for their transportation over the railroads and public highways leading to said bridges; and equal privileges in the use of said bridges shall be granted to all telegraph companies, and the United States shall have the right of way for postal-telegraph purposes across said bridges.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert the following as an additional section:

SEC. 3. That all railway companies desiring to use said bridges shall have, and be entitled to, equal rights and privileges in the passage of the same and in the use of the machinery and fixtures thereof, and of all the approaches thereto, under and upon such terms and conditions as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War upon hearing the allegations and proofs of the parties in case they shall not agree.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert the following as an additional section:

SEC. 4. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert the following as an additional section:

SEC. 5. That if actual construction of the bridges herein authorized shall not be commenced within two years from the passage of this act and be completed in four years from the same date, the rights and privileges hereby granted shall cease and be determined.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read:

A bill granting the right and authority to the Mexican Gulf, Pacific and Puget Sound Railroad Company, a company organized under the laws of the States of Florida and Alabama, to build one bridge over each of the following-named rivers in the State of Alabama, namely: the Alabama River, the Warrior River, the Sipsey River, and the Tennessee River; the said bridges to be used by the Mexican Gulf, Pacific and Puget Sound Railroad Company in carrying freight and passengers by rail and otherwise.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER DAM.

The bill (S. 1665) to authorize the Grand Rapids Water and Electric Power Company, of Grand Rapids, Minn., to construct a dam across the Mississippi River was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, line 6, after the word "point," to strike out "upon or near" and insert "below;" in line 8, after the words "Grand Rapids," to strike out "to be approved by the Secretary of War;" in line 11, after the word "that," to insert "the location and plan of said dam shall be approved by the Secretary of War; that the said dam shall be constructed under his supervision, and that;" in line 26, after the word "necessary" to insert "in his judgment," and in line 28, after the word "charge," to insert:

Provided further, That the said Grand Rapids Water and Electric Power Company, its heirs or assigns, shall have no right to the use of water except as it may be liberated by the agent of the United States from the Pokegama Reservoir, in the interests of navigation:

So as to make the section read:

That the consent of the Government is hereby given to the Grand Rapids Water and Electric Power Company, of Grand Rapids, Minn., to construct across the Mississippi River at some point below the rapids in said river at the village of Grand Rapids, and within the corporate limits of said Grand Rapids, a dam, canal, and the appurtenances thereof, for water power and other purposes, and in connection therewith a wagon and foot bridge for the public travel: Provided, That the location and plan of said dam shall be approved by the Secretary of War; that the said dam shall be constructed under his supervision, and that the Government of the United States may at any time construct, in connection therewith, a suitable lock for navigation purposes: Provided also, That the Government of the United States may, at any time, take possession of said dam and control the same for purposes of navigation, by paying said company the actual cost of the same, but shall not do so to the destruction of the water power created by said dam: Provided further, That the Secretary of War may at any time require and enforce, at the expense of the owners, such modifications and changes in the construction of said dam as he may deem advisable in the interest of navigation; and that said dam shall, if necessary, in his judgment, be so built that boats and rafts may pass through the same without the imposition of any toll or charge: Provided further, That the said Grand Rapids Water and Electric Power Company, its heirs or assigns, shall have no right to the use of water except as it may be liberated by the agent of the United States from the Pokegama Reservoir, in the interests of navigation: And provided further, That all suits relative to any obstruction of navigation arising from said dam may be tried in the United States circuit and district courts for Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert the following as an additional section:

SEC. 3. That this act shall be null and void if the construction of the dam herein authorized be not commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date hereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEAMER FOXHALL.

The bill (S. 153) to provide American registers for the steamers Foxhall and S. Oteri, of New Orleans, La., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, line 4, after the word "foreign-built," to strike out "steamers" and insert "steamer;" in line 5, after the word "Foxhall," to strike out "and S. Oteri;" in line 6, before the word "owned," to strike out "wholly;" in the same line, after the word "by," to insert "Lawrence C. Fallon;" in the same line, after the word "American," to strike out "citizens" and insert "citizen;" in line 7, after the word "by," to strike out "them" and insert "him," and in the same line, after the word "as," to strike out "vessels" and insert "a vessel;" so as to make the section read:

That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed to cause the foreign-built steamer Foxhall, of New Orleans, La., purchased and owned by Lawrence C. Fallon, an American citizen, and repaired by him, to be registered as a vessel of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 3, after the word "steam," to strike out "vessels" and insert "vessel," so as to read:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to authorize and direct the inspection of said steam vessel, steam boilers, steam pipes, and the appurtenances of said boilers, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide an American register for the steamer Foxhall, of New Orleans, La."

THIRD AND FOURTH CLASS MAIL MATTER.

The bill (S. 2438) to consolidate mail matter of the third and fourth classes was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that on and after the 1st of July, 1892, all articles of mail matter of the third and fourth classes shall be comprehended in one class, to be known as third-class matter, the postage on which shall be chargeable at the rate of 1 cent for each 2 ounces or fraction thereof, to be prepaid with postage stamps affixed thereto.

Mr. PLATT. I should like the Senator from Oregon, who is on the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to state what change this makes in the present law relating to postage?

Mr. MITCHELL. It makes this change: The bill consolidates the third and fourth classes of matter and makes the rate just the same as the rate on the third-class matter is now.

Mr. HALE. Is that an increase or decrease?

Mr. MITCHELL. It is a decrease of rate.

Mr. PLATT. A decrease on the whole but an increase on the fourth-class rates.

Mr. MITCHELL. It makes the rates for fourth-class matter just what the third-class rates are now.

Mr. PADDOCK. That is an increase.

Mr. PLATT. That is an increase on fourth-class matter.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is.

Mr. HALE. Which rate is established in consolidating those two classes, the third-class rate or the fourth-class rate.

Mr. MITCHELL. The third-class rate.

Mr. HALE. That is an increase.

Mr. PLATT. An increase on merchandise.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will state that I did not report the bill; it was reported, I think, by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER], but the real object of the bill was to do away with the distinction between third and fourth class matter, so that all matter which is now fourth-class matter will go as third-class matter, at the same rate that third-class matter now goes, whatever that is.

Mr. HALE. What is the general distinction between the two?

Mr. MITCHELL. I will state to the Senator from Maine that it requires an expert to determine that very question. That is one of the principal reasons why the distinction is proposed to be abolished by this bill.

Mr. HALE. Merchandise which is now fourth-class matter, is brought into the third-class?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, sir; that is it.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I should be very glad to have the Senator from Oregon give us some general idea at least of what is third-class matter and what is fourth-class matter?

Mr. MITCHELL. I should prefer, if there is to be a discussion about it, that the bill go over until the Senator who reported it is here.

Mr. CALL. I think that is best.

Mr. PADDOCK. Let it be passed over without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOLPH in the chair). The bill will go over without prejudice.

MARY CLARE KELLY.

The bill (S. 2004) granting a pension to Mary Clare Kelly was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "fifty;" and in the same line, after the word "month," to add the words, "in lieu of the pension she is now receiving;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place upon the pension rolls the name of Mary Clare Kelly, widow of the late Benjamin F. Kelly, brevet major-general of volunteers, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 a month, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM A. RICHARDS.

The bill (S. 1737) for the relief of William A. Richards, United States surveyor-general of Wyoming, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It appropriates $318 to reimburse William A. Richards, United States surveyor-general for Wyoming, for losses incurred by him through a cloud-burst upon July 6, 1891, near Fort Washakie, upon the Shoshone Indian Reservation, in the State of Wyoming, while in the discharge of his duties as surveyor-general, examining a public survey, under section 2223 of the Revised Statutes, and the special instructions of the honorable Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NORFOLK AND WESTERN RAILROAD COMPANY.

The bill (S. 2923) to authorize the Norfolk and Western Railroad Company of Virginia to extend its line of road into and within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, line 30, after the word "tracks," to insert "in the aggregate;" so as to read:

Provided, That no more than two tracks in the aggregate shall be laid along Water street, in Georgetown, by this or any other corporation. And the roads and tracks and bridges hereby authorized to be constructed shall be a public highway, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 4, after the word "route," to insert "subject to the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the said company shall have power to construct and operate their said extension upon, across, or over such of the streets and avenues of said city as are upon its said route, subject to the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia: Provided, however, That good, substantial, and effective gates and fences shall be placed along its said route or across said streets or avenues wherever the same may be required for the protection of the public in the judgment of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, as to which the company shall have due and sufficient notice.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert the following proviso at the end of section 4:

Provided, That the said company, its successors and assigns, shall, in securing its right of way through private property within the District of Columbia, stipulate that the District of Columbia shall have the right, without charge of any kind, to cross the said right of way with any public sewer, water main, conduit, or other underground construction laid or proposed to be laid for the public safety, comfort, or health; and the said company, its successors and assigns, shall at all times freely and without charge or hindrance of any kind permit the legally constituted authorities of the District of Columbia to cross the said right of way in the District of Columbia, wherever necessary, in the construction of any public sewer, water main, or other construction necessary for the public safety, comfort, or health.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 2, after the word "within," to strike out "two years" and insert "one year," and in line 3, after the word "within," to strike out "three" and insert "two;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. That the construction of the extension of the road hereby authorized shall begin within one year after the approval of this act and be completed within two years from said date.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. This is a matter in which the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] has taken some interest, and I see the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER], who reported the bill, is not present.

Mr. COCKRELL. As soon as the reading of the bill is concluded, so that that part of its consideration should be finished, I was going to ask that it be passed over until the Senator from Maryland returns.

Mr. HALE. Let us save the time which the reading will take.

Mr. COCKRELL. It will save the time of reading it hereafter, as it is nearly through, to conclude its reading now.

Mr. HALE. Let the reading be finished, and then let the bill go over.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is what I was going to suggest.

Mr. HALE. That is all right.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, Mr. President, the bill has been read and is in the Senate as in the Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. Let it be passed over without prejudice, retaining its place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made the bill will go over, retaining its place on the Calendar, the amendments of the committee having been adopted as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill is still open to amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still open to amendment. The next business on the Calendar will be reported.

ST. FRANCIS BARRACKS, FLA.

The bill (S. 754) to authorize the sale of the site of St. Francis Barracks, Fla., the sale or removal of the improvements thereof, and to provide for a new site and the construction of suitable buildings thereon, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move that the bill be amended in the fifth line of section 2, by striking out "power house" and inserting "powder house."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FREE DELIVERY OF MAILS.

The bill (S. 524) extending the privileges of the free delivery of mails was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that all the rights and privileges relating to the free delivery of mails now enjoyed under existing legislation by cities having a population of 10,000 persons, or a gross revenue of $10,000 annually, shall be extended to all cities and towns having a population of not less than 5,000, or where the post-office has shown a gross revenue of $5,000 for the previous fiscal year.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 3627) to grant to the Gainesville, Oklahoma and Gulf Railway Company a right of way through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 7020) to create a third division of the district of Kansas for judicial purposes, and to fix the term for holding court therein, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. 7365) to authorize the Illinois and Iowa Railway and Terminal Company to build a bridge across the Mississippi River at Moline, Ill., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

CIRCUIT COURTS OF APPEALS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 2729) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals, and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes."

Mr. HOAR. Let the bill be read and then I will make my statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not undertake to decide the question as to whether the Calendar is to be proceeded with under the agreement or the unfinished business.

Mr. PADDOCK. That was the understanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] asks to have the bill read. The Chair stated that he had not decided whether the unanimous agreement to go to the Calendar for two days is suspended or has been fulfilled.

Mr. HOAR. We went to the Calendar the day before yesterday and took all the rest of that day after morning business and after some speeches were made, all of yesterday, and so much of to-day. Now, I think the three bills which I desire to call up in all probability will be disposed of in half an hour. I am very desirous indeed of having them disposed of at this time. I understand they have the right of way, or at least the bill which is the unfinished business has the right of way. I think we can return to the Calendar at a very early hour this afternoon.

Mr. COCKRELL. In view of what the Senator has said heretofore, and says now, in regard to the necessity of acting upon these bills which he has reported and for which he feels a responsibility, I shall not interpose any objection as to this being a violation of our order, provided, when the bills in which he is interested and desires action upon are considered, we may then complete the two days that we pledged to the Calendar. I think that will be fair to the Senator and satisfactory to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has heard the proposition of the Senator from Missouri. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2729) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals, and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes."

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, in the twelfth line of the first section, the word "may" should be "shall." It is a mistake in the printing or the dictating.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 12, it is proposed to strike out "may" and insert "shall;" so as to read: "where the defendant shall be sentenced to a fine," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief statement, which will occupy but one minute, I think.

Under the act of last winter all criminal cases where the defendant is charged with an infamous crime go directly to the Supreme Court on exceptions from either the circuit or district court wherever they happen to be tried. Now, the Supreme Court has held that an infamous crime is a crime where the court has authority to sentence to an infamous punishment, and that an infamous punishment is a punishment of more than twelve months at hard labor in the penitentiary, that being the limit of the power to sentence to hard labor, and the limit of sentence to the penitentiary as distinguished from ordinary jails.

The result is that practically every criminal case may be brought to the Supreme Court of the United States if there be the fine of a dollar only or a sentence of a week's imprisonment only. Still, if the court has a discretion to sentence for more than twelve months, the liability to the punishment and not the actual sentence determines the question of the infamy of the crime. Of course, that not only crowds the docket of the Supreme Court of the United States enormously, but it delays the ordinary administration of justice, enabling all criminals to postpone for three or four years their sentence, and if a new trial be ordered, then the likelihood of the loss of the evidence exists. It also in many cases—I do not mean to say that these cases are the rule at all—puts poor defendants, persons who have committed petty crimes, very much into the power of dishonest counsel, who encourage them to take these appeals, which are costly and expensive.

The committee have thought that the true policy, therefore, was to have the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court depend upon the actual sentence where the sentence is for a fine of more than $5,000, which is the recent limit of civil jurisdiction, or where the sentence is for more than twelve months, then it is proposed to leave this right to go up directly. In all other cases the defendants charged with crime have the right to go to the court of appeals, which we suppose will be a court equal in dignity and learning and ability to the State courts throughout the country everywhere. I will add to the report of my remarks a reference to three or four cases where this doctrine is decided.

This is the first change made in the bill and of course the court of appeals may in all cases certify every important question that comes before it to the Supreme Court of the United States if it be necessary for uniformity of decision or otherwise.

Now, the second change which we have made is in limiting the appeals from the Court of Claims. The Court of Claims have now some twenty-one or twenty-two thousand cases on their docket, which is constantly increasing, and is itself to be relieved by some other measures which are proposed. We propose to limit the appeal from the Court of Claims on claims arising under the Indian depredations act to cases which involve the construction of the Constitution, the validity of a treaty, or the constitutionality of a law, and to give the court authority in all such cases to order up the whole case, both the law and facts, if it see fit.

Then we make a similar provision in regard to the decisions of the Court of Private Land Claims. The section of the act which relates to appeals from the supreme court of the District of Columbia has caused a good deal of difference of opinion in the profession among the gentlemen practicing here. The theory of the committee was that if the present system be retained, then this limitation should be put upon the right of appeal, which is a pretty liberal right of appeal. I will not enter upon the discussion of it now, but if the bill which the committee nearly unanimously—I am not sure that all approved it—which was introduced by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] shall be adopted establishing a court of appeals for the District of Columbia, then we would think it proper to put the right of appeal or exception on a substantial uniformity with that of the courts of appeals in the rest of the country. I propose to strike out the fifth section from this bill altogether, and leave that matter of appeal to be determined when the policy of Congress in regard to the construction of the courts of the District is determined.

That is all I desire to say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out section 5, as follows:

SEC. 5. That no appeal or writ of error shall hereafter be allowed from any judgment or decree, at law or in equity, in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, except in any case in which the jurisdiction of the court is in issue, in which case the question of jurisdiction alone shall be certified to the Supreme Court of the United States for decision; or in prize causes; or in cases to which the United States, or some officer thereof acting under their authority, is a party; or in cases in which the adjudication involves the construction or application of the Constitution, or the validity or construction of a treaty, or the constitutionality of a law of the United States: Provided, however, That in any case in which such an appeal or writ of error might be allowed under the statutes now in force the supreme court of the District of Columbia may certify questions or propositions of law to the Supreme Court of the United States for its decision; and that the Supreme Court of the United States may require any such case to be certified to it for review and determination on original application by either party, in the same manner and with like effect as is provided with regard to the circuit courts of appeals in the sixth section of the act of March 3, 1891, establishing those courts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee whether or not this bill affects the right of appeal as provided now by law in criminal causes, except in regard to the District of Columbia?

Mr. HOAR. It does; as I have stated. I made that statement. I repeat that is the most important thing in the bill. I will repeat my statement for the information of the Senator, as his attention was diverted.

Under the existing law practically every criminal case which comes up in the country, a case of petty larceny of a half dozen postage stamps or the opening of a letter by a clerk or by a person not a clerk, of course delivered to the person, the exceptions come to the Supreme Court of the United States. The law of last winter gives a right of exception directly to the Supreme Court of the United States either from the district or circuit court in all infamous crimes, and the Supreme Court has held that an infamous crime is a crime which may be punishable in the discretion of the court by an infamous punishment, and that an infamous punishment is a punishment by imprisonment at hard labor for more than one year, and there can not be any imprisonment for less than one year at hard labor under the law of the United States.

The committee propose to substitute for that test the actual matter, the actual sentence, and to provide that if the person be sentenced to a fine of more than $5,000, which was until recently the limit of the civil jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, or if the party be sentenced to hard labor for more than a year, then he may come, as now, directly to the Supreme Court with his exceptions, and they may judge. Otherwise he goes to the court of appeals. If the court of appeals find it is a question in regard to which different policies are growing up in the different circuits or for any other reason that it is an important question, that may certify it up, and of course it will go up if it involves the constitutionality of a law or treaty.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to ask what becomes of that class of criminal causes in which the constitutionality of a law is brought in question?

Mr. HOAR. They go up from the court of appeals as now. They go, in the first instance, to the court of appeals and not directly to the Supreme Court.

Mr. MORGAN. In criminal causes?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. My sole purpose was to preserve the right of appeal in some form or other to the Supreme Court of the United States in those cases of a criminal character which involve the constitutionality of a law of the United States.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, that is left untouched. This bill does not affect it. That is left under the law of last winter. In all that class of cases the right to go directly to the Supreme Court is preserved under the law of last winter.

Mr. MORGAN. That meets any objection I might have to the bill.

Mr. PASCO. What was the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts to the first section?

Mr. HOAR. To substitute the word "shall" for "may." That was a mistake in dictation to the stenographer, undoubtedly; it was intended to be "shall."

Mr. PASCO. It seems to me that is an undesirable amendment, because the courts might avoid the right of appeal simply by reducing the fine a few dollars or reducing the punishment by a few months, and the right of appeal would thereby be destroyed.

Mr. HOAR. But if you leave it "may" and it is construed to be a case in which the court have a discretion the whole evil which this bill is designed to remedy would remain.

Mr. PASCO. I understand that where the law makes a penalty and fixes the penalty the right of appeal exists.

Mr. HOAR. That is the very thing that it is wished to change.

Mr. PASCO. The change of that word will leave it really in the power of the court to determine whether the right of appeal shall exist or not. The court can reduce the penalty to $4,995 and thus take away the right of appeal, or it can reduce the punishment by a few days or weeks.

Mr. HOAR. Then it goes to the court of appeals. The defendant has in that case a remedy equal to that of any other citizen of the United States, because the court of appeals is everywhere equal to the State court, and if in the court of appeals it involves a question of law important enough for them to certify it up, or a question of law where there is a difference in the decision in the different circuits, then it goes up. But I think my honorable friend will see that if the law were to be enacted as he thinks and suggests it should be—

Mr. PASCO. Not as I think it should be, but as it has been.
Mr. HOAR. This simply cures the existing law of its defect. I do not suppose that any Senator, certainly not so intelligent a lawyer as the Senator from Florida, would for a moment think that the present law, which was passed inadvertently and which the mover of that amendment I think is satisfied was a mistake, should be retained. That would allow every case of larceny of half a dozen postage stamps, or the thousand instances, almost, of cases in criminal law where there is a discretion in the court to impose a large fine or a discretion in the court to impose a sentence of more than one year, to go up.

Take the case, for instance, of selling liquor without a license. There the court may sentence for two years to the penitentiary for an ordinary sale of liquor without a United States license. Why should we put upon the Supreme Court of the United States the burden of dealing with the criminal exceptions which are almost always simple and clear matters, and give every defendant in the country without an exception the right to four or five years delay while the present block of the Supreme Court exists, and whatever delay may exist hereafter, which may be lessened, exposing them to the plunder of dishonest attorneys, where that may happen to exist, as it does sometimes? In these little cases it seems to me nobody can object.

Mr. PASCO. I would suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that those are not infamous crimes.

Mr. HOAR. Yes, they are. The Senator, I think, did not consider the statement which I made. I have a communication of the Supreme Court of the United States here, concurred in by all the judges, which I will read.

Mr. PASCO. It may be prescribed in our statutes, but it is certainly not the case under the common law.

Mr. HOAR. This is what the court say, if the Senator will pardon me:

Such a writ of error may be sued out by a person convicted of any "infamous crime," which, as has been settled by repeated adjudications, includes every offense for which the accused might be sentenced to imprisonment in a penitentiary, even if the punishment actually imposed is a fine only.

In other words, in ninety-nine one-hundredths, I suppose, at any rate in a very enormous proportion, of the crimes committed against the United States in this country there is a discretion in the court to impose a fine and a sentence of imprisonment of more than one year in the penitentiary, though a very large proportion of such offenses are punished only by a fine or a slight term of imprisonment.

The statute of last winter provides that in the case of every infamous crime the defendant may go to the Supreme Court with the exceptions, and the court have held that that is an infamous crime which may in the discretion of the court be punished, whether it be actually so punished or not. The committee proposed unanimously in this respect, and in accordance with a provision drawn by the Supreme Court of the United States, also unanimous in this respect, that the matter shall be determined not by the liability of the sentence but by the actual sentence, and that a person sentenced to a fine of less than $5,000 or to imprisonment less than a year, shall go to the court of appeals.

Mr. PASCO. It may be that the statute which was passed during the last Congress went too far, and it may be quite proper that in those cases which involve no moral turpitude and which are not really infamous crimes under the common law, the right of appeal should not exist; but there are cases where a conviction may destroy a man's reputation, and it was upon that idea, if I recollect the discussion aright upon the original bill when it was passed by Congress, that the right of appeal was given. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that there should be a line of distinction drawn, and that the committee might draw that line of distinction so as to still keep unimpaired the right of appeal in cases upon the conviction of crimes which involve any moral turpitude, and that surely that right ought to exist unimpaired. It ought not to be in the power of a court to take away a right of appeal simply by reducing the penalty $5 or taking off a day or two or a week or a month of the sentence. That power ought not to exist in the court; the right of appeal ought to be a perfectly clear right, and one that the court can not deprive a person of simply by reducing the sentence.

I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that there should be some change in the language of the bill so as to protect the class of cases which he speaks of, and at the same time to afford proper protection to parties charged with the other classes of offenses, which involve moral turpitude. This amendment has sprung up suddenly. It is not printed, and there was no notice of any such amendment as the bill came from the committee; and I was not aware until the very last moment that a proposition to change this right of appeal was to come before the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I do not think this amendment changes the construction of the bill. I think it will be so construed anyway. I do not think that a better line of distinction can be found than that which has been so carefully drawn by the court and the committee. If a person be sentenced to a fine of $5 under circumstances that in a possible conceivable case might involve moral turpitude he has the court of appeals; he has as good a court as any citizen of the State has charged with like offenses; and in addition to that he has the right to go from there to the Supreme Court of the United States if the court of appeals certifies that it is a question important enough to be so sent. It seems to me that that is all that will be necessary.

Mr. GRAY. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts, the chairman of the committee, and the Senator from Florida to the fact that the act of 1891 in providing for appeals in criminal cases to the Supreme Court of the United States was an extension of right in that regard very much beyond anything that had existed theretofore; and while we all thought that it was wise not to stop a person who was engaged in litigation that concerned his life or liberty on his way to the Supreme Court when we facilitated that approach in matters of mere property, at the same time it seems to me that we shall not suffer very much even if we take the restriction imposed by this amendment which comes from the committee.

Mr. HOAR. That is true. Even in a capital case a person can go to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. PALMER. I understand that there is an amendment to the bill pending.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is no amendment pending.

Mr. PALMER. Is there any amendment to the printed bill?

Mr. HOAR. The fifth section has been stricken out by the Senate.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOAR. I ask leave to append to my remarks the communication from the Chief Justice of the United States to which I referred.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The communication is as follows:

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.
Washington, D. C., February 1, 1892.

DEAR SIR: I have laid before the justices of the Supreme Court your courteous letter of the 12th of January, in which you say that it is quite obvious that the attention of Congress should be brought at an early day to the preparation of a measure which shall give further relief to the Supreme Court of the United States; and you particularly mention the great number of cases likely to come before the court from the circuit courts of the United States under the judiciary act of 1891 upon convictions of felony, as well as from the Court of Claims under the Indian depredation act of 1891, and from the Court of Private Land Claims under the act of 1891 establishing that court; you also refer to the matter of appeals from the supreme court of the District of Columbia; and you invite any suggestions in regard to the general question of the relief of the Supreme Court of the United States, or in regard to any details relating to any branch of its jurisdiction, which any member of the court may be willing to make.

Your letter has been carefully considered by each of the justices, and after full conference thereon they have agreed upon some suggestions which it has seemed convenient to embody in the form of a draft of a bill, herewith respectfully submitted to the consideration of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate.

A brief summary of the reasons which have led the justices to suggest the amendment expressed in the first section of the inclosed draft may not be out of place.

For a century after the adoption of the Constitution of the United States (during which period the business of the Supreme Court was far less than it now is) no writ of error or appeal was allowed from the judgment of a circuit court of the United States in any criminal case whatever, even if tried, as such cases often were, before a single judge; and no question of law in any criminal case could be brought to the Supreme Court, except upon a certificate of division of opinion between two judges presiding at the trial. A writ of error from the judgment of a circuit court in a capital case was first given by the act of February 5, 1889, c. 113, sec. 6 (25 Stat., 656). At that time there was no court except the Supreme Court in which such appellate jurisdiction could be vested. But the circuit court of appeals, as now established in each judicial circuit, consisting of three judges, is fully competent to deal with criminal cases of every grade.

Experience has shown that such cases, and especially capital cases, though often argued at great length, rarely present questions of law of peculiar difficulty; and if such exceptional questions should arise, ample protection would seem to be afforded to the accused by the provisions of the sixth section of the judiciary act of 1891, enabling the circuit court of appeals to certify questions of law to the Supreme Court for decision, and authorizing the Supreme Court, if it thinks fit, to order up the whole case by writ of certiorari. The fifth section of that act, for the first time in the history of our jurisprudence, permits criminal cases not capital to be brought "direct to the Supreme Court" by writ of error; and it authorizes such a writ of error to be sued out by a person convicted of any "infamous crime," which, as has been settled by repeated adjudications, includes every offense for which the accused might be sentenced to imprisonment in a penitentiary, even if the punishment actually imposed is a fine only. (Ex parte Wilson, 114 U. S., 417; United States vs. Pettit, 114 U. S., 429; Mackin vs. United States, 117 U. S., 318; Parkinson vs. United States, 121 U. S., 281; In re Claassen, 140 U. S., 300.) If Congress should think it advisable to retain the direct appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in capital cases, it can hardly be doubted that some restriction of that jurisdiction in other criminal cases is necessary to enable the court to perform duties of paramount importance to the public.

The second section in the inclosed draft is founded upon intimations of members of the bar that in some cases the parties might prefer an immediate hearing in the circuit court of appeals to a later hearing in the Supreme Court; and is framed so as not to permit the transfer, without consent of parties, of any case which could be reached for argument in the regular course of the docket, either at the present term or at the next term of the Supreme Court.

The other sections will sufficiently explain themselves, upon comparing them with the existing statutes cited in the margin of each section.

In order to lose no time in communicating with your committee in regard to the points which have seemed to us most important, these suggestions have been confined to those points. But we shall be pleased at any time to afford any aid in our power, which the committee may desire, on these or other questions.

I am, with the highest respect, truly yours,

MELVILLE W. FULLER, Chief Justice.

Hon. GEORGE F. HOAR,

Chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate.

CAUSES IN THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1615) to facilitate the disposition of causes in the Court of Claims.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

Mr. HOAR. Before the committee amendments are acted on, I desire to move an amendment to the third section. I move to add the following proviso:

Provided, That this section shall not apply to cases arising under the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to have printed in the RECORD a communication from the Attorney-General, embracing a statement of facts concerning the present status of the business pending in the Court of Claims.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The communication will be printed in the RECORD, if there be no objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. If it is not too long, let us hear it read.

Mr. HOAR. Let it be read. It is not very long.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The communication will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.
Washington, D. C., March 26, 1892.

SIR: Complying with your request, I have caused to be prepared the following statement of facts concerning the present status of the business pending in the Court of Claims.

The report of the Attorney-General for the year 1891, page 4, contains a general statement of the subject, as of November 1, 1891. A careful examination of the dockets of the clerk's office of the Court of Claims made March 26, 1892, shows:

General and special jurisdictional cases, March 26, 1892, 1,686 actions. In the Attorney-General's Report, 1891, the total number of actions under this branch of the jurisdiction is stated as 1,194. This is inaccurate. Included in this number are 265 actions of letter-carriers for extra pay under the act of May 24, 1888. For convenience the cases from the same city are docketed under one number, so that in fact November 1, 1891, there were actually pending 1,459 actions. From November 1, 1891, to March 26, 1892, there have been added 227 cases, making the total now pending 1,686, as above stated.

During the year prior to November 1, 1891, 402 actions, largely class cases, were dismissed for nonprosecution; so that, besides the letter-carrier cases, very few purely class cases are pending. It is generally understood that very many actions by letter-carriers are yet to be filed. If the decision of the Court of Claims lately rendered against the United States in these cases shall be sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States, it will be necessary for the court to examine and decide each case upon its merits.

French spoliation cases, March 26, 1892, 4,952 petitions.

Bowman act cases, March 26, 1892, 7,721 cases. This is an increase of 328 cases since November 1, 1891. Of these cases petitions in large numbers are pending before the appropriate committee in Congress.

Indian depredation cases, March 26, 1892, 7,195 cases. This is an increase of 1,728 since November 1, 1891. There is no reason to change the general estimate given in my report for 1891, as to the probable number yet to be filed.

Departmental cases, 13

District of Columbia cases, 23.

RECAPITULATION.

General and special jurisdiction	1,686
Bowman act	7,721
French spoliation	4,952
Indian depredation	7,195
Departmental	13
District of Columbia	23
Total	21,590

From this number, however, there should be deducted the number of cases finally passed upon by the court from November 1, 1891, to this date, which it is impossible now to determine with accuracy.

The total increase in cases docketed since November 1, 1891, to March 26, 1892, about five months, is 2,218.

Recognizing the evident inability of the court to seasonably hear and determine the cases ready for trial, from the enormous number pending at the beginning of the present term, and that an equitable proportion of the time ought to be given to suitors, the chief justice of the Court of Claims assisted in and approved a plan of dividing the term between the jurisdictions. The court caused the schedule to be printed on the weekly trial lists. The schedule is as follows:

Year.	From—	To—	Cases.
1891	Dec. 7	Dec. 24	General jurisdiction, Congressional, and Indian depredation.
1892	Jan. 4	Jan. 28	French spoliation.
	Feb. 1	Mar. 3	General jurisdiction, Congressional, and Indian depredation.
	Mar. 7	Apr. 7	French spoliation.

Year.	From—	To—	Cases.
1892	Apr. 11	May 5	General jurisdiction, Congressional, and Indian depredation.
	May 9	May 19	French spoliation.
	May 23	June 9	Cases arising in any jurisdiction to be specially assigned.

Special assignments, last Monday of October to first Monday of December, 1892.

So far during the term the court has adhered to this schedule. It has certainly prevented much confusion. It has demonstrated the fact that, as the court is presently constructed, it can not hear and determine the causes ready for trial on the part of claimants. Of these the present trial calendar published by the court shows more than 400 between December 7, 1891, and March 26, 1892. Another fact has been proved with equal certainty, viz, that the present corps of attorneys of the Department of Justice, while manifestly inadequate to seasonably care for all cases presented by claimants ready for trial, have been able to prepare and argue more cases than the court has time to hear.

The result is what was anticipated. Almost the entire time of the court from now till the June recess has been preempted by special assignments, leaving a large number of cases fully prepared by both parties to await and take the uncertain chances of a hearing. There are no unusual circumstances attending the present list of cases, and the present difficulties are certain to increase.

In 1890 the Court of Claims consisted of five judges. The number of cases pending at the completion of the court term by the report of the Attorney-General in 1890 was 442. The court then had only its general jurisdiction. Now the cases pending are nearly forty-nine times as many.

A more important factor than any yet suggested is that with the exception of several hearings on preliminary matters the court has so far given no time to the actions brought under the recent act relating to Indian depredations.

Under that section of the act which gives priority of consideration to cases examined, approved, and allowed by the Secretary of the Interior, the Assistant Attorney-General in charge of these matters has submitted to the court thirty-three cases upon stipulations of fact. By these stipulations the court was relieved of the labor of the examination of the law and facts, and judgment followed as of course. These officers of the Department of Justice have prepared a large number of cases of this character, and also advanced the preparation of many others in which the law and facts will be ultimately contested. But the court has not yet entered upon the work of hearing and determining contested cases. The cases prepared as above would have been earlier submitted to the court but for the fact of the hearing upon the preliminary matters above suggested.

The essential character of these cases is that of an action of trover or trespass. Each will necessarily be tried alone. The cases have few of the distinctive elements of class cases; possibly some may be dismissed as not being within the jurisdiction. The number of cases already filed constitute quite 33 per cent of the pending cases.

When the court shall be called upon to enter upon their hearing, the difficulty of obtaining speedy trials will be very largely increased.

The probability of the court being able to seasonably care for the present docket may have some light thrown upon it by reference to the past work. The following table has been compiled from reports of past Attorneys-General from 1880 to November 1, 1891, during all of which time the court has had the benefit of its full number of judges:

Total number of cases disposed of.

* Eight cases under captured and abandoned property act dismissed.

† Eighteen cases under captured and abandoned property act; nine tried and nine dismissed.

‡ Six cases under captured and abandoned property act.

General jurisdiction.—During eleven years there were finally disposed of 5,640 actions. Of this number 3,412 were disposed of without action or time of the court upon the simple motion to dismiss for nonprosecution. The number of cases disposed of during this period by trial or some preliminary action of the court is 2,231, or a yearly average of 186.

The yearly average of cases tried under the jurisdiction relative to the District of Columbia is about 14.

Bowman act.—For eight years, under the Bowman act and departmental cases, the yearly average is 141.

French spoliation cases.—For six years, under the French spoliation act, the yearly average is 100.

The number of cases disposed of during six years last past, while the court has had all these jurisdictions, is 3,899, or an annual average of 650.

The total number of cases disposed of during the year 1891 was 678, but of this number 402 were dismissed by the court on motion of the defendants, without any action on the part of the court other than allowing the motion.

A table is here submitted, compiled after the annual report of the Attorney-General for 1891 was printed. The fact that some of the cases mentioned in this table have been decided since January, 1892, does not destroy the force of the fact in relation to the inability of the court to seasonably dispose of cases.

FRENCH SPOILIATIONS.

The following cases are now in the hands of the court:

There are many other cases now under consultation for long periods. This condition exists from no fault of the court. The cases involve large sums and are important both in law and in fact. Taking into consideration the large number of cases tried and submitted on briefs without trial, little enough time is possessed by the court for their proper consideration.

Additions to the number of judges will enable the court to more readily dispose of the cases after they are submitted; but a court, however large, sitting as the present one does, can not relieve the existing difficulties. So long as the court sits as one body, five judges can hear as many causes as ten. Neither will additions of attorneys to the Department of Justice relieve this congested condition.

If the court is unable to hear the cases made ready for trial by the claimants and the present force of the Department, to double that force would be to aggravate the difficulty.

The best remedy for this condition of things seems to be to provide two additional judges, and that the court sit in sections, substantially in accordance with the scheme discussed before your committee.

Very respectfully,

W. H. H. MILLER,
Attorney-General.

Hon. GEORGE F. HOAR.

Chairman Judiciary Committee, United States Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments of the Committee on the Judiciary will be stated in their order.

The first amendment was, in section 2, line 6, after the word "decision," to insert "of the full bench;" so as to make the section read:

That said court shall hereafter sit in two divisions of three judges each, of whom two shall be a quorum, and the concurrence of a like number shall be required for a decision in any case. Seven judges shall constitute a full bench, four of whom shall be a quorum, and the concurrence of four judges shall be required for a decision of the full bench in any case.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 3, line 2, after the word "allowed," to strike out "on behalf of the United States;" in line 3, after the word "decrees," to strike out "adverse to the United States, and on behalf of the claimant only;" in line 6, after the words "to the," to strike out "full bench" and insert "court," and in line 7, after the words "that the," to strike out "decision" and insert a class of "and insert "judgment or decree will determine;" so as to read:

That appeals from the Court of Claims to the Supreme Court of the United States shall be allowed from all judgments or decrees in cases where the amount in controversy shall exceed $5,000, or when it shall be made to appear to the court that the judgment or decree will determine cases involving in the aggregate at least $5,000; or that the question involved is of such special importance as to require the decision of the Supreme Court.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COKE. I move to strike out so much of the first section commencing in line 6, embracing the word "continuous," in that line, down to and including the word "section," in line 11.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the first section, line 6, after the word "court," strike out all down to and including the word "section," in line 11, the words proposed to be stricken out being as follows:

Continuous service past or future for the term mentioned in section 714, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, either as a judge or chief justice or both of said court, shall entitle the person rendering or to render such service to the benefits of said section.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE].

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] and myself objected to this clause in the committee, and I desire to place on record that fact. This is the clause under which these judges are to be pensioned. I have always opposed civil pensions. The pensions that have been granted under this Government to civilians are a departure, in my judgment, from all correct principles. I shall never consent, so far as I am concerned, to extend them. I hope it will be the pleasure of the Senate to strike this clause out, leaving the judges with their salaries, and their good salaries, while they are on the bench, and when they go off of the bench leaving them to take care of themselves as other citizens have to do.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not think that the clause proposed to be stricken out changes the law. I think the court will probably so hold, but it certainly removes a doubt, and removes it, as it seems to me, in the clear interest of justice. If we were to abolish the pension system for judges that is one thing. There are grave objections, which have been very ably stated, and I suppose the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Texas will state them as powerfully as they can be stated by anybody, against a pension system altogether; but it is the existing law that the judges of certain courts of the United States, having arrived at the age of 70 years and having served honorably ten years, may retain their salary during their lives. It has been found necessary, I think, in our experience, in order to command the services of the ablest and strongest men.

As it is, anybody who is fit for one of these judicial appointments ordinarily sacrifices three times as much as he gets. I suppose it is not a secret that the person whom many people in this country believe the fittest man in it to succeed the late venerated Justice Bradley, on being spoken to on the subject by some persons whose opinion might be supposed to have some weight with the appointing power—a person whom Judge Bradley hoped would be his successor—replied that he was earning a hundred thousand dollars a year and he could not afford it.

If in addition to this vast sacrifice which is ordinarily made you expose the judge to be left without support for himself or his household at the age of 70, you diminish still more the number of persons, and no man fit to be a judge, and no man of the class of lawyers whom we wish to get for that office, will accept the place unless he be a man of wealth, and I think that would be a very poor condition of things.

But that system it is not proposed now to repeal by anybody. When it is proposed to repeal it the matter will be debated. But if it is to continue, is there any question that if a man has served five years as a side judge and then by reason of his being the fittest man for that place in the eye of the appointing power, serves five years more as Chief Justice and then becomes invalidated and is 70 years old, the two services ought to count as one for the purpose of the pension. It seems to me that even gentlemen who may oppose the pension system on principle will agree on consideration that if the system is to exist it should exist as a just and not an unjust system. Otherwise, in all cases persons who have had the experience and training on a particular bench will be afraid to accept promotion to the head of that bench, because of the loss of their retiring pension.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, I have never heard any argument made in favor of pensioning judges that would not apply equally well to all other important civil officers. Senators, Representatives, or any other important officers under this Government can be maintained in a right to a pension as fully as judges can.

The argument that this system has already commenced and should be continued has no force with me. I think it is never too late to correct an error. I believe that the commencement of the system was erroneous, and that it should be corrected at the earliest possible time. I think this is as good a time to commence it as any other.

Mr. GRAY. I rose to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts while he was on his feet that a very signal illustration of the practical working of the present law in regard to the retirement of judges upon their salary at the age of 70 provided they have served on the bench for at least ten years was furnished by the experience of our Supreme Court judges. Mr. Justice Miller and Mr. Justice Bradley both worked far beyond the limitation prescribed by law from a sense of duty and devotion to their profession and to the bench, and rendered very important service. I think Judge Bradley was 76 and Judge Miller was perhaps older. We still have upon the bench—it is our good fortune that we still have there—a judge who could have availed himself several years ago of the provisions of the law, but having been blessed with good health, and with that strength which has continued to him long after the usual time allotted to man, he still renders service to his country and to the profession in the administration of justice. I think that our experience with it is an exceedingly fortunate one.

It seems to me that as long as we have a life tenure for any judicial officer a retiring provision such as we have now is an essential attribute of it, not in the interest so much of the individual judges as in the interest of the public, because there would then be the temptation, if the law did not exist, for a judge long after his powers had begun to fail to linger on the bench if he were in such circumstances that he could not live without the salary. There being no such temptation now insures us that that condition of things will never obtain. I think that the pension system applying to officers who have a life tenure takes it out of any category that is dangerous to us in a civil pension list.

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps I may be permitted to add to the names mentioned by the honorable Senator from Delaware the name of a venerable judicial character, now happily long spared to the public service, that of Mr. Justice Field, a gentleman whose name is likely to be as eminent as any in our judicial annals for the sincerity and purity of his devotion to the public service, and for the vigor and learning which he has brought to the determination of the great public controversies which have arisen in his time.

Mr. BERRY. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he remembers when the first statute was passed which granted pensions to judges?

Mr. HOAR. It was between 1869 and 1871 I think; but it is possible that it was in the following Congress. I was a member of the other House when the act was passed. It was drafted by Mr. Armstrong of Pennsylvania, a member of the other House whose term of service I think lasted only two years, but it may have been four.

Mr. COKE. Was it not passed in April, 1869?

Mr. HOAR. It was thereabouts. It was either in the Congress extending from 1869 to 1871 or in the one from 1871 to 1873; I think the former.

Mr. GRAY. If the Senator from Arkansas will allow me, I wish to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that although I did not mention Judge Field's name he was the person who was in my mind when I alluded to the judge now on the bench.

Mr. HOAR. I so understood the Senator, and I thought it was quite fitting that his name should be mentioned as well as that he should be referred to by description.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I do not think it would be insisted by any Senator that the judges who sat upon the bench since 1869 were in any way, as lawyers or as men or as judges, superior to those who preceded them in the great number of years the Government had been in existence. I think that before the system was ever adopted of granting pensions to judges, the men who sat upon the Supreme and district benches of the United States were equal in every way to those we have had since.

I do not see the force of the argument urged by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], who says that the system has worked well. As the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] said, the whole system of granting civil pensions is contrary to our theory of government. It is contrary to that independence of the citizen and that equality which should exist in the character of government that we have. The salaries are large. These places, with or without the pension will be sought for by the ablest lawyers in the country, and it is the merest pretense to say that you can not get men of the highest order of intellect and the greatest legal attainments to serve unless you grant this pension.

As the Senator from Texas has well asked, what reason can be urged for giving a judge a pension at the termination of a certain term of service that will not apply to every other class of officers throughout the Government? It is a wrong system. It builds up classes. It tends to give certain privileges to particular men and to particular classes to live off of the Government and to live off of other citizens who are engaged in pursuits that are necessary to earn a living for themselves and their families. The whole system is wrong in my opinion. It is no argument to say that because others are receiving a pension, if it is a bad system we should vote to extend it.

I want to say, by the way, that so far as this bill is concerned, I have not heard any necessity stated here for increasing the number of judges on the Court of Claims by two. It seems to me that the business before that court is not likely to increase sufficiently to authorize the appointment of these additional judges with these salaries. But, at any rate, whether it be necessary or not, I do not think that we should continue or extend, in any way whatever, the system of granting civil pensions to men who perform services for the Government of the United States.

Mr. PALMER obtained the floor.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Illinois will pardon me one sentence only, I will not interfere with him; but in answer to the last suggestion I will state that this fact among others was shown, that the quantity of business is multiplied by forty-nine since the present number of justices was established.

Mr. BERRY. I did not hear the Senator. If the Senator will excuse me, I did not hear his remark.

Mr. HOAR. The Attorney-General reports officially that there are forty-nine times as many cases on that docket now as there were when the present number of judges was fixed.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, I want to express my concurrence in the theory of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY], but I desire to dissent from the application of that theory to a class of cases like this. I have never regarded the provision made for judges as in the nature of a pension. It is a part of the condition upon which a great lawyer accepts the place. It is that he may not be tempted to engage in the struggles of business that would connect him with the active affairs of life.

My acquaintance with the courts is perhaps quite as extensive as that of any other member of the Senate. During my whole life I have witnessed the struggle between the conscientious mind of a pure judge anxious to make some provisions for his declining years and the necessity of confining himself with a single mind to his judicial duty. I have known eminent lawyers to take seats upon the bench. A high judgeship is a very tempting bauble as an object of ambition to a lawyer. I have known men of eminence to surrender a profitable business, an extensive practice, to go upon the bench. In going upon the bench they made sacrifices, and they were in the nature of public benefactors in accepting the place for which they were so eminently fit in learning, in intelligence, and in all that adorns a great judge. The salaries of judges, compared with the complete devotion to business that is required of them, has never been extravagant.

Mr. COKE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PALMER. With great pleasure.

Mr. COKE. Are the State judges in Illinois pensioned?

Mr. PALMER. They are not.

Mr. COKE. Does the Senator know that the judges of any State in the Union are pensioned?

Mr. PALMER. I do not. From my knowledge of the subject, I do not think they are pensioned.

Mr. COKE. Do we not have as much purity on our State bench as we have on the Federal bench?

Mr. PALMER. Yes, sir; and that brings me to the very point that I was about to reach, that has impressed me so much, and that is the meager salary. I think we pay in Illinois some $4,500 to our supreme judges, which is altogether inadequate. Notwithstanding the salary is meager and the term is limited (I favor very much the limitation of the terms of the judges), I have known those men surrender a profitable practice, and I have known them from the very necessity of the case, engage in speculation, engage in some side employment, giving it a part of their attention and some money.

I have witnessed this struggle between poverty and a desire to discharge duty until I have the utmost sympathy for the men who engage in it. I have known judges of eminence to become involved in speculations. A great lawyer is not likely to have very much money saved. I believe there are exceptions, but as a rule they are not remarkable for their money-keeping capacity, and I have known them to become involved in speculations that would not have been very attractive to men of experience, to men of a business sense. I have witnessed the struggle, and I should be glad to see the principle adopted of paying a judge such salary in present and in future as would enable him to feel that he had his life work upon him, and that he might be relieved from those anxieties that attend men as they grow old with the consciousness that their physical and intellectual faculties too are not as they were at an early period of their lives.

The Senator from Texas asked me whether the State judges are pensioned, and I said no. I do not know what I would do if I were a member of a constitutional convention or a State Legislature with authority to make permanent provision for judges. Here is a case where the principle has been applied. I know some of the judges. I know something of the place. I know that men taking places upon the Supreme Bench abandon everything else. I know the expense of such a place, according to our ideas, because we have passed beyond the simple lessons taught by Dr. Franklin. These men are required to conform to what society demands. It is a struggle. The salary is insufficient for their support as they are situated ordinarily. I desire that the judge shall feel that whatever the duties of the place are he shall have none of the temptations to engage in business to distract his thoughts, and that he may feel it is a contract with the public; that in view of his dedicating himself to the judicial service of the country he shall feel that in taking that step, when he separates himself from the active duties of his profession, he has at least a provision for life, if his office is for life. It must immensely increase the efficiency of the judge. It is better for all interests that the judge shall be separated from the active business of men, and that he shall feel that he is assured of a support in his declining years.

These are feelings that I entertain with great earnestness. I dislike the system of pensions, of civil pensions, if the term is regarded as having any distinction. I dislike giving the public money to anybody for nothing. But I regard this pension system of judges as being a part of the agreement we make with them when we invite them to take places upon the bench, and in that view of it I should regret it as a public calamity if the system should be abandoned.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE].

Mr. COKE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HALE. I wish to ask the Senator from Massachusetts how far this provision for joining together the terms of a United States judge extends, whether it is limited to the court itself as the subject of this bill or is general? I do not think that it has generally been accepted by the bar nor by the judges that these terms can be added. I think there is an apprehension on the part of judges of United States courts that a strict construction of the statute would not authorize the retirement of a judge unless he had held the one place upon which he retired for ten years or had attained the age of 70.

If this provision goes no further than the application to the one court which is the subject-matter of the bill I can only say that I wish the Senator had made it more general. The spirit of the whole provision in which, with the Senator from Massachusetts, I took some part as a member of the House of Representatives was to give to United States judges who dedicated the best of their life to the service in these courts a retiring pension, whatever might have been their judgeship during the time. All these judges and all these judgeships are high officials and high places, and there is no reason in my mind why if a district judge who has served five years should then be promoted to circuit judge and serve three years and then should by subsequent advancement be placed in that highest position any lawyer may aspire to, the Supreme Court of the United States, the ten years should not reckon from the time when he first dedicated his life to the work upon the judiciary of the United States.

I call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to this matter, asking him this question, for I do not know how far the provision applies.

Mr. HOAR. The provision applies only to the court in regard to which we are providing for an additional appointment of judges. It would seem to be rather out of place on a special bill for a particular court to enter upon this general question. I quite agree, however, with the honorable Senator from Maine, and if the Senate should put on this bill or any other a general provision I should be glad to support it myself.

Mr. HALE. It goes no further here than the Court of Claims.

Mr. HOAR. It goes no further than the Court of Claims.

Mr. HALE. I hope, on this subject particularly, if this is passed and receives the sanction of the Senate, the Committee on the Judiciary will see to it that the principle that is embodied in this section is carried into all other details applicable to the retirement of United States judges.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the question whether a judge should be allowed some provision for his life after he shall be retired from the public service depends entirely upon the policy that is best for the office and for the people in the administration of the law. What is that? Is it best that a man intrusted with these extraordinary powers, separated from the entire community, perfectly irresponsible except to public opinion for his action in regard to the life or the death of the people or the preservation of their property shall be meagerly paid; that he shall be made a pauper because there are numerous aspirants for the distinction of the place? Is it best for the people that he should live in obscurity and have all the temptations of wealth and luxury and independence in others around him to induce him to be subservient to them? Is it best that his family shall be disgraced comparatively because he is performing this public duty? That is, that they shall be subjected to that extreme poverty after his term of office, which often leads to disgrace and disease, and sometimes to crime. Is that the manner in which we are to obtain integrity and ability and independence in the performance of public duty.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. Does the Senator consider that a man's family is disgraced by the amount of salary he receives, whether it is a small one or a large one?

Mr. CALL. No; poverty is no disgrace.

Mr. BERRY. I thought the Senator's argument was that poverty is a disgrace.

Mr. CALL. The Senator is mistaken; I do not think that poverty is a disgrace, but I do not think it is a reward. I do not think it is an inducement to virtue, either under the Divine administration or that of our own temporal affairs. We reward people, and the hope of reward in the future life and in the present is one of the great incentives to virtue here. The proposition that we are to select men for the highest functions, exposed to the greatest temptations, and impose punishment upon them for the performance of their duty, strikes me as a very extraordinary one.

Mr. President, I am in favor of an elective judiciary, and if I had it in my power every judge in the United States should be responsible to the people at fixed periods for the manner in which he performed the great trust imposed upon him; but I would pay him a large compensation, and I would provide for his retirement for life after he had performed the public duty for a sufficient length of time.

I regard this as one of the most important questions for the future of this country and the protection of the people in their rights against the vast power that is accumulated in the shape of corporations and trusts and monopolies in the hands of privileged classes. We need a judiciary that shall be independent, not only made so by responsibility to public opinion at fixed periods of time, but independent by having distinguished rewards offered to them, and by being placed, so far as human policy can do it, beyond the reach of temptation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WALTHALL (when Mr. GEORGE's name was called). My colleague [Mr. GEORGE] is paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. My colleague if present would vote "yea."

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES of Arkansas was called). My colleague [Mr. JONES of Arkansas] is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK]. If my colleague were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired on all questions with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT]. I may as well announce now that my colleague [Mr. FAULKNER] is likewise paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. McMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. SHERMAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE], but understanding that he would vote "nay," I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HIGGINS. I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. PASCO. I wish to announce my pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. CASEY].

Mr. DOLPH. I am paired with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], whom I do not see in his seat.

Mr. BATE. My colleague [Mr. HARRIS] is necessarily absent. He is paired, however, with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. COCKRELL (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted without reflecting that I am paired with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. I am advised that if he were present he would vote "nay." As I have already voted "yea," I will withdraw my vote, and announce the fact that if I had a chance to vote I should vote "yea."

Mr. CAREY. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. WARREN] is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON].

Mr. WALTHALL. To make a quorum I vote "yea."

Mr. HIGGINS. In order to make a quorum I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] has no objection, as it will not change the result, I will vote in order to make a quorum.

Mr. WILSON. I do not object.

Mr. COCKRELL. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 11, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—11.

Bate,	Cockrell,	Daniel,	Turpie,
Berry,	Coke,	Kyle,	Walthall.
Blodgett,	Colquitt,	Mills,

NAYS—34.

Allen,	Frye,	Paddock,	Shoup,
Barbour,	Gallinger,	Palmer,	Squire,
Blackburn,	Gray,	Peffer,	Stewart,
Butler,	Hale,	Perkins,	Teller,
Call,	Hawley,	Platt,	Vilas,
Carey,	Higgins,	Proctor,	Washburn,
Calliom,	Hoar,	Pugh,	Wilson.
Davis,	Manderson,	Sanders,
Dubois,	Mitchell,	Sherman,

NOT VOTING—43.

Aldrich,	Felton,	Jones, Ark.,	Ransom,
Allison,	George,	Jones, Nev.,	Sawyer,
Brice,	Gibson, La.,	Kenna,	Stanford,
Cameron,	Gibson, Md.,	McMillan,	Stockbridge,
Carlisle,	Gordon,	McPherson,	Vance,
Cass,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Vest,
Chandler,	Hansbrough,	Morrill,	Voorhees,
Dawes,	Hill,	Pasco,	Warren,
Dixon,	Hiscock,	Pettigrew,	White,
Dolph,	Irby,	Power,	Wolcott.
Faulkner,		Quay,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to amend the bill in line 9, of section 3. After the word "involved," I move to insert "relates to the validity or construction of an act of Congress or;" so as to read:

Or that the question involved relates to the validity of construction of an act of Congress, or is of such special importance as to require the decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. HOAR. I do not object to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I am opposed to the passage of this bill, because in my humble opinion there is no real necessity for any increase of the number of judges on the Court of Claims. It will be an increase of the officials of the United States and an increase of the expenditures, to both of which I am opposed. I believe the present court, with proper machinery given to the office of Attorney-General to investigate and prepare the cases that are pending and will be pending before that court, can dispose of all the business with promptness. It is true that just at this time there is an accumulation of business before the court. That is in consequence of the passage of the Indian depredation law, which threw probably 5,000 or 6,000 cases into that court at one time.

Mr. BUTLER. And the French spoliation claims.

Mr. COCKRELL. The law referring the French spoliation claims was another measure that threw a large number of cases into the court. They are not continuing cases. When they are disposed of there will be a very light docket comparatively. We can bridge over the existing arrears of business by giving them a little time, without necessarily increasing for all time to come the number of judges upon that bench with a life tenure and retired pay.

I am satisfied that a great many of the cases before that court are cases of a class, and the decision of one of the cases is the decision of one hundred, and sometimes one thousand. The number of cases is no evidence of the pressure on the court of arrears of business like it would be in other courts.

For these reasons I shall oppose the bill, and upon its passage I must call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOAR. Since the Court of Claims was established with five, the present number of judges, the population of the United States has doubled, I suppose. There are now on the docket of that court forty-nine times as many cases as there were when the number of judges were increased to five. There are between 21,000 and 22,000 cases. There are 7,000 cases which have been sent there under the Bowman act, each requiring its own distinct examination, no considerable number of them being what can be called a class.

The court disposed in eleven years of 5,640 actions. The Senator from Missouri thinks that a court which can dispose of 5,640 actions in eleven years is large enough to dispose of a present docket of 22,000, which is increasing annually by a larger number than they disposed of in the entire eleven years. If it be true that after the Indian depredation cases are all out of the way and the Bowman act cases diminished again, five judges can do the work of seven, there will be a Congress here and a legislative power that will reduce the number to five.

But this is a question not of two gentlemen having offices out of the 65,000,000 people, more or less, in this country. It is a question of denial of justice to our citizens. We have settled it as our policy, conforming in that respect to the policy now of most of the civilized nations on earth, that a citizen who has a claim against the Government of the United States is as much entitled in justice and equity and honor to a judicial trial of that claim as he would be if his claim were against a private citizen.

Mr. MILLS. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOAR. Not just at this moment. If the Senator will wait a moment I shall then yield. We have adopted the policy, and it is the law of the United States at this moment, that if a poor skipper's vessel be sunk by the blunder of a naval officer of the United States he shall have the same remedy that he would if it was sunk by the blunder of an officer of a British steamer; that if a poor woman is crossing the street and the driver of a mail cart of the United States engaged in its business carelessly runs over her she shall have the right to submit to a court the question whether the United States is liable in law, and that she shall not be compelled any longer to go into the House of Representatives and stay there twenty years, or into the Senate, with one exception out of eighty or out of three hundred and eighty preventing her from getting a hearing there at all, and when she has been there for twenty years have it said to her that her claim is an old one and for that reason shall not be considered.

Mr. PLATT. Thirty-four per cent of the bills introduced into the Senate are sent to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HOAR. Thirty-four per cent of all the bills introduced in the Senate, as I am informed by my honorable friend from Connecticut, go to the Committee on Claims, and every one of them may be sent by that committee, and is, if it is a fit case for a judicial investigation of the fact, to this court. There is going to be an answer in the Court of Claims pretty soon that the case is an old one, such as we hear made very often in debate in this or the other end of the Capitol.

This is a question, I repeat, of common justice. It is a question, in the opinion of those who think the United States ought to pay its debts, of common honesty; and for this great and rich and powerful Government to say that we will not pay our public obligations at all, or that if we do pay them we will send claimants to a court where in the ordinary course of its business you can not expect a trial for from seven to ten years, is I think a failure of common honesty. Now I will answer the Senator from Texas.

Mr. MILLS. I desired to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if there could be any sound objection to giving jurisdiction to the district courts for the determination of many of the cases which are now given to the Court of Claims?

Mr. HOAR. I have myself frequently advocated that doctrine, and it has been adopted to a certain extent. We have given concurrent jurisdiction with the Court of Claims to the district courts of the United States in several important particulars. For one I have always been in favor (I was years ago, and I am confirmed in my judgment by the subsequent experience) of having every man with a pension claim against the United States sent into the United States district court in his neighborhood and have a trial there.

Mr. MORGAN. It would bankrupt the Government in two years.

Mr. HOAR. My honorable friend says it would bankrupt the Government in two years. The Government is bankrupted already when the thing is not done. It is a good deal more. The term "bankruptcy," in my judgment, is quite as applicable to the case of a government that refuses to pay its honest obligation to these pensioners or its honest obligation to a poor class of its citizens as it is to a government that does not pay its public bonds in gold. I have never been able to draw that distinction.

Mr. BERRY. I have been insisting here for several years that if the pension business continues it would bankrupt the Government, but I had not supposed that the Senator from Massachusetts would admit that it had already occurred. I rose to say, however, that I do not know whether it is the purpose of the Senator from Texas to call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill, and I want the RECORD to show that I am opposed to the bill, not so much for the reason that there is no necessity for it, for as to that I do not know whether the necessity exists or not, but I am opposed to it because it contains a provision that civil officers of this Government may draw a pension after they have ceased to do service.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I think there is an objection to this bill, one that lies to nearly all our bills creating courts and for the appointment of judges, and that is that it creates a partisan court; that these judges are not required to be appointed without reference to their partisanship and their political services. It seems to me it is one of the greatest dangers to which this country is subject that our entire judicial system is a partisan system, and men are appointed because of political considerations, men who we know are liable to be influenced by their party relations in reference to great public questions and perhaps to private interests. I think that there should be incorporated a provision in this bill carefully guarding it against the power of the Executive to appoint these judges because of their partisanship and their political relations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the demand for the yeas and nays seconded?

Mr. COCKRELL. I am not quite ready for a vote yet, Mr. President. The Senator from Massachusetts referred to the length of time the court had been in existence; that since the judges had been increased upon it the population had multiplied enormously, and that there had been only some 6,000 cases or less disposed of during the entire existence of the court. The question is, how much the court was in arrears with cases that were ready for decision and which the court was not able to decide. It is not the number of cases that are there. The French spoliation claims are there, but the parties are not ready to submit them. The Indian depredation claims are there, but they are not ready for trial. It takes weeks and months and years to prepare those cases for trial. It is only very recently that there was a solitary case in the Court of Claims ready by the attorneys for the United States and for the claimant to be submitted for a decision that was not decided promptly.

That is the record, and I challenge any man to bring up a different record. I know that court has kept up with its business, and it is only since we threw upon it by special acts the French spoliation claims and the Indian depredation claims that it has been overwhelmed. It was not overwhelmed before that time. The Bowman act took a good many cases there, but they are not ready for trial. A great many of them never will be ready for trial, and will be stricken off by the hundred and two hundred at one stroke for want of prosecution when the proper time has passed.

Look at the Court of Claims reports about the Bowman cases. It was the same way in regard to the cases of which they had jurisdiction before, a large number of which are now passed away. They were placed there, and three-fourths of them were dismissed for want of prosecution. It is a secret known to everybody who has tried to inquire into it that there were thousands of cases sent there under the Bowman act by attorneys when the parties knew nothing on earth about it, and the parties are not going to prosecute them and pay out two or three hundred dollars as an experiment. It is only a question of time when those cases will be reached and the court will strike them off by the hundred or by the thousand.

The Senator forgets that since that court was organized and had exclusive jurisdiction we have taken away from it a part of its jurisdiction or rather we have given it to other courts. The last act that was passed was the act of March 3, 1887, "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States." It provides—

That the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine.

And this is a general law, and is the only law now in regard to the bringing of suits in the Court of Claims outside of the special acts to which I have referred.

That the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the following matters:

First. All claims founded upon the Constitution of the United States or any law of Congress, except for pensions, or upon any regulation of an Executive Department, or upon any contract, expressed or implied, with the Government of the United States, or for damages, liquidated or unliquidated, in cases not sounding in tort, in respect of which claims the party would be entitled to redress against the United States either in a court of law, equity, or admiralty if the United States were suable: Provided, however, That nothing in this section shall be construed as giving to either of the courts herein mentioned jurisdiction to hear and determine claims growing out of the late civil war, and commonly known as "war claims," or to hear and determine other claims which have heretofore been rejected or reported on adversely by any court, Department, or commission authorized to bear and determine the same.

Second. All set-offs, counter claims, claims for damages, whether liquidated or unliquidated, or other demands whatsoever on the part of the Government of the United States against any claimant against the Government in said court: Provided, That no suit against the Government of the United States shall be allowed under this act unless the same shall have been brought within six years after the right accrued for which the claim is made.

Nearly all the cases pending in the Court of Claims are special ones and are not brought within the six years; they are sent there specifically. Under the Bowman act we sent the cases there for the court to investigate and report back to us the facts. They do not render any judgment; they simply investigate the facts, and machinery is furnished to them to do this with. In the French spoliation claims they only investigated the facts. The judgments in the French spoliation claims are not judgments which bear interest. They were to be reported back to Congress. Not a cent of them can be paid without an appropriation directly by Congress. The Bowman act cases have to be provided for. Those form the great mass of the cases, except the arrearages, and they will soon be disposed of. In the other cases they render a judgment, and that judgment bears interest after it is presented to the Treasury Department.

Mr. GRAY. I should like to ask the Senator for information—I am interested in what he says—whether he thinks in the cases sent to the Court of Claims under the Bowman act and the French spoliation claims, in which the court, I understand, makes no judgment, the investigation of facts and the report upon those facts back to Congress do not entail as much labor on the court as if they rendered a judgment at the close of the investigation?

Mr. COCKRELL. No, I do not think it does, not of the kind of labor that there would be in the actual trial of cases they investigate.

Mr. PLATT. I think, if the Senator from Missouri has examined those findings of fact which have been sent to Congress—

Mr. COCKRELL. I suppose I have seen about a thousand of them, or nearly all that have ever come here.

Mr. PLATT. I know that, and it seems to me that he must be impressed with the idea that that court has thoroughly examined the facts and is really in a position to render judgment upon each particular case if it had the authority to do it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think not. I think I could show the Senator cases in which they have pretended to report facts that never had any existence, and the want of existence of which could have been found right here in the records of the Government.

Mr. GRAY. It would take time.

Mr. COCKRELL. No; it showed that there was not much time given to it; that there was not the responsibility that is felt when they render a judgment. They got the case exactly in a point, and I can show the point, where it is solemnly found that a fact existed that did not exist at all, and the records of the Government here would show that it did not exist.

Mr. PLATT. I suppose other courts have done that sometimes.

Mr. COCKRELL. If that court had been passing upon that claim upon its merits to find a judgment one way or the other that fact would not have been found; it did not exist; it would not have been admitted. In this same law of March 3, 1887, we have the following provision:

That the district courts of the United States shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the Court of Claims as to all matters named in the preceding section where the amount of the claim does not exceed $1,000, and the circuit courts of the United States shall have such concurrent jurisdiction in all cases where the amount of such claim exceeds $1,000 and does not exceed $10,000. All causes brought and tried under the provisions of this act shall be tried by the court without a jury.

Since that court was organized we have invested the courts of the United States, the district court and the United States circuit court with jurisdiction, the district court in all cases under $1,000 and the United States circuit court in all cases under $10,000, and those form the great bulk of the cases. The Senator from Massachusetts talks about a denial of justice where we have already authorized the citizens of the United States to go into the circuit and district courts wherever the amount does not exceed $10,000 or $1,000 respectively.

Mr. HOAR. Does that apply to anything except to cases of contracts express or implied?

Mr. COCKRELL. All that the Court of Claims have jurisdiction of.

Mr. HOAR. In the original act.

Mr. COCKRELL. All that the Court of Claims have jurisdiction of.

Mr. PLATT. It applies to what are called jurisdictional cases.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, let me read the law again. I am certain the Senator from Massachusetts has not carefully read this proviso.

Mr. HOAR. Yes, I have. I think I had something to do with its enactment.

Mr. COCKRELL. The law says:

That the district courts of the United States shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the Court of Claims as to all matters named in the preceding section.

That is section 1, and that section is the only section that gives the Court of Claims jurisdiction of cases against the United States. It includes them all. So to-day the United States district courts have concurrent jurisdiction with the Court of Claims in regard to all claims against the Government of the United States excepting, as a matter of course, those that are specifically by special act referred to the Court of Claims, and the circuit courts of the United States have absolutely coequal and concurrent jurisdiction in all cases against the United States not exceeding $10,000 in amount.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is it the act of March 3, 1887, that the Senator is speaking of?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does the Senator know how much business has been done in the United States courts since the passage of that act?

Mr. COCKRELL. I am aware of the fact that we have had to make some pretty numerous and large appropriations to pay the judgments which have been rendered in the United States courts under that act.

Mr. MITCHELL. In so far as that act has tended to diminish the business of the Court of Claims it has been merely nominal. The whole number of suits brought under the act of March 3, 1887, in the United States courts up to December last was 951. Eight hundred and twenty-eight of those suits had been decided and 123 were then still pending, a mere nothing compared with the great mass of cases that have been accumulated every month and every year in the Court of Claims. In 1884, under the Bowman act, 217 cases went to the Court of Claims; in 1885, 177; in 1886, 858; in 1887, 786; in 1888, 4,562; in 1889, 632; in 1890, 866; in 1891, 405, running right along by the hundred and by the thousand in a space of years.

Mr. COCKRELL. And what are those cases?

Mr. MITCHELL. Those which are referred; cases under the Bowman act, for instance; all manner of cases that go to the Court of Claims under that act.

Mr. COCKRELL. For the last fifteen or twenty years there has been no difficulty about the current business pending in that court. It is not the current business at all that gives rise to difficulty. The court can dispose of all current cases.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will allow me.

Mr. COCKRELL. With pleasure.

Mr. HOAR. The mere general and special jurisdiction alone in that court amounts to 1,686 actions, larger than the crowded dockets of the Supreme Court of the United States, and in regard to every one of those the court has to find the facts as well as the law, and the Attorney-General says very few of these are class cases.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I know enough about the claims which have been pending in Congress for the last twelve or fifteen years to know that a large number of them are class cases.

Mr. HOAR. Special jurisdiction cases.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that; special jurisdictional cases; but we all know that under the Bowman act it is only the cases of which the court would otherwise have no jurisdiction that will go there. Nobody goes under the Bowman act to the Court of Claims where the court in the first instance has jurisdiction of the case. The case goes there; it is referred there by act of Congress, or by a committee, and it is a rare thing that we find a claim pending in Congress where the claimant has a right to go into the Court of Claims at all, but he wants to go there because he can always get a decision quicker than before a committee or Congress.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator must admit that the court has jurisdiction over the cases sent there, no matter how they are sent, if sent in accordance with law.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that, but I am simply showing that all of this mass of business, of which the Attorney-General complains, is arrears of business, the dregs of the war, old cases that have not been decided. There have been a great many of the French spoliation claims which arose prior to 1801, but they will soon be disposed of, and the judges can then more than attend to all the business that will be brought before that court. Let them work a little harder, as we sometimes have to do in Congress; let them continue a little longer in session, and work a little oftener at night. There is no real necessity for an increase of the judges. I will admit that if you want the judges of the Court of Claims to dispose of all the French spoliation claims and of all the Indian depredation claims in three months, then it will be necessary to have about fifty more judges; but there is no necessity for it.

I tell you the Court of Claims will dispose of these cases, and dispose of them within a reasonable time. I do not think the French spoliation claimants have much right to complain that we are delaying justice to them when they have slept upon their rights for eighty or ninety years. They can not complain that we refuse to recognize them when their claims will be settled in the course of a year or two.

Those who have preferred Indian depredation claims, some of which go back to 1860, have no right to claim that their cases have been delayed, when it is only recently, as the record shows, that any case was ready for the judges to decide that they did not decide promptly. The cases can be prepared. What is wanted to help the Court of Claims along more than anything else is an additional force in the Attorney-General's office.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator must remember that persons having Indian depredation claims had no right to go to the Court of Claims until about a year ago.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that, and therefore these claims are all precipitated at once; a great mass of cases went there at once; but that is a matter that the court can clear up in a short time, and then the current business will not amount to very much. We have provided machinery enough to carry on twice as much work as there will be before the court when the present cases in arrears are disposed of.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] talks about Congress being in session and that we can diminish the number of the court. I think the Senator from Massachusetts knows too well that if the number of judges in that court is ever increased to seven there will never be any diminution of the number. You may wipe out the court, you may abolish it, but you will never decrease the number of judges—never. If you do reduce the number, it will be by placing them upon the retired list for life. That will be the only way the court will ever be reduced. There will be no reduction in the expenditures for salaries and all the other necessary expenditures of the Government.

Mr. President, for these reasons, feeling perfectly satisfied that there is no real practical necessity whatever, looking at the business to be done a year or two hence, for an increase of these judges, I must ask the yeas and nays on the final passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. DANIEL. Is the bill open to amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not open to amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the bill will be considered open to amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to a reconsideration of engrossment and third reading of the bill? The Chair hears none.

Mr. DANIEL. I offer an amendment, to insert after the words "Court of Claims," in line 4, "who shall be members of different political parties."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert in section 1, line 4, after the words "Court of Claims," the words "who shall be members of different political parties;" so as to read:

That there shall be appointed in the manner provided by law two additional judges for the Court of Claims, who shall be members of different political parties, etc.

Mr. DANIEL. I will only say a few words in advocacy of this amendment. It is quite evident, sir, that such an amendment as that will receive the approbation of public opinion and, I think, of the Executive of the United States. He has recently, in the selection of judges, appointed two gentlemen who represented a different party from his own to the bench, an action which I think met the general commendation of the people of all degrees of opinion in political matters.

The Court of Claims consists now of five judges. All of them belong to one political party. It is proposed to add two, and if these two should belong to different political parties it would yet be nearly unanimously a court in entire political congruity with the Administration. I do not think that the bench ought to be partisan, and I believe that it tends to the liberalization of the thought of the bench and of the whole country to have views from different parts of the country and from those who belong to different political organizations represented.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

Mr. HOAR. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. In the first place it seems liable to the constitutional objection as excluding from appointment to this court gentlemen who do not belong to any political party at all, which, I suppose, is not the purpose of the Senator from Virginia. I remember that one of the most eminent jurists in the country, Prof. Joel Parker, of New Hampshire, who was the chief justice of that State for years, did not vote. I am sorry that my friend from Virginia is going to make this attack on the Mugwumps, who do not belong to any political party, if I understand it.

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President, I am heartily in favor of the amendment submitted by the Senator from Virginia, but I do not think, even with that amendment, I shall vote for this bill.

I had the honor of being a member of the Committee on Indian Depredations, and assisted very largely in framing the bill. It was framed after very deliberate consideration and after very complete correspondence with the different officers of the Government concerned in such claims and in the work and labor which would be necessary in their adjustment and settlement. That bill originally provided that the party who had a claim for an Indian depredation might present it to the Federal court, either district or circuit, where the circumstances occurred, and had very strong reasons in favor of such a forum, as that it would be a local forum and would be less expensive to the Government and to the claimant than to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims. Further, that it would distribute the labor incident to the adjustment of these claims, judicially or otherwise, over different parts of the country so as not to centralize or, in other words, concentrate too much judicial action here.

The argument was very strong and it required and did receive a considerable replication to answer. I recollect that the chairman of that committee and other members of that committee in political and friendly accord with the Court of Claims, reported repeatedly, stated at least ten times, at ten different sessions of the committee, that the conference of this jurisdiction in these cases upon the Court of Claims would not at all embarrass that court. The chief justice of that court was represented to our committee to have said that the court would have ample time, without delay, without any postponement, to adjudicate Indian depredations. The associate justices of the same court were represented to have made the same declaration.

All that the judges of the Court of Claims asked was not the increase of the number of judges, not on the theory—none of them feared, they disclaimed that idea—that the increase of business would embarrass the court in any way, but all they asked was that an additional Attorney-General of the United States should be appointed and paid under the provisions of this act in order to facilitate the disposition of these claims. Otherwise, their friends upon the committee contended, the majority of the committee, I myself voting with them towards the close, that this court was the best, readily, speedily, without delay, to determine all these claims of Indian depredations.

In accordance with this request, the only one they made, this bill had a provision, as follows:

To facilitate the speedy disposition of the cases herein provided for in said Court of Claims, there shall be appointed in the manner prescribed by law for the appointment of assistant attorneys-general, one additional Assistant Attorney-General of the United States, who shall receive a salary of $2,500 per annum.

That provision was inserted in the bill as the only thing necessary to expedite the adjustment and settlement of these claims. Therefore, I think the additional two judges, or the addition of anything to the Court of Claims, is unnecessary as having been long ago disclaimed. There is nothing in the character or the nature of these claims or in their number that was not just as well known when this bill was reported as now.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, I should be gratified if the Senator from Virginia could convince me that I have been wrong in my construction of the clause of the Constitution which confers upon the President the power of appointment.

The Constitution of the United States is like the constitution of the State of Illinois in some respects. That is, the Constitution of the United States gives to the President the power of appointment. The constitution of Illinois gives to the governor the power of appointment. When I had the honor of being governor of Illinois I was compelled to hold that the Legislature had no power to limit the governor in the selection of persons whom he should appoint.

Efforts were made, they were laudable efforts, to compel the governor of Illinois in the appointment of officers in a particular instance to confine the selection to certain classes of persons. After a great deal of thought, I held that, inasmuch as the constitution had conferred the power of appointment upon the governor, he was subject to no other control than that of the senate when called upon to advise and consent to his nominations.

I am in favor of a nonpartisan judiciary, if such a thing is possible. I have never yet seen a nonpartisan judiciary, and I do not suppose I shall live long enough to see it—I mean nonpartisan in its organization. I do not mean to say that judges have decided as politicians, though I have seen some eminent exceptions to that rule, but it is true upon the proper construction of this Constitution that Congress has power to say to the President that his selection of these judges shall be confined to particular classes of persons, that is, after having made an appointment from one party, the Democratic party, if such a thing could be imagined—and by the way I must do the President the justice to say that in the late organization of the circuit court he has selected two gentlemen, I am told, of the Democratic party—but after the President has selected a member of the Republican party, if you please, can Congress say to him in a statute, whatever may be the merits or qualifications of the members of that party who have not yet been appointed, he shall not look in that direction again, but shall look elsewhere into some other political party?

I do not believe the power exists. If I did, I should vote for the amendment of the Senator from Virginia, although I must confess, too, that I have never known much good follow from the requirement, which has been obeyed in some instances, to select men from different political parties. There are always means enough of evading it. I am, however, discussing it as a question of power, and I should be obliged to the Senator from Virginia for something that would support the right of Congress to limit the President in his choice in the exercise of his appointing power. I can not see how it can consist with the absolute uncontrolled power of the President to make appointments at his own discretion, subject to no other revisory authority than that of the Senate when called upon to advise and consent to his nominations.

It can not be regarded as within the power of Congress to disqualify anybody from appointment who is a citizen and who has never been convicted of crime. It is not in the power of Congress, in my judgment, to declare that members of a political party shall be disqualified from appointment, and where there are two or more officers to be appointed I know of no authority in Congress to say after the President has selected a judge, if you will, from one of the political parties, all the other members of that party shall be disqualified from appointment or that he shall be incapacitated to appoint them, for it does not make much difference whether the statute operates to disqualify every other man from appointment or whether the power of the President is limited to the selection of a man from one party rather than another.

I have on two or three occasions had this question before me under circumstances of the degree of gravity I have stated, and I have held it to be necessary, and I think it is now, that by the Constitution the President's power of appointment is absolutely unlimited, and that it is not competent for Congress to direct it, either by the admission of a class of exclusively eligibles, nor is it in the power of Congress to render any class of men on account of religious or political associations ineligible either absolutely or contingently. The power must be a complete, supreme power in the President.

I may feel more deeply about this because the general idea meets my views, but I am committed on more than one occasion to the contrary view, having had occasion, in the assertion of what I believe to be the just prerogative of the governor of my State, to deny the power of the General Assembly.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. PALMER. With great satisfaction.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not understand that this is a constitutional office; is it?

Mr. PALMER. I think not.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think not. It is merely statutory. The judges of the Court of Claims to-day are mere statutory judges. They are not constitutional judges; are they?

Mr. PALMER. They are not constitutional judges.

Mr. MITCHELL. No. If this court is increased by two judges it is increased because Congress in its discretion increases it, and it is not done in pursuance of any mandatory grant of power in the Constitution. It is a mere matter in the discretion of Congress on its own motion. There is no constitutional provision requiring Congress to establish a Court of Claims.

Mr. PALMER. No, there is not.

Mr. MITCHELL. That being so, then is or is not the case a little different from what it otherwise would be in case we were talking about judges who are judges by virtue of the Constitution? It is only a suggestion.

Mr. PALMER. The suggestion made by the Senator from Oregon is well worthy of consideration, although I am by no means convinced that any distinction can be shown. In enumerating the powers of the President it is said:

He shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments.

Mr. MITCHELL. The question simply occurred to me on the moment whether this Court of Claims, so called, is anything more than a mere commission appointed by Congress, or whether it is really a court, the appointment of the judges of which by the Constitution is vested in the President; and if but a commission, such as the Interstate Commerce Commission, whether the power of Congress in respect of defining the qualifications of the appointees would be any different from that in the case of judges?

Mr. PALMER. I should say, as a general proposition, that Congress has no power of appointing to office. I think, under the Constitution, while Congress may create and appoint commissions, it can not appoint to an office.

Mr. GRAY. If the Senator will allow me, I will observe that in the paragraph he has just read, by the Constitution it is required that the President shall appoint all officers whose offices are established by law.

Mr. PALMER. Yes, sir; I was answering the suggestion of the Senator from Oregon. The Constitution provides that the President—shall appoint * * * all other officers of the United States whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for and which shall be established by law.

If an office is established by law the power of appointment is devolved upon the President in as absolute terms as in the case where it is a constitutional office. The office being created by law, unless in exceptional cases, where the power of appointment is provided for by the President, or, in other words, where the power is not given by law to the President alone, to the courts of law, or to the heads of Departments, where the power is not disposed of by law, where the office is created without any other designation, the power of appointment is conferred by the Constitution upon the President, the law having created the office.

Now, will the Senator from Oregon or any other Senator—for I am anxious to be convinced about this—maintain that where the power is conferred upon the President by law, the power of appointment being simply the selection and the nomination of some person to fill the office, that being so, can it be said that it is in the power of Congress to limit the President in those selections? Suppose that it should be admitted, as has been done in some of the States, that a judge shall be learned in the law, which our profession has claimed always meant a lawyer, and illustrations may be found in many directions, would it be said that the President shall appoint a lawyer to this place? As a matter of fact, it is wise advice to the President, and I think it would be wise advice to the President to say "you ought to select persons from different parties."

As a matter of advice that might be wise; but can you say to him that he shall appoint all Democrats or that he shall appoint all Republicans or that he shall appoint them from one party? Can we thus limit him? If we could, it would lead to the most startling consequences. It might happen that at the next election—I have heard some predictions about that as being an impossibility—there might be a Democratic President elected, and it might happen that both Houses of Congress would be Republican. The President might veto the bill—possibly he might defend himself there—but suppose a Democratic House of Representatives and a Democratic Senate should provide that the President should appoint Democrats alone to such an office, a very wise provision in the abstract, I should say, would any President feel bound by it, Democratic or Republican? Can the power, in short, be thus limited? If I could be convinced that it could be I should cheerfully vote for this amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know whether the question I put to the Senator would meet the point he makes, but suppose under that general constitutional power that Congress may not prescribe qualifications for officeholders—

Mr. PALMER. I so maintain.

Mr. BUTLER. It seems to me that would be some limitation upon the power. I think clearly Congress has the right to prescribe the qualifications of an officer.

Mr. PALMER. I should like to have the Senator from South Carolina indicate what he means by prescribing qualifications.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know that I can define what the word "qualification" means. Congress might, it seems to me, pass an act saying that an officer to be appointed to a certain position should have certain qualifications; be of a certain age, not beyond a certain age, or above a certain age, or that he should be an American-born citizen, or something of that kind.

Mr. PALMER. I should think the question of the power of selection would be addressed to the President's entire discretion. Fitness, in the estimation of the President, would be the only qualification. I say "fitness." Perhaps it would require a law to qualify aliens to hold office in the United States. I imagine it would be somewhat difficult, however. All you could do would be to bring him within the class of eligible persons.

Mr. BUTLER. I think, under the civil-service law which we passed, certain appointees were required to pass a civil-service examination and to have certain qualifications for office before they could be appointed, and I have never heard the constitutionality of that act denied.

Mr. PALMER. I have no doubt for all mere employment that is legitimate. I make the distinction between—

Mr. HOAR. I would like to ask the Senator a question, if he will permit me, and it will not interfere with the line of his argument.

Mr. PALMER. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. Could the Congress, being about to adjourn and to give way to a new Congress of different political faith, provide that in the future appointment of judges the President should only appoint a person who held certain opinions as to the constitutionality of some of their own acts? And if they could not, could we provide—suppose that was the sole thing about which the two parties were differing at the time—that half the judges appointed should hold the opinions which their party considered the right ones and the other half hold the opposite?

Mr. PALMER. The Senator from Massachusetts puts a very strong case; yet, if I could defend the amendment of the Senator from Virginia, I think I could defend that.

Mr. HOAR. I think you would have to.

Mr. PALMER. Yes; but as I said before, I have felt that it is essential to the proper administration of the Government that each department shall be left in possession of its own powers without disturbance, and that the President of the United States, like the governor of a State in a proper case, may go to all the citizens of the country to find appointees for any position which he is required by law to fill. I would not willingly consent that Congress should assume to impose any restriction upon him or attempt to limit his power. I do not believe it would be judicious in policy, and I am quite sure it is contrary to the express provisions of the Constitution.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, as a mandate in this proposed act it seems to me that this declaration of Congress would be void, not being within its powers to put any absolute restraint upon the executive authority of the President to make his selection of an officer. As a suggestion and as an expression of opinion it would be persuasive, and perhaps effective.

I am candid to say that I realize fully the force of the argument which has been made by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] and the considerations which he has presented. It was designed in our Constitution that the three departments of Government, executive, judicial, and legislative, should be independent of each other, and that each could exercise those powers deposited in it by the Constitution without constraint, and if the President saw fit to disregard this suggestion from Congress—for I do not believe it would have more force than a suggestion—I think he would have full power and authority to do it.

At the same time, Mr. President, in view of the many precedents along the line which is now under discussion, in view of the fact that our whole civil-service fabric is based upon a different interpretation of the authority of Congress as related to Executive power, and in view of the public policy which lies under it, I do not think it would transcend the proprieties of the case for Congress thus to express its opinion upon this subject. It would be an opinion merely, and not, in my judgment, a binding and mandatory portion of the law. The word "shall" in that text would be construed as "may"—"may" and "shall" being often construed by courts as convertible words, or when one word is used that the other would more appropriately express its meaning, and it would read, "who might be selected from different political parties," being a suggestion to the President of public opinion and of the legislative animus upon that subject. I believe, sir, that this about covers the whole matter.

It will be observed by the Senator from Illinois, however, as he has invited an expression on my part, that we have the Civil Service Commission constituted on this plan, and that the great body of the functionaries of this Government are selected upon that plan, their qualifications being that they are nonpartisan and they are selected by a nonpartisan commission, it being provided, in order to secure the nonpartisanship of the commission, that the commissioners should be selected from different political organizations. So in the Interstate Commerce Commission it is provided that not more than so many of them shall belong to the same political party.

Now, identically the same argument might be made in reference to them as to this inferior court. It is an executive act by which the President appoints them. They are officers of this Government just as much as these inferior judges are officers, and it seems late in the day, when we reach that particular branch of the Government which should be more nonpartisan than any other, to have built the Government up to the very head with nonpartisan institutions and to leave the head, and the judicial portion of its head, which should be the least partisan, unrestrained by the same suggestions which have pertained to others.

So, sir, guided by legislative precedents, which have been sustained by nearly every gentleman upon this floor, and which the present Executive himself has recognized and enforced, it does not seem to me to be a strain upon our institutions that, with this interpretation of that clause, to embody it in this law—

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. DANIEL. With pleasure.

Mr. PLATT. Does the Senator know of any instance in our legislation where we have ever adopted this provision with reference to the appointment of any judicial officer?

Mr. DANIEL. No, sir; I do not; but the ground on which you deny the right as to the judicial officer is one which applies with equal force to all other officers, because the ground upon which you object to this is that it is a restraint not upon the officer who is the appointee, but upon the Executive who makes the appointment. Now, if you may give a suggestion to the Executive who makes the appointment as to one class of officers, why may you not make the same suggestion as to another class of officers, especially when the class to which it is now directed is one in which it is more desirable that nonpartisanship should exist than in any other.

Mr. HOAR. I listened with great interest to hear whether the Senator from Virginia would answer the question which I put to the Senator from Illinois. I should like to repeat it.

I agree that a practice has grown up, and a healthy practice if it can be constitutionally supported, that where there are mere tellers, like election officers who are to count the vote, it is reasonable and just that the political parties should be represented there. Whether that comes within the argument suggested by the Senator from Illinois may be a fair question. I am speaking now of public policy. But just see where it follows if we undertake to apply this power or to assert this right as applicable to judicial officers. Parties have differed again and again and the fundamental difference between parties has been in regard to some question of constitutional authority, the constitutional power to charter a United States bank, the constitutionality of the alien and sedition laws—these grave questions to be determined in the end, if they are ever determined finally, by the judiciary, are the things and opinions which make men members of political parties ordinarily.

Now, if we can constitutionally pass this amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia, can not an expiring Congress, the party going out of power, the President and the Senate and the House, constitutionally provide for an addition to the number of judges of the supreme judicial court with a provision that the men appointed shall entertain certain opinions as to the constitutionality of what that party has just been doing and what its antagonists are endeavoring to overthrow?

Mr. BUTLER. May I interrupt the Senator to inquire if that was not done in a particular case, in the case of the greenback decision, when the Supreme Court, I believe, was increased from seven to nine judges?

Mr. HOAR. A vile slander never got onto the stump than the intimation that those two honorable and reverend judges were appointed for any such purpose. Their names were before the Senate before the decision was made.

Mr. BUTLER. It was so understood.

Mr. HOAR. Well, a great many things have been understood in this world. President Grant, Hamilton Fish, and the Attorney-General of that Administration concurred in their personal assertions that there was no truth whatever in the statement, and stated that they did not know anything about this decision when those gentlemen were selected.

Mr. President, I do not think there is an American citizen or lawyer of ordinary intelligence and honesty—and I am quite sure the Senator from South Carolina, who is a citizen and lawyer of extraordinary intelligence and of perfect honesty, I do not question—who desires to find any reason for the appointment of Mr. Justice Bradley or Mr. Justice Strong other than in the eminent fitness of those two gentlemen.

Mr. BUTLER. I have made no assertion upon the subject whatever.

Mr. HOAR. No; I do not understand you to have done so.

Mr. BUTLER. I simply stated what has been understood, and I have never before heard it contradicted.

Mr. HOAR. It has been contradicted a thousand times.

Mr. BUTLER. I have never heard it before contradicted. I have expressed no opinion upon the subject, for I did not know.

Mr. HOAR. I understand. What I am saying is—

Mr. BUTLER. I know it was generally understood at the time that the court was increased.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will attend to what I am saying before he comments upon it, he will find that what I was saying was, that I was very sure that the Senator from South Carolina, a lawyer and citizen of extraordinary intelligence and of entire honesty, would not undertake to find any reasons for the appointment of either of those two eminent judges, except his eminent fitness for his place. I am sure the Senator concurs with me in that opinion.

Mr. BUTLER. I certainly do.

Mr. HOAR. I am affirming in my poor and feeble style just what the Senator says so much better than I. He does not make any such charges against these eminent judges.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. DANIEL. In the acts creating the Civil-Service Commission and the Interstate Commerce Commission are there not the same suggestions that appear in this bill as to executive officers?

Mr. HOAR. I do not believe in the policy, if that state of case exists.

Mr. DANIEL. But the Senator admits that they are based upon the same doctrine as this?

Mr. HOAR. Except that the Senator's amendment applies to judicial officers, and carries it further than it has ever been applied heretofore. I do not think that it is a healthy or constitutional provision.

Mr. BUTLER. The Interstate Commerce Commission has certain judicial functions.

Mr. CULLOM. No.

Mr. BUTLER. I know not so far as the statute is concerned, but it seems to me they exercise them. I have no particular liking for this kind of legislation, and never had in my life.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to finish my statement, if the Senator please.

Mr. BUTLER. Very well.

Mr. HOAR. I say again, if this be a good practice, if it be sound, or if it be constitutional, I do not see why an outgoing Congress can not enact that the President shall only appoint persons to the Supreme Court of the United States of certain opinions on great constitutional questions. You can not defend one logically without defending the other.

These things get settled in the revolutions of parties. A party holds its place; another party comes in. A little while ago there was a united Supreme Court all Republicans, and then pretty soon there were three Democrats upon the bench. Two Chief Justices within this brief period have been gentlemen sympathizing with the Democratic party in its general policy.

The Senator from Virginia says his amendment is to get nonpartisan judges. The very provision in the amendment is to get partisans. He says men to be appointed shall belong to different political parties, that they shall differ from each other. It excludes all that great class of our citizens, in their own estimation certainly, who think they do not belong to any political party and do what they call voting for the best man, independent of what he is going to do when he gets into office in the way of public policy.

Mr. DANIEL. I never had any faith in them.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Virginia wishes to exclude that class of gentlemen from judicial appointment, I can not accede to the constitutionality of his purpose, though there may be a good deal of sound reason in the matter of fitness for accomplishing it if he can.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I can very well imagine that in a commission like the Interstate Commerce Commission or any other that has no relation whatever to the fundamental principles of the Constitution or the great differences of party, there will be no harm in a restriction providing, in order to secure a more general satisfaction, that the men shall be of different political parties, but I can not see the sense or wisdom in providing with regard to courts that may have to consider great principles of government or of party that they shall be of both parties.

Let me suppose a case. Suppose the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], with his well-defined principles concerning the relations between the States and the Federal Government, who believes in what he and I both consider a wise States'-rights doctrine—suppose he were President, would he be compelled to go to the other party, if party lines were drawn upon that matter, if there was a judge to be appointed, and would he appoint a man who held what to him were great heresies and dangerous heresies; or would a Republican President be excusable for appointing a Democrat who believed that the constitutional amendments were wrong by force from an unwilling people, were unconstitutionally adopted, and the whole reconstruction policy, in the language of the Horatio Seymour convention, was "unconstitutional, revolutionary, and void? A Republican judge who would so decide would be false to his oath. Or, take my friend the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], or several other men equally sound on finance over there, would they feel bound to appoint a man for the sake of pleasing parties who believed that fiat money was constitutional, the Senator from Alabama believing in the true, old-fashioned Democratic doctrine that the Federal Government can alone control the currency of the country and can not make anything but coin a legal tender—would he appoint a fiat money man? Yet these are the things that divide parties.

I think there is a great deal of popular—if I may use a slang expression—rot about partisanship. There is no bigger or nobler word, except religion, in that Webster Dictionary than the word "politics" as he defines it. Webster's definition is an oration.

Why, have we not great parties composed of twenty or thirty millions of people because we differ as to whether certain things should be put upon the statute book, or, being upon the statute book, should be sustained by the judiciary as well as by the executive branch of the Government?

I can imagine a dozen theories which I have heard advocated upon this floor which would absolutely, in my judgment, disqualify a man holding them from a place on the Supreme Bench. It may be so with regard to this Court of Claims. If I understand this argument, the Court of Claims is not appointed to consider political principles, by any means, but the Court of Claims, in the course of a great variety of matters that come before it may have occasion to consider many of these things growing out of the war, war duties, war rights, the relation between foreign countries and the United States in case of war, or between our various States, or between the Federal Government and the States, the rights of the citizen for certain losses sustained in war, etc. If I were called upon to appoint a judge of that court I should want to know that he held very sound common-sense doctrine on those subjects, leaning to the Republican side, which I think would be necessary to honestly administer the law.

I do not believe in an attempt to so restrict the President. I do not believe in acknowledging by a solemn statute that we are engaged in discussions that do not relate to the fundamental principles of government.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, it is evident that this discussion will last somewhat longer, and the Senate is getting thin. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Illinois to withdraw that motion for a moment.

Mr. CULLOM. Very well.

Mr. CALL. I wish to appeal to the Senator from Massachusetts in reference to the amendment to the bill to establish certain courts of appeal, which passed the Senate without a yeas-and-nays vote. My colleague [Mr. PASCO] and some other Senators think that the amendment which was made to the bill is quite an important matter, and, if the Senator has no objection, I shall ask that the vote be reconsidered by which the bill was passed, in order that the matter may have some further consideration.

Mr. HOAR. It is the Senator's right to move a reconsideration, if he so desires. Let that motion be pending.

Mr. CALL. I do not wish to do it if it is disagreeable to the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. I should like very much to get that bill and this bill disposed of in one way or the other as early a day as practicable.

Mr. CALL. I will enter the motion to reconsider, and let it be decided on Monday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider the bill referred to will be entered.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to notify the Senate that I shall call up the motion to reconsider on Monday at 2 o'clock.

Mr. CULLOM. I promised to yield to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], and I withdraw the motion for an executive session temporarily.

ADDITIONAL REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report favorably an original bill, and I shall file a report in the case very soon.

The bill (S. 2914) for marking the lines of battle and the positions of the troops of the army of Northern Virginia at Gettysburg, Pa., and establishing the Gettysburg battlefield as a national military park, was read twice by its title.

FRANCISCO ALCANTARA.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have a paper in my hand which relates to a matter about which the State Department urged me to get speedy action. It is a very simple thing, and will meet with the universal approval of Senators if they will only wait to hear it read. I report favorably from the Committee on Military Affairs an original joint resolution, and I ask the Senate to give it present consideration.

The joint resolution (S. R. 73) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point Francisco Alcantara, of Venezuela, was read the first time by title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized to permit Francisco Alcantara, of Venezuela, to receive instructions at the Military Academy at West Point: Provided, That no expense shall be caused to the United States thereby: And provided further, That in the case of the said Alcantara the provisions of sections 1320 and 1321 of the Revised Statutes shall be suspended.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. HAWLEY. A few words of explanation, Mr. President. There is no written report accompanying the joint resolution, but there are many precedents for it. The Government has very kindly admitted many young men from different nations to study in the two academies, it being always provided, and suggested by the applicants themselves, that they will pay the usual annual bills there.

The two sections of the Revised Statutes referred to are merely those requiring students to swear allegiance to this country and to serve in the Army a certain number of years. Of course, these provisions are waived in the case of foreign students.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VENEZUELA STEAM TRANSPORTATION COMPANY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following communication from the President of the United States; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I herewith transmit, in response to the resolution passed in the Senate on the 10th of March, 1892, a report of the Secretary of State and the accompanying correspondence had in relation to the claim of the Venezuela Steam Transportation Company, for the said company's relief.

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION.

Washington, April 14, 1892.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I now renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twelve minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 18, 1892, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 14, 1892.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 14, 1892.

INDIAN AGENT.

Frank Lillibridge, of Pierre, S. Dak., to be agent for the Indians of the Cheyenne River Agency, in South Dakota.

POSTMASTER.

Charles L. Perry, to be postmaster at New Rochelle, in the county of Westchester and State of New York.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 14, 1892.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

WILLIAM R. COLLIER VS. UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Court of Claims, transmitting copy of the findings of the court in the case of William R. Collier vs. The United States; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

SENATE BILLS, ETC., REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House bills and a concurrent resolution of the Senate; which were severally referred as indicated, namely:

A bill (S. 136) for the presentation of badges to the officers and men of the Greely relief expedition—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (S. 263) for the relief of the heir or heirs of John Howard Payne—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 349) to increase the rate of pension for certain cases of deafness—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1910) to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the pension of certain soldiers and sailors who are totally helpless from injuries received or from diseases contracted in the service of the United States," approved March 4, 1890—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1956) to amend an act entitled "An act establishing a customs-collection district in Florida, to be known as the collection district of Tampa, and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1889, and to make Punta Gorda a subport of entry—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

A bill (S. 1982) for the relief of Avery D. Babcock and wife, of Oregon—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2107) to enable the Centennial Board of Finance, incorporated by an act approved June 1, 1872, to close its affairs and dissolve said corporation—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 2137) to amend an act entitled "An act amending the pension law so as to remove the disability of those who, having participated in the rebellion, have since its termination enlisted in the Army of the United States and become disabled," approved March 3, 1877—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A concurrent resolution providing for the printing of 15,000 copies of Senate report 2130—to the Committee on Printing.

ACCOUNT STATE OF FLORIDA AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 1391) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle the account stated between the General Government and the State of Florida by the said Secretary, under the authority of the act approved March 2, 1889, known as the deficiency appropriation act, and to pay the balance found to be due said State.

Mr. BULLOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be allowed to remain on the table for the present.

There was no objection.

REAL-ESTATE ASSESSMENTS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5978) to extend the time for making assessments of real estate, etc.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] to this bill—

Mr. RICHARDSON. This is a bill relating to the District?

The SPEAKER. It is; and the Senate amendment merely changes the title.

Mr. McMILLIN. I ask consent that this bill be allowed to remain on the table until to-morrow morning. The gentleman from South Carolina does not seem to be present.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. PARRETT, from Saturday, the 16th, for two weeks, on account of important business.

To Mr. GEISSENHAIN, indefinitely, on account of important business.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will lay before the House at this time a communication from the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE], which explains itself.

The Clerk read as follows:

FORTRESS MONROE, VA., April 12, 1892.

MY DEAR SIR: The Boston Globe in its issue of the 25th ultimo reports me as unaccounted for upon the bill for the "free coinage of silver," and this statement has been copied into other papers. The statement is false. I was absent, as you know, by permission of the House on account of illness, and on the silver vote was paired with Gen. CATCHINGS of Mississippi. The Globe, though a Democratic paper, I think intends to be reasonably fair with Republicans, but I fear in my case has no correct information about me or my public acts from their Washington correspondent. Will you kindly cause this letter to be read and entered upon the RECORD?

Very respectfully,

ELIJAH A. MORSE.

HON. CHARLES F. CRISP,

Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

O. P. COBB AND OTHERS.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1376) referring to the Court of Claims the claims of O. P. Cobb and others.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the United States Court of Claims to adjudicate the claims of Oliver P. Cobb, J. & O. P. Cobb & Co., John Christy & Co., and Cobb, Blaisdell & Co., for corn and oats purchased by them in pursuance of written and oral contracts made by them with United States officers, the claimants to be allowed the contract price for the corn and oats purchased by them for the use of the United States Government, deducting therefrom all sums of money paid by the United States on account thereof, and also all sums of money realized by claimants from the sale of the corn and oats that the officers did not receive, waiving the statute of limitations and former judgments in said cases, and report to Congress.

The Committee on War Claims recommend the adoption of the following amendment:

"Strike out all after the word, 'allowed,' viz: lines 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, and a part of 15, and insert in lieu thereof 'such sum as the Court of Claims may find to be due said claimants after a hearing on said claim and evidence adduced in support thereof, and report to Congress'"

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, let us hear the proposed amendment again read, and I also ask to have the report read, so that we may see the nature of this case as well as the amount involved.

The amendment was again read.

The report (by Mr. SCOTT) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred House bill 1376, have considered the same and report the bill with amendment as follows:

"Strike out all after the word 'allowed,' at the end of the eighth line, and insert the following: 'such sum as the Court of Claims may find upon a full hearing of the evidence adduced in support of said claim to be due to said claimants, and report to Congress.'"

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill as amended.

Mr. McMILLIN. There is not a word in that report to show the amount of the claim nor where it originated, what it grew out of, nor why it has not been paid; and I do not think we ought to pass a bill of this character without knowing something of the facts with which we are undertaking to deal.

Mr. SCOTT. The object of the bill is to refer the whole question to the Court of Claims to ascertain the facts as well as the amount due.

Mr. McMILLIN. If this was to be referred simply under the provisions of the Bowman act, so that the court could ascertain the facts and report them to Congress, I would have no objection. But I think before we undertake to pass a bill here which is equivalent to a judgment, waiving the statute of limitations and all of the fortifications which protect the Government against claims of this character, we ought to know precisely what we are doing.

Mr. SCOTT. If the gentleman will observe the reading of the amendment, he will see it specifically provides that the findings of the court shall be reported to Congress. It does not undertake to adjudicate the claim, but simply authorizes the court to examine the case and report the facts.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is there any question of loyalty involved?

Mr. SCOTT. No, sir.

Mr. McMILLIN. I ask that the bill be read as it will stand if the amendment be adopted.

The bill as proposed to be amended was again read.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think that such an adjudication on the part of the Court of Claims would be equivalent to a judgment.

Mr. DINGLEY. The word "adjudicate" in the bill would undoubtedly have that construction.

Mr. SCOTT. But the bill only provides that the court shall report the findings to Congress.

Mr. DOCKERY. The report would be of very little use after the claim is paid.

Mr. McMILLIN. If the gentleman desires only a report from the Court of Claims, after an ascertainment of the facts, that I think can be much better accomplished by changing the phraseology of the bill. If he lets it go over until to-morrow it can be put in such shape as will be unobjectionable.

Mr. SCOTT. Then I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over until to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands objection is made.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman from Illinois asks that it be withheld until to-morrow, so that it may be put in proper shape.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the bill.

CLERK OF THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT COURTS, MISSISSIPPI CITY, MISS.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That a clerk of the circuit court and a clerk of the district court of the United States be appointed for said courts at Mississippi City, in the State of Mississippi.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to hear that bill read again. There is so much confusion in the House that I could not hear it.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order, and the bill will be again reported.

The bill was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the report. It is manifest that there has been a deputy at that point heretofore.

Mr. STOCKDALE. This is unanimously reported.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the reason for it?

The SPEAKER. The report will be read, subject to objection.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred House bill 7519, report it back with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think these reports ought to furnish some information as to the reason why the bill should pass.

Mr. STOCKDALE. The clerk himself asks this.

Mr. HOLMAN. I know he does, but he has a deputy there, has he not?

Mr. STOCKDALE. He has a deputy there, but that deputy will not continue to be deputy any longer.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is to say, the expense of a clerk is provided for here. When that division of the State was created, the clerk was to appoint a deputy, and he has appointed a deputy heretofore, has he not?

Mr. STOCKDALE. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that there is no expense attached to the passage of this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why is there not?

Mr. STOCKDALE. He will receive the same compensation that the deputy has received. The clerk will receive the fees.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; but is there not some salary otherwise?

Mr. STOCKDALE. Not a particle.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall not object in this particular instance, but I shall object hereafter to bills passing the House providing for a deputy clerk, when it is understood that at the very next opportunity a clerk will be provided for instead of a deputy. There is necessarily some expense attending it.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of suggesting to my colleague that this bill ought to provide that the clerk to be appointed shall give the customary bond in cases of this sort and be responsible alone under his bond for his actions as clerk. It appears that the clerk of the court at Jackson, Miss., is the responsible clerk, and a deputy has been appointed here. I understand the deputy is a very capable and competent man. That is the information I have from the regular clerk. I think the bill ought to provide that this clerk to be appointed shall give bonds, and be responsible for his own actions, and thus relieve the clerk at Jackson from attending that court at all hereafter, giving the new clerk sole control of the matters of that court, under the usual bond.

Mr. STOCKDALE. The law requires that any clerk shall give bonds, and he will be required to give bonds as any other clerk would.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I have no objection to the appointment of a clerk there.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill just reported by the Clerk?

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I do not object to the consideration of this bill, because I believe it is a meritorious bill, and that it ought to become a law, but I want to say here and now that there is no proper division as to these unanimous consents; and it arises, not from any fault of the Speaker, but from the fact that a great many of us find it impossible to get our bills out of the committee; and if this thing is to continue, unanimous consent will be cut off before a great while. I give that notice now. We must have fair play, and there will be no unanimous consent unless we get fair play.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. STOCKDALE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

JAMES A. FINLEY.

Mr. BERGEN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. HERBERT. I demand the regular order.

Mr. DOCKERY. They have had no recognition this morning on that side, and I suggest to the gentleman that he withdraw his demand for the regular order.

Mr. HERBERT withdrew the demand for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BERGEN] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which will be reported by the Clerk.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to restore to his former rank of captain and assistant surgeon in the Army, and place upon the retired list of army officers, James A. Finley, wholly retired from active service February 26, 1891.

Mr. BUTLER. I would like to hear the report read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report, subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 730) for the relief of James A. Finley, having considered the same, respectfully report:

That the committee has examined the evidence presented with this case and on the showing considers the claimant entitled to the relief asked for under the provisions of this bill. The report of the War Department on this case is printed herewith as a part of this report.

Mr. BERGEN. Mr. Speaker, the correspondence with the War Department, which is attached to this report and made a part of it, is very long, and I can make a statement which I think will satisfy the gentleman.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let us have order so that we can hear the statement of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. BERGEN. This gentleman, Capt. Finley, has been engaged for seventeen years in frontier work in the Army. In such work he contracted some diseases which rendered him nervous in appearance and in action, and he necessarily used stimulants to some extent for his support. He was put upon the retired list by the retiring board, under the statute, something like a year ago, and this action amounts to a dismissal from the service. The General of the Army, the Secretary of War, and the Surgeon-General have united in recommending that he have the relief granted by this bill.

It is impossible to restore him to the service because the place which he filled has been filled by another. He now asks simply to be put on the retired list, which would give him three-quarters of the pay that he would otherwise receive. All the officers of the posts at which he has served unite in stating that he never was subject to the complaint which has been made, and in saying that the judgment which has been rendered, or rather the sentence of the retiring board—it amounts practically to a sentence—is too severe, and should not have been imposed; that no court-martial in the service would have made such a sentence.

I am ready to answer any questions that may be asked; but that practically covers the case.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will not detain the House now by asking for the reading of this long report of the War Department, but I would like the opportunity to read the report myself, and I therefore object to the present consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. McMILLIN. So far as the ex-parte statement of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BERGEN] is concerned, it seems that we will have to override the action of the board before we can give this relief, and the presumption is that they investigated the case fairly.

Mr. BERGEN. The gentleman is under a misapprehension. We do not override the board at all. This officer has not been dismissed from the service, but has been put upon the retired list. He can not be restored again to the Army. We override no sentence.

Mr. McMILLIN. How did he get out of his place? That is what I want to get at.

Mr. BERGEN. By being permanently put upon the retired list, which amounts practically to a dismissal.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does he not get three-fourths pay?

Mr. BERGEN. Not in the present attitude of the case.

Mr. McMILLIN. What does he get?

Mr. BERGEN. He gets nothing.

Mr. McMILLIN. Why does he not get it?

Mr. BERGEN. Simply because they have put him on the retired list under the adjudication of the board.

Mr. McMILLIN. But the retired list generally gives partial pay, unless there is some fault on the part of the soldier.

Mr. BERGEN. There was not thought to be.

Mr. McMILLIN. That is the thing I wanted to get at.

Mr. BERGEN. It is very fully set out here in the report.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will get the report and see what there is about it.

ASSESSMENT OF REAL ESTATE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now lay before the House a House bill with Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, April 13, 1892.

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 5978) entitled "An act extending the time for making assessments of real estate, etc." do pass with the following amendment: Amend the title so as to read:

"A bill to extend the time for making an assessment of real estate in the District of Columbia, outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown."

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say just one word in explanation. We passed a bill here authorizing the present assessors to have more time to assess the property outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown. The Senate simply amended it so as to embrace the full meaning of the act, by adding to the title of the bill the words "outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown." They did not amend the bill in any other way except in its title.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will say to my friend from South Carolina, the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, that on yesterday there was a resolution passed here providing for an investigation of the assessment.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. McMILLIN. I hope that the bill will be held up until it is seen what this investigation will accomplish. If the gentleman will hold it up until the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOHNSON], who was appointed chairman of that committee is able to investigate the matter, I will be obliged, because this may be the only means of effecting a remedy in the event that that committee shall find that a remedy is needed.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not think the two things clash at all, but in view of the statement made by the gentleman from Tennessee, I will not object to its being laid over.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be withdrawn for the present.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a privileged matter, and to make a parliamentary inquiry of the Chair on which I should like to have a ruling upon a certain matter. I desire to call attention of the Chair to the RECORD of this morning. On page 3556, there is a speech of Henry George, not a member of this House, supplemented by five lines of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STONE]. If the Chair will examine the matter he will see that chapters from 21 to 25 inclusive are attached to these four lines. This gentleman, I suppose, under the unanimous consent given by the House, which of course would be equivalent to a rule of the House, that members might be permitted to extend their remarks on the tariff bill or print remarks on the tariff bill, had these chapters printed. I desire also to call attention to the fact, that while the gentleman from Kentucky embraces chapters from 21 to 25 another gentleman [Mr. BOWMAN], embraces from 16 to 20, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON] published chapters from 11 to 15; the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FITHIAN] publishes chapters 6 to 10, and Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio, publishes chapters 1 to 5. So that under this leave, or order, these gentlemen have published that volume, except three chapters. These I suppose will be due and forthcoming to-morrow. There has been no repetitions of these publications, but where one member left off, another member took it up from that chapter and published a series; and by that method they have succeeded in getting this bound volume, which I hold in my hand, in the RECORD, to be distributed free under the frank of members.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Will the gentleman read the chapters that the members have omitted?

Mr. BURROWS. Now, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. FITHIAN. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. BURROWS. I do not see any necessity at this point. This is merely a point of order. My point of order is, under a leave given by the House, which is equivalent to a rule that members may be permitted to extend their remarks, or to print remarks upon the tariff bill, is it in order to simply say "I desire to submit a certain volume as expressing my views." [Laughter.] And under that publish a printed book in the RECORD for free distribution. The title of this book is, "Protection or Free-trade." It is simply a question of order, and there is no necessity for any interruption. It is simply a question whether under leave granted to members of the House to extend their remarks on the tariff debate, or to publish remarks on the tariff debate, it is in order to embody, without making any remarks of your own whatever under that order except sufficient to constitute a peg to hang it on, to publish a printed volume in the RECORD for distribution.

I understand that this is a copyright volume, and somebody of course will be liable for it. But the point I want to make, and I do not care to argue any further, is this: Is it in order under the rule, or under the order, or the permission of the House to print remarks to put in the RECORD, a printed volume? This is evidently done with concert and understanding, because no chapter is duplicated. They have got chapters, now, from 1 to 25, and the next RECORD, I suppose, to-morrow will complete the volume. I wish to know whether that is in order, and if it is in order, of course, we have several volumes on the other side that we propose to have published. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Several members addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not desire to hear anything on the question of order. As the Chair understands the practice—and if he is in error he will be glad to have any different practice, or any rule that requires a different practice, pointed out—it has always been a question to be determined by the House itself whether or no any gentleman under a leave to print has violated the rules or the practice that have prevailed in that respect. As the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] knows, there has been granted a general leave to print on the subject of the tariff—

Mr. BURROWS. To print remarks.

The SPEAKER. To print remarks. Well, of course, as the gentleman understands, that has always, under the practice of the House, covered the printing of extracts. Now, how extensive the extracts which a member prints shall be is not a matter for the Chair to determine. The House itself has always, as the Chair understands, determined the question whether or no there has been any violation or breach of the privilege granted, and therefore the Chair thinks there should be some resolution or motion on the subject.

Mr. BURROWS. I think the Chair is quite right upon that point. It is a difficult question for the Chair to determine; and, for the purpose of testing the sense of the House, I move to strike out, on page 3556 of the RECORD, from what is printed as the speech of Mr. STONE of Kentucky, all that Henry George says [laughter]—all the copyrighted portion of the "speech"—as not being proper to be inserted in the RECORD under the leave granted by the House to extend remarks upon the subject of the tariff.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I suppose the gentleman will include also the letter of Mr. Horr, printed on the same page, inserted by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER]. There are about two columns of that matter. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Michigan by including the letter of Mr. Horr, and I also move to strike out the poem on page 3368, inserted by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BELKNAP]. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURROWS. I call my friend's attention to the fact that the letter of Mr. Horr to which he refers is simply an article from a newspaper, not copyrighted matter, and, as he knows, such things are frequently read in the House and go into the RECORD.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That was not read in the House.

Mr. CATE. I object to striking out spring poetry. [Laughter.]

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the motion is to strike out matter inserted in the RECORD by myself. Now, I want to plead guilty to the charge of the gentleman from Michigan that I did insert that matter in the RECORD and did so for the reason that I had the right to do so under the leave given by the House. I inserted it for the express purpose of having it go to the voters of this country upon the question of tariff reform. I inserted it for that express purpose and no other. I want to say to the House and to the gentleman from Michigan that there are a number of members upon this floor who, at various times during the discussion of the tariff question, have tried in vain to get an opportunity to address the House in regard to it—really to address the country, because we do not listen to tariff speeches here; they are made to go to the country.

I myself, during the discussion that has gone on up to this time, have been so unfortunate as not to be recognized for the purpose of addressing the House, or my constituents, through the funnel of this House, but upon the day mentioned I did secure recognition for the purpose of extending in the RECORD some remarks upon the tariff, and I inserted the matter in question, and, Mr. Speaker, I indorse the article that I have had printed in the RECORD. I put it in there, as I have said, for the purpose of having it go to the country. There is no denial to be made of that, and I do not desire any denial or excuse. Further, upon that point, let me say that this is my fourth term in Congress, and that during my service here I have seen every gentleman that I have had any acquaintance with who has been at all prominent in the discussion of public questions in this House, insert that very class of matter in the RECORD. I do not mean matter exactly like this, because gentlemen upon the other side do not insert this kind of matter [laughter]; and that is where the thing is hurting, that this matter is going out to the voters of the country. But I have seen gentlemen insert almost all sorts of matter in the RECORD under the leave to print. Why, sir, members of the Republican party inserted the tariff articles of Mr. Blaine contained in his Twenty Years of Congress; inserted them bodily into the RECORD during the campaign of 1884.

Mr. McMILLIN. That was done by Mr. Brewer, of New Jersey, if the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] will recollect, and it was done without any complaint on the part of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. There was no complaint about it and no complaint has been raised about any such matter hitherto. But, Mr. Speaker, the question of the revision of the tariff and of relieving the people from the burdens of taxation that are now resting upon them is before the country and it is being made warm for the party that favors protection, and they object that this argument should go to the voters of the country.

I did not submit this matter as my argument; I do not claim to have made it as a speech; but I put it in the RECORD that it might go through the mails to the people of the country in order that they might have the benefit of the views of one of the strongest writers in the country upon the side of tariff reform. That is exactly why I did it. If the House desires to strike it out, of course I submit; but I ask that it also strike out all the things that have gone into the RECORD during this session of Congress that have not been spoken by members on the floor. And when you have done that you will have rid the RECORD of a vast amount of misleading stuff that has been put into it, from newspapers and other sources, by members of the Republican party to bolster up the cause of protection. And you will leave a good many skeletons in the RECORD; you will strike out some of the best portions of speeches on the other side. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] has within the last day or two inserted matter of this kind in the RECORD (I refer to page 3453); that must go out; and the poems and other things of that kind which have been inserted in the RECORD will have to go out.

Mr. Speaker, so far as I am individually concerned, I am willing that the RECORD shall be held right down to what occurs on the floor—the utterances that are made here. But if this privilege of "leave to print" is to be allowed, it can not be confined to one set of men; every man on the floor must be recognized as entitled to exercise the same privilege.

I have no excuse to offer; I have no denials to make. I did insert this matter in the RECORD; and I inserted it in order that it might go to the country under the frank of members of the House in order that their constituents might be able to read this argument without having to buy it. I am glad that attention has been called to it, for it will emphasize the fact that this matter is in the RECORD, and that the people can have it without paying for it.

Mr. FITHIAN and Mr. BURROWS addressed the Chair.

Mr. BURROWS. I believe I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] will proceed.

Mr. BURROWS. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STONE] seems to have misconceived the question before the House—

Mr. FITHIAN. I insist that the gentleman from Michigan surrendered the floor. I am one of the parties who have been referred to in this matter—

Mr. BURROWS. I will say to my friend from Illinois [Mr. FITHIAN] that I shall not occupy more than two minutes—

The SPEAKER. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BURROWS. I was saying that the gentleman from Kentucky has misconceived this question entirely. The question is not whether this article will do good or do harm; that is not the question. The question is as to the practice of the House in reference to this matter; and it is a question involving the dignity and the integrity of the proceedings of the House. The question is simply whether under the leave given by the House for members to extend their remarks—

Mr. RICHARDSON. I make the point of order that it is impossible to hear what the gentleman is saying.

The SPEAKER. The House will please be in order.

Mr. FITHIAN. I desire to make the point of order that the gentleman from Michigan was in the first instance recognized; he addressed the House on this subject, and then surrendered the floor, after which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STONE] addressed the House. I submit that the gentleman from Michigan is not entitled under the rules to occupy the floor again until other members who may desire to be heard have had that opportunity.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. FITHIAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Michigan the second time, when under the rules he is not entitled to recognition the second time until other gentlemen are heard.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman please turn to the rule to which he refers?

Mr. FITHIAN. I have it not at hand; but I learn from members who are well informed on this question that there is such rule.

Mr. BURROWS. I should have been through by this time if the gentleman had not interrupted me. I do not care to say more than a word or two.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan will proceed.

Mr. FITHIAN. Mr. Speaker, outside of any rule I do not understand it to be fair that one member of the House should be entitled to the floor all the time when other gentlemen want to be heard.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that the gentleman from Michigan has abused any privilege. He made a motion and submitted remarks occupying a few moments. The gentleman from Kentucky made a speech in reply; and now the gentleman from Michigan desires, he says, to make some response to that. The Chair does not see that anybody has a right to complain.

Mr. FITHIAN. Suppose the gentleman from Michigan should call the previous question?

Mr. BURROWS. "The gentleman from Michigan" will not call the previous question.

The SPEAKER. Even if the gentleman from Michigan should do so, the previous question will not be ordered unless a majority of the House desire it. The fact of the previous question being called would not order it. The gentleman from Michigan will proceed.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I trust that the course taken by my friend from Kentucky [Mr. STONE] will not be followed by other gentlemen; I trust that we shall not discuss the tariff question on this proposition. That is wholly unnecessary. This is simply a question of order, a question affecting the integrity of our proceedings. There is no doubt that the House has entire control over its Journal and its RECORD, to determine what shall go in and what shall not go in. Now, the simple question is, whether or not under the leave given by the House to members to extend their remarks upon the tariff question in the RECORD, it is a violation of that privilege when members, instead of extending their remarks, publish in the RECORD a printed volume as expressive of their views upon the tariff question.

The Chair has said, I think very properly, that it is difficult for the Chair to determine this question; that it is one which properly should be left to the House; and with the view of testing the sense of the House upon the question, I have moved to strike out from the RECORD the chapters from this printed volume which have been published as the speech of the gentleman from Kentucky. That is the only question before the House. Whether this book will do good or not has nothing whatever to do with the question. If the gentleman from Kentucky was so very anxious to have this book reach his constituents, he should have purchased it and sent it to them, and not call on the public Treasury of the country to send it out for him at the public expense. But if this can be done; if the House shall determine that this shall remain in the RECORD, we have untold volumes that we wish to insert in reply.

Mr. SIMPSON. It would take untold volumes to reply to it.

Mr. BURROWS. And the RECORD will contain a great deal of extraneous matter and become very voluminous.

I will not call the previous question, as the gentleman from Illinois desires to be heard.

Mr. FITHIAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Michigan by striking out from the RECORD, on pages 3453 and 3454, a letter, published as the speech of the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. J. P. DOLLIVER, over the name of R. G. Horr. This letter is no part of his speech. The only words uttered by the gentleman from Iowa upon the floor of the House, if he uttered these words, were the following:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: For many years a vague report has been circulated by the Democratic press and platform to the effect that foreign markets enjoy advantages superior to our own in their dealings with the manufacturers of American farm implements.

The following letter of Hon. R. G. Horr, which, with the accompanying documents, appeared in the New York Tribune, August 23, 1891, sufficiently explodes these charges. I beg to print it here in the interest of truth on one of the practical phases of the current tariff debate.

Following that we have two closely printed pages of a letter written by a gentleman named R. G. Horr upon the subject of farm implements.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. FITHIAN. The gentleman from Iowa had previously to publishing this letter of Mr. R. G. Horr in the RECORD, occupied the floor of the House for an hour or more, and had published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a lengthy speech on the subject of the revision of the tariff. After he had taken up the time of the House, after he had occupied the space in the RECORD by the publication of his remarks, he now publishes a second speech, which is wholly composed of this letter of R. G. Horr on the subject of farm implements in the RECORD as a contribution upon the subject of the tariff, with a heading "Duties upon wool and woolen goods," to which it bears no reference.

Now, I want to say to the House and to the Speaker that during the discussion of the tariff question I had put my name down early on the list with the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, and requested that time be allotted me, to be occupied on the floor in the discussion of the pending subject. I was denied the right to be heard, because, I suppose, the time allowed for the general debate was not sufficient to accommodate all who wanted to speak upon the subject.

I had no opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to make any remarks during the discussion of this question upon the floor, and I thought and still think I had the right—I insist I had the right—in the absence of any remarks of my own, to submit remarks or writings of other gentlemen, especially the eminent gentleman from whom I copied the extract, for the purpose of expressing clearly the views that I entertain upon the question; and if it were not for the fact that the argument I inserted in that speech goes to the very vitals of this question, if it were not for the fact that the argument I inserted in the RECORD was a complete refutation of the position of gentlemen on the other side on the tariff question, the question that was under discussion at that time, no objection whatever would have been made to it even if it had occupied twenty pages of the RECORD instead of a few columns. It was not because of the space occupied in the RECORD that these gentlemen complain, but it was because of the facts, the cold facts, that are laid down for the people to read on this question, an argument which reviews and lays bare the position of gentlemen upon that side, that the complaint against these remarks being inserted in the RECORD is heard now upon this floor.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. FITHIAN. Now, if it is unfair that members on this side who have not been permitted to be heard on the tariff question on the floor of the House shall insert extracts from books or newspapers as their remarks in the RECORD, it is certainly very unfair and unjust for gentlemen on the other side, who have had opportunity and have taken advantage of it, to address the House and taken up the space in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with their remarks, should insert a speech on a subject, as the gentleman from Iowa has done, which is nothing but, as I have said, a letter written by a gentleman on a subject that was not under consideration when we were discussing a bill in relation to the duties on wool and woolen goods.

I therefore move, as an amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Michigan, that the speech of Mr. DOLLIVER be also stricken from the RECORD.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I desired to ask the gentleman from Illinois, but he declined to permit me, in the course of his remarks whether he recognizes any difference between the publication of a brief letter from a newspaper, bearing upon a practical and current phase of the tariff discussion, and printed by me under leave in the RECORD of yesterday, and the concerted publication by a dozen men of an entire volume upon the subject that has been copyrighted under the laws of the United States, and which is to be found in every public library throughout the country?

Mr. FITHIAN. I would like to know if the gentleman did not order a thousand or more copies of those "remarks" for circulation among his constituents?

Mr. DOLLIVER. But I do not wish to be understood as complaining of the gentleman from Illinois for substituting the writings of Henry George for his own argument. I can see readily how it might be more satisfactory to him and to his constituents. And if I could be sure that the Democratic national committee would undertake to circulate the works of Henry George as campaign documents, I think there would be no objection on this side of the House to the publication of them at the public expense.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Waiving the economy.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Waiving the question of economy; but we have no assurance that the Democratic national committee will touch it, and we rather object to having that book printed at the public expense and circulated in that section of the country where the national Democratic platform will be repudiated by the local Democracy, for the purpose of influencing the election and for campaign purposes.

Mr. FITHIAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] need not worry himself about what the National Democratic committee will do. We will attend to the Democratic party, and he will have all he can do if he attends to the affairs of the Republican party. This Congress was elected as a rebuke to the proceedings of the Republican party in the Fifty-first Congress, with a Democratic majority of nearly one hundred and fifty.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I must object to the gentleman from Illinois taking me off of the floor. I have no objection personally to the letter of Mr. Horr going out of the RECORD. I care nothing about that; but can this House see no difference between the publication of a brief extract from a public newspaper and the concerted publication of a copyrighted volume in its RECORD?

Mr. FITHIAN. Who is making objection to the copyright being infringed upon? Is it the gentleman who had the volume copyrighted, or is it the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER]?

Mr. WASHINGTON. It seems to be the gentleman from Iowa who is struck by the copyright business.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I favor the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FITHIAN] or not. I do not know that I have any reason to complain because the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] has inserted something in the RECORD that he did not deliver. During the hour and a half that he occupied the floor in his speech on the tariff question he propounded with a great deal of gusto a question to the other side of the House as to whether any one could name any article upon which the price had been increased since the McKinley bill had gone into operation, whereupon I tendered him, I believe, a list containing one hundred and twenty-four articles, which somehow or other has been lost entirely out of the RECORD. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITHIAN. I ask that the gentleman from Iowa may be permitted to print that list in the RECORD. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. McMILLIN. Does the gentleman from Michigan desire to be heard further?

Mr. BURROWS. I do.

Mr. McMILLIN. When the gentleman has finished what he has to say I will take the floor.

Mr. BURROWS. I wanted to say a word, in view of the fact that this publication, to which I called attention this morning, does not cover the whole field of criticism, and that possibly the vote ought not to be taken upon that one question alone, of eliminating these chapters from the speech of the gentleman from Kentucky; but as it appears from an examination of the RECORD there seems to have been a concerted action to get this book into the RECORD and get it franked, and into the hands of the public in this manner, I wish to withdraw my motion, and offer in lieu thereof the following, which I will ask the Clerk to read—

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. FITHIAN. I submit that the gentleman can not withdraw his motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to withdraw his motion. The House has taken no action upon it. The gentleman from Michigan offers the following, which the Clerk will report—

Mr. BURROWS. I think this will be more satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be referred to the Committee on Printing, pages 3389, 3402, 3033, 3451, 3556 and other pages contiguous, devoted to printing of chapters from Henry George's works, for examination and report, whether in the insertion of said matter in the RECORD, the privileges of the House have been violated.

Mr. FITHIAN. I move to lay that resolution on the table.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I support that motion.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FITHIAN] withhold his motion for a moment so that I can refer to a precedent?

Mr. FITHIAN. I will do that.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withdraw his motion?

Mr. FITHIAN. For the present.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. It seems to me this resolution can not be consistently adopted, for the reason that all members have general leave to print. Every gentleman upon this floor, by the special order already made, has the right to print as his speech whatever he pleases; the only limitation being that he must respect the personal rights of members, and the courtesies of the House, and unless he violates these there is no offense; hence this resolution ought not to be adopted.

Gentlemen have exercised the right here complained of from time immemorial, and as a precedent, which I think the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] will hold to be perfectly good, I call attention to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Forty-eighth Congress, first session, page 264 of the Appendix, where Mr. Brewer, of New Jersey, printed as his speech upon the tariff a chapter from Mr. Blaine's Twenty Years in Congress, giving 36 pages of that book, covering over nine solid pages of the RECORD, this quotation constituting his entire speech. That book was copyrighted also, and the case is exactly in point. The same objection could have been raised to it, but the RECORD does not show that the gentleman from Michigan or any one else objected. If precedent were needed in aid of the present order of the House this would be justification for my colleague from Kentucky [Mr. STONE] and other members.

Mr. BURROWS. I have only this to say in reply, that the more instances of that kind cited, the more appearances of abuse, and the greater becomes the necessity for its correction. I demand the previous question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask the gentleman to withdraw the demand for the previous question until I can make a statement.

Mr. BURROWS. I withdraw for the present the demand for the previous question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this is not a matter that should go to the Committee on Printing. This is a matter that affects the rules of this House; and the question is whether the rules have been complied with or not by members in publishing speeches which they have not uttered on the floor. The rules of the House give members that right. Now, the question is whether or no the spirit of that rule has been violated. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I insist that if there is to be any reference of this question, certainly it must be to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman cite any rule of the House which applies to it?

Mr. RICHARDSON. There is no written rule on the subject. It is done under general leave of the House; and I submit that while it is not in the rule in words, it has been done under a custom of this House from time immemorial; and being the custom of long standing the Chair will well understand that it practically amounts to a rule, and has all the force and effect of a written rule.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will my colleague allow me a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is it not a fact that within the last month this same question came up in connection with the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER], and was not the question whether he had violated the proprieties and rules of the House submitted to the Committee on Printing; and has not that committee now a report pending in this House?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman need not ask that question; he made the motion himself in the case referred to by him, and knows the facts to be as he has indicated by his question.

Mr. McMILLIN. But I wanted to stir up my colleague's recollection.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I know that that resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing, but if that was improper, two wrongs would not make a right. I am clearly convinced that the question in this case is whether the rules have been violated, and that the Committee on Rules should pass upon the question.

Mr. McMILLIN. Was not the question in the case of the gentleman from Massachusetts whether the rules had not been violated?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir; and that matter possibly should have been referred to the Committee on Rules; still the reference to the Committee on Printing would give that committee jurisdiction of the matter. A question of violating the rules of the House should go ordinarily to the Committee on Rules and not be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Will my colleague allow me a few minutes in which to make a statement?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield to my colleague, as he has printed an extract from Mr. George's book.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a brief statement regarding my connection with printing the matter under controversy. I was not in the Hall when the gentleman from Michigan raised this little squall of wind. I am one of those, however, who did publish some of the chapters from the very able work of Mr. Henry George. By reference to the RECORD it will be seen that I did not publish the matter as emanating from my pen, but I stated that as a contribution, and a very good one, to the debate on the free-wool bill, I would print some observations on the theory of protection from one of the deepest thinkers and ablest writers of the day. I considered the publication entirely germane to the tariff debate then going on in the House, and thought that the seed thus sown might enter the minds of some, who otherwise would never see or read the work of Mr. George, and bring forth good fruit. What has already transpired proves the truth of my surmise. Evidently the gentleman from Michigan, and others, have been reading the good doctrine, which is sound Democracy. When I printed the chapters from Mr. George's book I violated no rule of the House; on the contrary I followed a precedent which has prevailed in this House for almost a century. It certainly has been the practice prevailing during the five years I have been a member of this body. If there has been no specific rule permitting, there has been at least a custom, hoary with age, and therefore amounting to a rule of the House, that a gentleman may publish in this way whatever he sees fit as his contribution to the debate when general leave to print has been allowed.

The difference, as some gentleman has asked that question, between the publication of these chapters from the pen of an eminent author, and the remarks injected some days ago into the RECORD by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] ought to be apparent to everyone upon a moment's reflection. These chapters do not contain anything personal to any member of the House, but are devoted entirely to a discussion of economic questions. The remarks to which objections were raised by the gentleman [Mr. WILLIAMS] on the occasion just referred to, and which were printed in the RECORD by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER], were intensely and offensively personal. They were not delivered on the floor in the presence of those who were criticized, and who therefore had been afforded no opportunity to reply. There is no parallel and can be none between the cases whatever; none in the world.

Mr. WALKER came down the aisle.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Now, Mr. Speaker, if I have stirred up the gentleman from Worcester I am very sorry, but it is not my fault. I do not know who threw the stone which has caused all this sudden commotion—I presume it was the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS]; but at all events it seems to have struck the gentleman from Worcester—as his colleague called him—

Mr. WALKER. Oh, pshaw! [Laughter.]

Mr. WASHINGTON. The only question, it seems to me, involved in the point at issue is, when general leave to print has been granted, how much or how long a quotation from a book, pamphlet, speech, or poem is a member allowed to insert in the RECORD as a part of his remarks? If he could get the floor he could consume his whole time in reading from any publication bearing on the subject of debate, and obviously no man could object, for no rule prescribes that the speeches, whether read or spoken by members on this floor, shall be their own original productions. Were this so, I fear the RECORD would be much reduced in size. The House has increased in membership so enormously, owing to the immense growth of the population of the Union, that it would be impossible for all who desired to do so to speak on any subject of general interest to the whole country like the reform of the tariff. Therefore, the House has been compelled to resort to the practice of allowing such members as are unable to get time to speak on the floor, to print their remarks in the official RECORD of the House, and thus present them not only to the notice of the House but to the country, and, above all, to their constituents, to whom the RECORD, or at least that part of it containing the gentleman's remarks, may be sent through the mails free of postage.

Were it not for this liberty to print many a constituency would have no voice and never be heard on this floor on many important measures. Recognition by the Speaker or by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole and division of time allowed to a committee for debate on a bill necessarily is influenced to a great extent by personal friendship and favoritism. All can not get time or recognition. It is human and natural that favors should go to friends, and this condition, known by all to exist, does not reflect improperly or injuriously on anybody. The only thing to be guarded against in printing is to carefully avoid personalities and unparliamentary language. I am quite sure that these chapters from Henry George's book which have been printed are far more readable and of infinitely greater value to those who will read them than great numbers of reports and books from Departments and from officials which will be printed at the expense of the Government and mailed free to all parts of the country. The only expense to the people attending the printing of these chapters will be the cost of that much of the space of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Should they be all gathered together afterwards and republished in pamphlet form, the expense will be borne entirely by those persons who may wish to distribute the book as a valuable document. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think, as the House is just as competent to judge of this matter and to act on it as any committee of the House, the right and proper thing to do is to lay the motion of the gentleman from Michigan on the table.

Mr. BURROWS. I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] is recognized, as he only yielded to his colleague [Mr. WASHINGTON].

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yielded to my colleague to make some remarks as he had been referred to, and I thought it proper that he should have an opportunity to make a statement. Now, in conclusion, all I desire to say, is to repeat what I have said, and that is that this question is whether the rules of this House have been violated; and it seems to me that there is no sort of question that the inquiry should be made by the Committee on Rules.

My colleague [Mr. McMILLIN] calls attention to the fact that on a former occasion there had been a reference of the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] to the Committee on Printing. I think, as I have stated, Mr. Speaker, that a reference to the Committee on Printing would give that committee jurisdiction of this question, but it is not necessary for me to controvert that proposition in connection with the motion which I desire to submit. The reference of the question to the Committee on Printing would clothe that committee with jurisdiction to investigate and report, but if that is not true, then it would be an improper reference; and the fact that such a reference was made in a previous case would not justify the House now in making another improper reference.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman yield me two or three minutes?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this is a matter that ought to go to some committee. The suggestion that it should be tabled is entirely incorrect. There may have been some improper publications in the RECORD. That may be so without implying any reflection upon any gentleman who has made them. The question of what a gentleman shall publish under a leave to print, is a question resting primarily in his own discretion, but afterwards the House can review his action. The first instance that I remember of a question of this kind arising was many years ago when Gen. Garfield was a member of the House, and some gentleman, a member of his own party, saw fit to publish in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD quite an extensive poem—

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Downey of Wyoming.

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, that is the case. In that case the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Garfield, of course with no partisan purpose in view, but simply with a desire that there should not be an abuse of the RECORD, raised in the House the question of the propriety of the publication, and a resolution was passed striking the poem from the RECORD. Now, we are all liable, without reference to which side of the House we may belong to, to print excessively at any time, and it seems to me that when these abuses occur a reference of the question to a committee which shall consider and make a report upon the subject is the best corrective we can have. It may serve the purpose to-day, and when, again in a year or two, a similar question may arise, a recurrence to that report and a criticism of the abuse will be found to be the best way of regulating the matter.

It seems to me that this House can do no better, and that the individual member of the House can do no better with his associates here, than to dispose of this question by referring it to some committee where there shall be no wrangling or controversy, but simply a calm inquiry as to what is or what is not proper to be printed under the leave granted by the House. I trust, therefore, that we shall not leave this matter unsettled by an unceremonious tabling of the pending motion, but will dispose of it as I have suggested.

Now, as to the question whether the matter should go to the Committee on Printing or to the Committee on Rules, I am not clear as to the proper course.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BLOUNT. Directly. I am quite willing, Mr. Speaker, on the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Printing, that this question shall be referred to the Committee on Rules. That committee is composed of experienced and able gentlemen, whose opinion would have great weight with this House, and would perhaps determine very much in the minds of us all how far we should go hereafter in the matter of printing extracts in the RECORD under a leave to print.

Mr. BLAND. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Georgia to one point in connection with the case to which he refers, the case in which a poem was printed in the RECORD. I remember that incident very well, and I wish to ask the gentleman whether there is not a clear distinction between that case and this, because, in that case the matter published in the RECORD was an original poem, having no relation whatever to the subject under debate, whereas this matter does relate to the subject under debate. In that case the member simply took the opportunity to print something of his own, a poem, that had no relation at all to the business of the House, but this case is entirely different.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, my answer to the gentleman from Missouri is, that the committee to whom this question shall be referred will consider the point which my friend addresses to me in the form of a question.

Mr. CATE. That is right.

Mr. BLOUNT. The committee will consider that and every other question relating to the subject, and I trust that this House will not hesitate to refer the matter to a committee, and let them investigate and report.

Mr. BURROWS. And, if my friend will allow me a suggestion, in the case referred to by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] the attention of the House was called to the matter and it was referred to a committee on motion of Mr. Garfield.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Can the gentleman state to what committee that was referred?

Mr. BURROWS. The Committee on Rules.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There, Mr. Speaker, is a precedent, a case in which the matter was referred to the Committee on Rules. Gentlemen will remember that in the last Congress, when it was charged that there had been a violation of the Rules of this House by the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Kennedy, by printing in the RECORD an attack upon a Senator, the question was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that committee made a report, upon which the remarks were excluded from the RECORD. At this session, when a question arose as to the abuse of the leave to print, the matter was referred to the Committee on Printing and they acted upon it.

It seems to me, if these other references were improper, now is the time to return to a proper course and make this reference to the Committee on Rules, which has entire jurisdiction of all matters connected with the rules and their violation. I therefore move to amend the pending motion by striking out "the Committee on Printing" and inserting "the Committee on Rules."

Mr. FITHIAN addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman from Illinois asks me to yield to him for a moment, and I will do so.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FITHIAN] will proceed.

Mr. FITHIAN. Now, the motion of the gentleman from Michigan is to strike out the parts of the RECORD relating to the remarks of myself, of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOHNSON], the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BOWMAN], and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STONE].

Mr. BURROWS. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. FITHIAN. If the gentleman wanted to be fair—

Mr. BURROWS. I wish to say that the gentleman is mistaken as to my motion; I made no such motion.

Mr. FITHIAN. The gentleman's motion, as I understand, does not include the printed speech or letter of Mr. Horr, which has been published as the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER].

Mr. BURROWS. It does not.

Mr. FITHIAN. Then, as I was going to say, if the gentleman from Michigan wanted to be fair, why did he not cover by his motion all these publications in the RECORD, all being subject to the same objection? General leave has been granted—

Mr. BURROWS. Does not the gentleman see a difference between the two cases?

Mr. FITHIAN. Leave has been granted to members of the House to print remarks on this subject.

Now, Mr. Speaker, under the permission of the House, I printed in the RECORD this matter from the book of Henry George upon the subject of the tariff.

I have no excuses to offer, no apologies to make, and if I have committed any offense I am glad of it. If the floor had been yielded to me I could have read from the book and had inserted what I read beyond question. Not having an opportunity to get the floor, under the general leave to print I had the right to print what I would have had the right to have read if I had been given the floor.

And it seems to me it should make no difference to the gentleman from Michigan whether I printed the remarks or writings of some other gentleman than myself or whether the words printed came from my own mouth. Perhaps the matter published was better—in fact, it was better than anything I could say upon the subject, and, in my judgment, better than anything that the gentleman from Michigan could say upon the subject of the tariff. It at least suited me better than anything he could say.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the motion of the gentleman from Michigan and all amendments thereto be laid on the table, and on that I demand the previous question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I did not yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FITHIAN] for the purpose of making a motion, but simply that he might submit remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] has stated that he yielded to the gentleman from Illinois that he might make remarks, and not for the purpose of making a motion.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That was my understanding.

Mr. FITHIAN. As the Speaker will remember, I had made a motion to lay on the table the motion of the gentleman from Michigan and the pending amendments—

Mr. BURROWS. But the gentleman had not the floor for that purpose.

Mr. FITHIAN. I did have the floor at that time for that purpose; and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GOODNIGHT] asked that I withdraw the motion in order to permit him to offer a few remarks. I did withdraw the motion for that purpose. After the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GOODNIGHT] was through, then, Mr. Speaker, I was entitled to the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state—

Mr. FITHIAN. As I understand, the time which the gentleman from Tennessee supposes he has been yielding was time which belonged to me.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that no gentleman can withdraw a motion for any particular purpose; he may have a particular purpose in his mind, but if the motion is withdrawn it is withdrawn for all purposes.

Mr. FITHIAN. All I ask is that I may be permitted to be recognized to make that motion at the proper time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has the floor at present.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] for a few minutes.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that it occurs to me that the motion made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] that this resolution, whatever form it may take, should properly go to the Committee on Rules, is a very commendable one. If there be any precedent which has been adopted at this session of Congress which would make a reference to the Committee on Printing proper, as has been referred to in the case of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER], it arose in that case, as I understand it, because there was a question involved as to whether or not there were objectionable personalities in the speech of the gentleman from Massachusetts; and so that case was properly referred, perhaps, to the Committee on Printing.

But this subject, I submit, ought to go to the Committee on Rules. There has been a very large license in former Congresses, and a very large license in this Congress, in printing matters which have not been uttered on the floor. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Committee on Rules, whatever action they may take on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], will at least be moved to consider this question for their future action, and that hereafter the RECORD of the House shall contain only such proceedings as actually take place in the House. That ought to be the function and office of the RECORD. Like the journal of a court, it should contain a record of the proceedings that transpire here, nothing more and nothing less.

The press of the country, in reporting the proceedings of this House from the galleries, report nothing except what transpires here, and the official record of the proceedings of the Congress of the United States ought to be confined to what is actually done and spoken in the House.

I have no reference now to the action which has been taken by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FITHIAN] and by the other gentlemen who are alluded to, because that license has gone on growing from the time when the poem was published which has been referred to, and which I had the pleasure, I believe, of reading in the RECORD the next morning. There are numerous other instances in which the RECORD of Congress has been used for the transmission to the people of other things than what actually transpired. The object of keeping the RECORD is to keep a record of what Congress has done in the way of motions, speeches, and votes, and that is its function and nothing else. I hope, therefore, whatever decision the Committee on Rules come to in this matter, that they will bring before the House a proposition to confine the RECORD to what it should legitimately contain.

Mr. FITHIAN. Ought not they to do away with the general leave to print?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I think so.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOHNSON], because if anyone is guilty he is, he being one of the parties who published the extracts from the works of Mr. George.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I am one of the guilty persons here, and I am proud of it. [Laughter.] Through the courtesy of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY] I had half an hour in which to speak on the wool bill. I consumed nearly all of my time. I spoke in defense of the bill putting wool on the free list, and at that time made an attack on the protective tariff. I intend to send that speech to my constituents, and I want to send them at the same time the best thing I can get in opposition to all protective tariffs; and as I am sure nothing has ever been written more convincing than the five chapters, I introduced them; I knew it was well written, and calculated to make Democratic votes. For that reason I put it in.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. At the public expense.

Mr. HATCH. You need not apologize any further. [Laughter.] If it is to make Democratic votes it is a good thing, and we support you.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. We see in the RECORD every day great tables occupying whole pages of the RECORD, that cost five times as much to set up as the plain printing that was required by these chapters inserted there. These tables contain statistics that are not read, and that nobody believes if they do read them; and I think when I find a book that is the ablest exposition of the fallacies of protection, that I have a right to put it into the RECORD and send it to my constituents; if the Republicans do not like it, it is because it hurts.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield one minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS].

Mr. CUMMINGS. Before a vote is taken I want to call the attention of the House to one fact. Debate upon the tariff bill was limited. Members who desired to speak had no opportunity to do so. If they had had the opportunity and had read this printed matter in their remarks no man would have questioned its right to go into the RECORD. Now, after giving them leave to print, do you mean to rob them of any privilege they would have had if they had taken the floor? I think not. To save time in debate the House granted them leave to print, and that leave carried with it all the privileges that they would have had if they had taken the floor. They are entitled to all the rights of those who spoke in the open House; and after the bargain is made, under which they yielded the floor to others without protest, you have no right to curtail their privileges.

Mr. RICHARDSON. How much time is there now remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has thirteen minutes of his hour remaining.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STONE].

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I only desire to say that it seems to me this matter has raised a little bad feeling in the House. So far as I am concerned, I want to say a motion to strike out, or to refer to a committee, whatever committee the House may decide, these excerpts from a book, as stated by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] has no sort of effect on me to make me feel ill towards anybody. I have heard no statement or reason from the gentleman from Michigan, or anybody advocating the reference of this matter to a committee, why it should be done. I have heard no charge that a rule of the House was violated. The gentleman from Michigan made the point of order that a rule of the House had been violated, and by his own confession said that no rule had been violated, because he withdrew that point of order. He confesses that he is convinced that the rules have not been violated.

I want to say, sir, that I am as much opposed as any man can be to making the RECORD a receptacle for all sorts of publications from books, newspapers, and private letters, and all sorts of things; but, as I said awhile ago, if one member of this House is to be granted that privilege, I do not see why another should not be.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I see no difference between quoting a whole chapter from a book and quoting it in paragraphs. It is said that by quoting paragraphs from the Bible you can prove anything. In this instance other gentlemen and myself have been charged with putting in whole chapters. We did that for the benefit of gentlemen on the other side [laughter], in order that they might get the whole thing, and that they might see there was foundation for the argument, and in order that they might be enlightened. We did not take extracts, but whole chapters. We have given them the whole dose, and it seems it has hurt.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not care whether this matter is referred to a committee or not. All that I do insist is that if it is to be referred to a committee, and should come back here with a recommendation that a portion of the RECORD be stricken out, that every member of this House who is disposed to vote for striking them out will be willing to strike out every other quotation made from every book or paper that has been printed in the RECORD in the present session of Congress.

It seems, Mr. Speaker, that the matter inserted by me has struck home in the vitals of the protective heresy, and that it proves to be more than the leaders of the other side can stand quietly. It seems they are unwilling to have the truth in clear and forcible form go to the people, hence this effort to suppress it.

I only want to be dealt with as other members are. I have no excuse to offer, nobody's pardon to ask, and no apologies to make. I have not printed these extracts in the RECORD as my speech. I have a tariff speech already prepared, and I shall endeavor to secure recognition on one of the bills yet to be acted upon, when I will put in some additional remarks, which, I think, will show to the agriculturists of this country that the tariff policy advocated by the Republican party is grinding the agriculturists into the ground, and building up the protecting interests and classes of the country. That is what I propose to show in the remarks which I expect to make hereafter; and you need not strike out this article, because I have got a speech prepared, and I will put that article in that speech, if necessary, to get it in the RECORD. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I do not see what the Committee on Rules, or any other committee of the House have to do with this matter. This is a question for the House. The House has given leave to print, and if there is anything wrong about it, it rests with the House itself. The matter printed can not be objected to on the ground that it is personal to any member, or on the ground that some gentleman has quoted in his speech something of his own, like the poem referred to, and had it printed in the RECORD at public expense to save the private expense of printing. It is not complained that this matter is not pertinent to the matter under discussion, for it is directly upon the point before the House.

The only way to stop printing speeches is for the House to refuse leave to print. But after the House has given leave to print a speech, or print matter on a subject under debate, the House has no more right to strike it from the RECORD than it has to strike out remarks made by a gentleman himself. The gentleman could get the floor; but, probably relying upon the good faith of the House in giving leave to print, he does not undertake to do so; and now, after giving him leave to print remarks, to eliminate them from the RECORD is to stultify the House itself and do an injustice to the member. If there is anything printed that is shown to be derogatory to the dignity of the House, or to any member of the House, and not pertinent to the subject of debate, or personal to any member, that is another question. I undertake to say that there is scarcely a speech made here by a gentleman of an hour's duration who does not ask leave to print certain matters connected with the subject; and that leave is never refused him, because in this House we have only one hour to debate any subject, while in the other end of the Capitol they may take a day or a week if necessary. Members here are confined to one hour, and in one hour it is impossible to get all matters bearing upon any subject into the RECORD unless we have leave to print. I have seen reports and extracts from newspapers and all sorts of documents bearing upon the subject under debate printed in the RECORD under leave to print, and never before have I heard any objection made to it, where the matter printed was pertinent to the debate and not personal to members. If the House desire to stop printing these matters in the RECORD they must do it by refusing to give leave to print, and not undertake first to give members leave to print because they may be unable to obtain a hearing upon the floor, and afterwards strike out the matter printed under the leave thus given.

Such action would be a stultification of the House and an injustice to the members concerned, and the only remedy, as I have already said, is to refuse leave to print. If you adopt that rule, then members can take their chance of getting the floor and delivering their remarks in the House. The motion of the gentleman from Michigan and all the amendments ought to be tabled, and if there is anything wrong in this matter it ought to be remedied by objecting to leave to print hereafter.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask for a division.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, only a word more. I think this debate has demonstrated the fact that it is in order under the rules for gentlemen to have printed the remarks which they have had printed. It may be asserted that it is in violation of the spirit of the rule. I do not think anyone can go any further than to say it violates the spirit of the rule. But, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me if it is made to appear that there should be some further definition of the right of members under the leave to print, then the subject should go to some committee of the House in order that mature consideration of the question may be had.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] has moved to refer this question to the Committee on Printing. I thought and still think that it should go to the Committee on Rules, and for that reason I made the motion to strike out the Committee on Printing and insert the Committee on Rules. I think it should go to that committee in order that we may have clearly defined what is meant by leave to print. If "the leave" be general, as has been regarded heretofore, as I have understood the rule, these gentlemen have not violated it. If a limitation in some way is desired, as if when a member wishes to print other matter than his own speech, such limitation can be made, but it does not now exist.

At all events, whatever restrictions, if any, are required, it seems to me that they should be made on the report of a committee of this House. For that reason I have made my motion, and I am now content to leave the matter to the House to take such action as in their wisdom they think proper.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question on my motion.

Mr. FITHIAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the motion of the gentleman from Michigan, and all the amendments be laid on the table.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. FITHIAN, and the Speaker declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 96, noes 70.

Mr. BURROWS. We will have the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 45 members voting in favor thereof.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 121, nays 71, not voting 136; as follows:

 Mr. BELTZHOVER with Mr. FLICK.
 Mr. STAHLNECKER with Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois.
 Mr. KRIBBS with Mr. HUFF.
 Mr. MCRAE with Mr. WEVER.
 Mr. RUSK with Mr. SWEET.
 Mr. ARNOLD with Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois.
 Mr. BROWN with Mr. WRIGHT, on this vote.
 Mr. SNODGRASS with Mr. HOUK of Tennessee, until April 21, inclusive.

Mr. ENGLISH with Mr. BERGEN, for Wednesday and Thursday.

Mr. HOAR with Mr. BROSIUS, for one week.
 Mr. NORTON with Mr. POWERS, for two weeks, from the 12th instant.

Mr. JONES with Mr. HERMANN, for one week, from the 11th instant.

Mr. DINGLEY (who had voted in the negative). Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw my vote, as I am paired.

Mr. DOLLIVER (who had also voted in the negative). I desire also to withdraw my vote.

Mr. PAYNE (who had voted in the negative). I withdraw my vote.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON]. If he were present I do not know how he would vote; but I should certainly vote "no."

Mr. BOWERS. I am paired on political questions with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARTER]; but I have taken the liberty of voting on this question.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HERBERT. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. Unless the regular order be dispensed with, the call of committees for reports is now in order.

Mr. HERBERT. I move to dispense with that order.

Mr. HATCH. I hope that reports may be presented either under the regular call or by unanimous consent. They could probably be disposed of more quickly by means of the call than otherwise. I do not think they will occupy more than a few minutes.

Mr. HERBERT. I do not insist on my motion to dispense with the call.

The SPEAKER proceeded to call the committees for reports.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

Mr. HATCH (when the Committee on Agriculture was called). Mr. Speaker, there was referred to the Committee on Agriculture a bill (H. R. 7514) supplementary to the agricultural college act of August 13, 1890, and to aid colleges or institutions for the training of colored youth, established or promoted by national funds, but not benefited by the act cited.

I ask that the Committee on Agriculture be discharged from the further consideration of this bill, and that it be referred to the Committee on Education. I desire to state that the bill is a proposed amendment, not to the act approved March 2, 1887, known as the experimental station act, but the act known as the Morrill education bill, which became a law August 30, 1890. That was a Senate bill; and when it came to the House was referred to the Committee on Education, and on their report was passed by the House. This bill properly belongs to that committee.

There being no objection, the Committee on Agriculture was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it was referred to the Committee on Education.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I am also instructed by the Committee on Agriculture to report back the bill (H. R. 5073) to provide for the relief of the agricultural population of the United States, and to promote and encourage agriculture, and ask that the Committee on Agriculture be discharged from its further consideration, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, where it properly belongs.

This bill I will say was evidently sent to that committee without an examination, perhaps, of the bill, but simply from the title. Upon an examination of the bill we find that it is a bill to provide for what is known as the land loan, and all of the provisions of the act in question refer to the Secretary of the Treasury and relate to the finances of the country. The Committee on Agriculture can not find any provision of the rule by which they can assume jurisdiction, but report it back and ask that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. McMILLIN. What is the nature of the bill?

Mr. HATCH. I have just stated. It is what is known as the 2 per cent land-loan bill. All its provisions relate to the loaning of money on interest and relate to the financial system of the country.

The SPEAKER. The change of reference will be made as indicated by the gentleman from Missouri.

MILITARY BOARD OF REVIEW.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. 7172) to authorize the Secretary of War to appoint a board of review in certain cases; which was referred to the House Calendar.

MILITARY RESERVATIONS, EASTPORT, ME.

On motion of Mr. WHEELER of Alabama, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7924) for the disposal of abandoned and useless military reservations at Eastport, Me., and the same was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

DES MOINES RIVER LANDS, IOWA.

Mr. SEERLEY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported as a substitute for the bill (H. R. 4327) a bill (H. R. 8151) to reimburse the Des Moines River settlers, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHIPPEWA INDIAN LANDS, LAKE SUPERIOR.

Mr. LYNCH, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. 8098) to authorize the sale of timber on certain lands referred for the use of the Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior in the State of Wisconsin, to regulate the purchase of timber from certain allottees on certain Chippewa Indian reservations in Wisconsin and Minnesota, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

BOUNDARIES OF UNCOMPAHGRE RESERVATION.

Mr. BRAWLEY, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. 69) to change the boundary of the Uncompahgre Reservation; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CONSTRUCTION OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. TARSNEY, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported as a substitute for the bill H. R. 261 a bill (H. R. 8152) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to obtain plans and specifications for public buildings to be erected under the supervision of the Treasury Department and providing for local supervision of the construction of the same; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The bill (H. R. 261) was ordered to be laid on the table.

REGULATION OF CERTAIN SUITS.

Mr. STOCKDALE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported as a substitute for the bill H. R. 583 a bill H. R. 8153 providing when plaintiff may sue as a poor person, and when counsel may be assigned by the court; which was referred to the House Calendar.

ALLEGED VIOLATION OF CIVIL SERVICE LAW, BALTIMORE POST-OFFICE.

Mr. HERBERT. I now renew my motion.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama has a motion pending.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman will yield for this, I understand.

Mr. HERBERT. Let it be read for information.

The resolution was read at length.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask for the immediate consideration of that resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to its immediate consideration?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois and Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey objected.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then I ask to have it referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I object to that.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be referred, under the rule, to that committee.

Mr. HERBERT. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

JAMES M. TROTTER.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer a bill from the Committee on the District of Columbia to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. That call is completed, and it now requires unanimous consent.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent to have a bill referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I was not in the Hall when the Committee on the District of Columbia was called. It is the bill (H. R. 5014) to reimburse James M. Trotter, late recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5014) to reimburse James M. Trotter, late recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Committee on the District of Columbia will be discharged from the further consideration of this bill and it will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DINGLEY. One moment. Is that in the nature of a claim?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know. He is acting on the recommendation of the committee.

Mr. DINGLEY. If it is a claim, it should go to the Committee on Claims.

The SPEAKER (after examining the bill). This is a claim against the Government, and ought to go to the Committee on Claims undoubtedly. It will be referred to the Committee on Claims.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

And then, on motion of Mr. HERBERT, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the naval appropriation bill, with Mr. SHIVELY in the chair.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, in the opening of this debate I shall only state the position occupied by the majority of the committee. I will then reserve my time within which to conclude what I have to say. It is only justice to the gentlemen who are to come after me that they should know the grounds on which we justify the bill.

In the first place, I desire to state for myself personally that I am a sincere friend of the Navy. I take great pride in the connection I have heretofore had with it. Of the thirty-nine ships, big and little, building and built, twenty-four have been authorized upon bills reported by myself.

Notwithstanding this fact, the report which I had the honor to make to this House on this bill has been seriously criticised by a number of newspapers, and in one instance (and one only, so far as I know) harshly and unkindly, the ground being taken that we were cutting down the appropriations for the new Navy and impeding its progress for political purposes. I very much desire to increase the Navy further. I do not believe we ought to stop with the the thirty-nine ships now authorized. To do so would, I think, be a serious blunder, and I have regretted very much that I did not feel myself justified in recommending the authorization of more than one ship at this time.

The reasons which influenced the committee to confine the bill to one new ship are briefly these: We believe that he who is a judicious friend of the Navy will not insist upon such large appropriations as will leave us open to the charge of extravagance. The people of the whole country now look with favor upon this great work of building up a modern navy in which we are engaged and they will continue to do so just as long as we keep within the bounds of conservatism. We believe we ought to proceed in a regular, methodical manner, appropriating about the same sum each year, not exceeding where it can be avoided, about ten millions of dollars annually, for the increase of the Navy, and that this sum, voted annually for some seven or eight years to come, will give us a sufficient Navy. It appears that there are twenty-four ships which have been authorized and are not yet completed.

Twelve of these are armored vessels. Many of them have been waiting for years for their armor. To armor them all will require over 16,000 tons. Armor contracts have been made, the first one in June, 1887, and the next in 1890, under which it was supposed the armor would have been furnished long ago to complete nearly all these ships; but as yet, up to the first of the present month, not 300 tons have been furnished. We believe that if we should authorize more than one armored vessel now, the great probabilities would be that the armor would not be ready when the ship was ready to receive it.

Mr. McMILLIN. If it will not interrupt my friend, will he state right there what it will cost to finish the vessels and put them afloat, and arm those that are now under process of construction?

Mr. HERBERT. I was just about to state that. It is estimated by those who insist upon more than one vessel at this time that we shall have the armor furnished, and that we shall have completed all these twenty-four ships now authorized by June 30, 1894. If that be so, then the appropriations for the year after this one covered by this bill, the appropriations for the years 1893-'94, required to complete and equip all these ships, will amount to largely over $13,000,000. For myself I do not believe that the armor will be ready, and that these ships will be completed, all of them, by the 1st of July, 1894.

I wish I could believe so. I shall be perfectly willing and assure the Naval Committee will be willing to recommend, at the next session, all the money necessary to complete, arm, and equip these ships, if it shall then appear from the progress made that they can be completed within the fiscal year 1893-'94, whatever the sum may be, and it is certain that it will be largely over $10,000,000. If it shall turn out next session that such appropriation is needed, then we might authorize in that same bill at least four or five battle ships, the work on which would be fairly begun just as the present programme is completed. There would be no interval in the work, no interval in the appropriations. The armor of the ships would be authorized, the contracts made for laying them down, and also for the armor at the same time, and while these ships were being made fit for the armor, the armor could be made ready for them.

Mr. SAYERS. Does the gentleman believe it is wise to construct these ships rapidly?

Mr. HERBERT. I should say that ten millions a year would not be constructing them too rapidly. Of course, there is some advantage in having your programme extend over a number of years. If you should lay down all your Navy at once and should anywhere make a mistake, that mistake would run through all the ships of that type. So, also, shipbuilders and the ship-designers are all the time acquiring experience, and by reason of that experience they are year after year building better ships. Now, the navy I would have would be the best navy in the world—not the largest. We do not need, and I do not think our people expect us, to build, an expensive navy like that of England or of France. If we should build, say, nine more battle ships and their accessories, I should say we might then stop for a time at least. Appropriating at the rate we do in this bill this will only require about seven more years. Progress at that rate ought to be satisfactory.

The appropriations in this bill for increase of the Navy amount to $9,400,000. To that sum must be added seven or eight millions surplus coming over from previous years, and so, notwithstanding we have so many ships and guns under way, the Department has, with what this bill carries, every dollar it can spend the coming year.

Mr. SAYERS. If the gentleman is prepared to give the House an opinion, I would like to know if he has made an estimate as to whether, on the ships already authorized being completed, there would be a necessity for increasing the force of the Navy?

Mr. HERBERT. I think there would.

Mr. SAYERS. To what extent?

Mr. HERBERT. I think if we go on for seven or eight years at the rate we are now going we should have of first-class battle ships—

Mr. SAYERS. I am speaking of the personnel of the Navy.

Mr. HERBERT. So far as the personnel is concerned we have enough line officers.

Mr. SAYERS. I refer to the men and the sailors.

Mr. HERBERT. I will endeavor to answer the whole question as to personnel. So far as the line officers are concerned, we shall have enough without any increase for years to come. As for engineers, I think we ought to have some increase now, and we need at present about 1,500 more men, or rather, about 750 apprentices and 750 more men, making altogether an increase of 1,500.

Mr. SAYERS. Then I understand the gentleman to say that with an increase in the number of ships there would be no necessity for an increase in the number of men greater than 1,500?

Mr. HERBERT. Well, I think probably that 1,500 would not be enough six years from now. At that time there would be necessity for 1,500 more, or possibly even more than that. I have never made or seen any estimate as to that.

Now, how much time have I used?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama has used ten minutes.

Mr. BUSHNELL. I would like to know how many more of these expensive battle ships, or expensive cruisers, were provided for the increase of the Navy by the naval appropriation bill in the last session of the Fifty-first Congress?

Mr. HERBERT. Only one ship; and that was not quite so expensive a ship as this. That was not an armored ship, but simply what is called a "pirate," a very fast unarmored cruiser.

I reserve the remainder of my time, and yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Texas, if he needs so much, and will reserve what he does not take.

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, availing myself of the kindness of the committee and the courtesy of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I propose to obtrude a few remarks that are not pertinent to the question now under discussion, but which I could not get an opportunity to present without taking advantage of the kindness of some Committee on Appropriations.

On the 3d day of March last, my colleague, Mr. SAYERS, asked unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a very lengthy letter from the Supervising Architect, giving a statement of the condition and status of every public building in the United States on the 31st day of December, 1891.

In connection with that statement he drew the conclusion that it would be useless, that it would be, in fact, wasteful for this Congress to appropriate any money for public buildings, because, according to his deduction from the statement furnished by the Supervising Architect, it would require four or five years to expend the money already appropriated and unexpended, namely, about $18,000,000 according to his statement. Satisfied that the conclusions which my colleague drew were not justified by the statements contained in the letter, I communicated with the Supervising Architect by wire and by personal interview, and requested from him an explanation of that letter, in order to ascertain, for the benefit of every member of this House and of the country, whether it was in fact right and proper for this Congress to adjourn without passing any public building bills.

The people of this country, Mr. Chairman, are opposed to wasteful prodigality, but they are in favor of a wise administration, so that every part of the country may be equally benefited with every other portion, and whenever the officers of this Government tell the members of this House and of the Senate that it is necessary for the proper administration of public affairs that a public building shall be erected in any part of this country, it is the duty of this Congress to pass a bill providing for that public building.

When my colleague requested unanimous consent for the insertion of this letter in the RECORD, I asked him what his object was. Of course I could not know. I am not a member of the Committee on Appropriations; I do not belong to any political syndicate in this House which may control or seek to control the actions of the majority. I could not know whether it were true or not that it was the intention of any gentlemen in this House; individually or collectively, to present to the people of this country the appearance of economy on the part of the Committee on Appropriations or on the part of the majority of this House by declining to pass any public building bills.

But, prompted, of course, by that curiosity which is common to us all, I was anxious to know just what the object of my colleague was. He had evidently gone to a great deal of trouble to ascertain the facts which were set forth in this letter, and I asked him what his object was? His reply, which is in the RECORD, was to the effect that he desired that every member of this House should vote intelligently. I propounded to him this inquiry: "Upon what? Upon public building bills?" And he answered "yes."

Now, why was it, Mr. Chairman, that my colleague, doubtless representing not only himself but others who may entertain kindred views, why was it that he took such a deep interest in this question?

I can well remember that a few years ago when he was endeavoring to pass a public building bill for San Antonio he did not propound any such inquiry to the Supervising Architect. [Laughter.] His curiosity was not so great then as it is now, and he succeeded in obtaining from both Houses of Congress an appropriation, the result of which was the erection of one of the finest public buildings in the State of Texas. [Laughter.] To satisfy myself that the conclusions which I drew were correct, I addressed a letter to the Supervising Architect the answer to which I will read to the committee:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SUPERVISING ARCHITECT,
Washington, D. C., March 31, 1892.

SIR: I have the honor of acknowledging the receipt of your letter and telegram of the 3d instant, referring to the statement made in the House of Representatives on the 2d instant, and requesting this office to inform you why the aggregate of the balances of the various appropriations for public buildings has not been expended, etc.

I inclose herewith a tabulated statement, which will give you the fullest information in regard to the subject.

Respectfully yours,

W. J. EDBROOKE,
Supervising Architect.

Hon. WILLIAM H. CRAIN,
House of Representatives.

I shall have printed as a part of my remarks the tabulated statement which was furnished me with this letter from the Supervising Architect, and I will read to this committee a résumé or summary of what that tabulated statement contains. There is quite a difference between the figures in this résumé and those which were contained in the letter printed in the RECORD by my colleague upon the occasion to which I have just referred, and the explanation of the Supervising Architect destroys entirely the conclusion at which my colleague had arrived in his analysis of the letter printed by him. And right here I desire to say (and in support of this statement I refer to page 4 of the report of the Supervising Architect) that out of the 392 public buildings in the United States, either constructed or in process of construction, 75 were provided for by the last Congress, about one-fifth of the entire number throughout this broad Union. This I suggest in response to an inquiry that was propounded to me a few days ago by a member of the Committee on Appropriations—

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman means, I suppose, buildings 75 in number, but not involving that proportion of expense.

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. Seventy-five in number.

Mr. DINGLEY. But those were comparatively inexpensive public buildings.

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. Oh, I am not making any point against your Congress at all. On the contrary, I am standing by them. [Laughter.] I think they did exactly right to pass bills for public buildings wherever they were needed. I have yet to hear the first word of complaint from any portion of this Union against any Congress since the war on the ground that they have provided properly and justly for public buildings that were required for the public service. There is not a town in the country that does not want to have a public building. They would all be anxious to have them, irrespective of the political belief of their respective inhabitants.

But it was suggested that the last Congress did not pass as many public building bills as former Congresses. My response to that is that the last Congress passed bills providing for 75 of the 392 public buildings which are either constructed or in process of construction in this country.

On the 1st day of March there were in process of construction or nearly completed 233 buildings, of which 98 had been completed, 3 had had no appropriations made for them, and 132 were in process of completion. The aggregate limit of cost provided in the various bills was, in round numbers, $50,000,000.

Mr. SAYERS. Do you refer simply to buildings authorized by the Fifty-first Congress?

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. That is up to the first of March, $50,000,000 in round figures. There had been appropriated $44,000,000 or $45,000,000 (the exact figures will appear in the summary which will be printed in connection with my remarks), leaving to be appropriated under the limit of cost about $8,000,000. The aggregate amount asked, on account of the limit of cost in the estimates of appropriations for 1892-'93, was $2,400,000. From this there is to be deducted for new work at marine hospitals, quarantine stations, etc., $534,000.

It may be suggested that these charges for hospitals, quarantine buildings, etc., are charged up against the Supervising Architect's Office, because they come through that office in the estimates to the Committee on Appropriations; but they are not really chargeable to the account of the Supervising Architect. After making the deduction referred to we have remaining as the aggregate amount asked on account of limit of cost, $1,875,000.

Then follow a number of statements which I will not weary the House by reading, but which any gentleman can read at his leisure in the RECORD; and finally we come down to this statement:

The aggregate amount shown in the foregoing summary as balance available of all specific appropriations March 1, 1893, or the aggregate amount against which contract liabilities have not yet been charged, $12,170,000—

As against $18,000,000 which my colleague stated had been appropriated and had not been expended. And as a member of the Committee on Appropriations he is cognizant of the fact that he ought to have included in his statement to this House not only the four or five million dollars that had been actually expended during the year, but the outstanding liabilities under contracts which authorized the expenditure of money.

Besides, the gentleman loses sight of the fact that before one dollar can be expended of any appropriation for a public building site—I mean in the preparation of drafts, plans, specifications, etc.—the site must have been acquired by the Government. This takes time. A man may not be willing to sell his property to the Government at the price which is offered; there may be individual real-estate dealers who compete with one another. The Secretary of the Treasury may deem it necessary to send a commission to investigate, in order to protect the rights of the Government, and to acquire a site for the least possible expenditure of money. All this takes time.

Suppose that the Government fails to secure a site by negotiation; then the law provides for the condemnation of a site. That requires the institution of condemnation proceedings. This takes time. And after the acquisition of the site has been provided for the United States district attorney is called upon to examine the title. His examination, with an abstract, is furnished to the Attorney-General, and the opinion of this officer must be had before a contract can be consummated for the purchase of a site. And all this takes time. Meanwhile the appropriation stands charged against the Supervising Architect's Office. It is available, but only available when under the law a site is provided for. And the payment of the money is a sine qua non condition—a condition precedent to the acquisition of the site.

Mr. SAYERS. Will my colleague allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. I will; but I trust I shall be allowed a little more time.

Mr. SAYERS. That is all right. The statement that I made and about which my colleague complains—

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. I desire it understood that I shall have unanimous consent to occupy in the conclusion of my speech as much time as my colleague may use.

Several MEMBERS. That is all right.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to his colleague?

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. With that understanding.

Mr. SAYERS. I will use but a minute. The statement of which my colleague complains is this: The table which was furnished by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury shows that on the 31st of December last there was unexpended $18,640,251.77, against which there were no outstanding liabilities.

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. I have so stated.

Mr. SAYERS. I understood my colleague to say that I did not include in that amount the outstanding contracts.

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. Yes, sir; that is exactly what the Supervising Architect states.

Mr. SAYERS. Well, then, he did not so state in this table. I was simply giving the figures which were furnished to me.

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. Certainly. I do not blame my colleague in the least. It was not his fault; but I am endeavoring to correct him now. He was influenced through no mistake of his, I am sure.

Mr. SAYERS. If there is a mistake, it was the Supervising Architect's.

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. Certainly; I agree with you. I say it was not your fault. I am only trying to convert you. You are not responsible for having made the mistake.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not agree that there is a mistake.

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. But you said it was a mistake of the Supervising Architect.

Mr. SAYERS. I said if there was a mistake it was his mistake.

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. Well, you now qualify it with an "if." Perhaps my colleague had in mind what the Lacedæmonian said to Pyrrhus when he was told if he did not do so and so his town would be destroyed, and his brief reply was, "If."

But, Mr. Chairman, to go on. After this site for the public building has been acquired the Supervising Architect is at liberty to go on and make preparations for his plans and specifications. Before one dollar can be expended on the building, according to these plans and specifications, they must have been submitted to a supervisory board, consisting of the Postmaster-General, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Interior. All of this takes time. Then there are advertisements for contracts, and besides this the language of the appropriation itself must be considered. It does not always appropriate the entire amount for the erection of a building, but sometimes the appropriation is made in dribbles, and the time is to be taken up waiting for them.

Now, on this subject the best authority in the Department is the statement of the Supervising Architect himself. He says—and I want to call the attention of my colleague particularly to this language, because it is responsive to his suggestions about the $18,000,000 in regard to which he has called attention—the Supervising Architect says:

The fact should be noted that between March 1, 1892, and the close of the present building season, many of the conditions precedent to further action in regard to the establishment of contract liabilities imposed by law and fact, as above indicated, will be removed by the vesting of title to properties for the sites in the United States, and the completion of the work of preparing detailed estimates, sketch plans, working drawings, specifications, etc., and therefore the work of constructing said buildings will be commenced and a large portion, if not all, of said $9,605,694.92—

Which he says is the amount that is left that is tied up by law, twelve millions, including this nine millions and odd hundred thousand dollars—will be actually covered by established contract liabilities before the close of the present calendar year.

And I desire to call my colleague's attention particularly to this language, because he says that before the close of the present calendar year every dollar to which you refer, as well as that to which he refers, will have been covered up by contract and existing liabilities. He says:

A large portion, if not all of said $9,605,694.92, will be actually covered by established contract liabilities before the close of the present calendar year in addition to a large portion, if not all, of said $2,564,927.35 which was available March 1, 1892, and will continue to be available for the purpose of contract liabilities which will be established in connection with the items of work embraced therein before the close of the present calendar year.

Mr. SAYERS. Will my colleague state whether the tables to which he refers show when these contracts are to be completed?

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. As soon as they are relieved from the condition in which they are placed by reason of the law that prohibits the expenditure of a dollar for the formation of a contract, or which will create a liability, until sites shall have been acquired and plans approved.

Mr. SAYERS. What I desire to know is, are there any dates fixed when the contracts will probably expire?

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. How expire? These $12,000,000 are tied up by law, because under the law as you know, not a dollar can be expended until the site is acquired and plans and specifications have been made and approved by the supervisory board.

Now, sir, the fact will be observed from this tabular statement that the aggregate of the amounts remaining available of the various appropriations made for the acquisition of sites and the construction of public buildings, that is, the amount remaining not debited with expenditures for the purchase or condemnation of properties for sites, incidental expenses in the procurement of sites, and contract liabilities for labor and materials in connection with the work of constructing the buildings, could not be used as the basis of any statement of a general or collective character as to the sufficiency or insufficiency of the aggregate of the balances of the appropriations for all public buildings for any definite period; also, that each building, and the condition of the specific appropriation made therefor, must of necessity be considered separately and upon its own merits for the following substantial reasons, based both upon fact and upon law.

To meet the requirements of various United States statutes, the procedure in regard to the acquisition of property for a site, the preparation of plans, detailed estimates of cost, specifications, working drawings for the building, and the supply of labor and materials in connection with the work of erecting the building, is as follows:

Proposals are invited by public advertisement for the sale to the United States of property suitable for the site.

After such proposals are received, an agent of the Department is sent to the city wherein the building is to be located to examine the properties offered or suitable for a site, and to submit his written report and recommendation in regard thereto.

If the Secretary of the Treasury for any reason deems further information necessary, a commission is appointed for the purpose of making an examination of all of the properties offered or deemed suitable for the site, and submitting their written report and recommendation to the Secretary.

After considering the proposals received, the agent's or commission's report and recommendation, the Secretary must select the property for the site, and make a contract for the acquisition of the property by purchase, or if for any reason he deems it necessary and in the interests of the public service, pursuant to acts of Congress approved March 3, 1883 (page 605, volume 22), and March 2, 1889 (page 941, volume 25, United States Statutes at Large), he must request the Attorney-General to take the necessary action in regard to the institution of proceedings in condemnation for the acquisition of title to the property for the purpose named.

In accordance with acts of Congress approved September 11, 1841 (page 355, United States Revised Statutes), March 3, 1875 (page 159, Supplement United States Revised Statutes), and February 27, 1877 (page 267, Supplement United States Revised Statutes), the Legislature of the State in which the city is located wherein the building is to be erected must, by legislative act, cede jurisdiction to the United States over the property in the city in which the building is located, and the Attorney-General must render his written opinion in regard to the validity of title to the property selected for the site, before any payment can be made of the purchase money for the property.

The same prohibition in regard to the expenditures of any moneys on account of an appropriation for the acquisition of a site and the erection thereon of a public building until after title to the property selected for the site shall have been acquired and actually vested in the United States, applies to the cases wherein satisfactory terms of sale for the property for the site can not be effected, and therefore in accordance with the requirements of acts of Congress approved March 3, 1883 (page 605, volume 22), and March 2, 1889 (page 941, volume 25, United States Statutes at Large), which authorize the Secretary in each case wherein, for any reason, he deems it necessary to acquire property for a site for a public building by condemnation, he must request the Attorney-General to take the action necessary for the acquisition of title to the desired property by the process of condemnation, and such condemnation proceedings must be terminated, the awards of damages ascertained, and the act of cession of jurisdiction over the property obtained before payment for the property can be made under the law.

In accordance with the prohibitory features of the statutes above cited in regard to making expenditures on account of an appropriation for a public building only after title to the property selected for the site shall have been actually vested in the United States and particularly the requirements of acts of Congress approved March 3, 1875 (page 159, Supplement United States Revised Statutes), it will be observed that no expenditure can be made for the preparation of sketch plans and detailed estimates of cost for a building until after title to the property for the site shall have been actually vested in the United States, and therefore it is only at that time that the sketch plans and detailed estimates are commenced, and thereafter, when the same shall have been prepared by the Supervising Architect, they must be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Postmaster-General, and the Secretary of the Interior, before the working drawings, specifications, etc., can be completed, and any expenditures in connection with the actual work of constructing the building can be made.

After all of such action, which has been shown to be controlled by law and fact, shall have been disposed of, and the working drawings and specifications are completed and ready, in accordance with the requirements of acts of Congress approved March 2, 1861, and June 22, 1875 (section 3709, United States Revised Statutes), proposals are invited by public advertisement (except in cases of public exigency) for the supply of all labor and materials for the performance of any branch of or the entire work needed in connection with the erection of the building.

After the proposals are received and considered, if the lowest responsible bidder is found to be reasonable in price and satisfactory in every other respect, he is generally awarded the contract, and is required to execute a formal contract and bond for the faithful performance of the work.

By referring to the various United States statutes bearing upon the subject of contracts and the establishment of contract liabilities, particularly acts of Congress approved June 25, 1868, (section 5503, United States Revised Statutes), and July 25, 1868, (section 3733, United States Revised Statutes), the fact will be observed that under the law the Secretary and all executive officers of the Government are specifically prohibited and enjoined from entering into and making any contract or contract liabilities in excess of the amount appropriated, irrespective of the limit of cost fixed by legislation for a public building.

The tabulated statement accompanying the Supervising Architect's letter will show the following:

In some cases Congress, while having fixed the limit of cost of the buildings, did not make appropriations for the acquisition of sites and the commencement of construction operations on the building.

While the Department in one of the cases has taken all necessary action in regard to the selection of property for the site, further action in regard to the preparation of plans and the commencement of construction operations are controlled by matters entirely out of its jurisdiction. The case above referred to is Buffalo, N. Y., no limit of cost having been prescribed for the building.

In the cases of Clarksville, Tenn., and Philadelphia (Pa.) mint, while Congress fixed the limit of cost of the sites and buildings, it did not make any appropriation for the acquisition of the sites and the commencement of work of constructing the buildings, nor has the limit of cost of the building at San Francisco, Cal., been fixed by Congress.

From this it will appear, Mr. Chairman, as I stated at the outset of my remarks that the conclusions which have been drawn by my colleague in the letter he submitted to the committee when it was engaged in the consideration of another appropriation bill, are not warranted. The Supervising Architect is charged in the aggregate with appropriations for all public buildings which are to be constructed. Against him is also charged what is known as the "surplus balance," because whenever a building has been completed, and there is any money remaining over, it is covered back into the Treasury. It is put to the credit of what is known as the "surplus balance fund," which, in the estimate of my colleague, is included in the $18,000,000. This amounts to quite a large sum, over $300,000 at this time.

He is now charged with this sum. It is unjust to him to say that in any given time he has only expended a certain sum of money, and therefore in a similar period of time he will not expend any more. He is deterred and prohibited and enjoined by law, as I have shown by the citations which I have furnished to this committee, from drawing on one dollar of the appropriation except under the circumstances I have stated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. SAYERS. I ask that my colleague be permitted to speak five minutes longer. I interrupted him, and it is but right that he should have the time.

Mr. HERBERT. With the understanding that it does not come out of the time limited for debate, I have no objection.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I hope the gentleman will have further time. He is giving the House some very important information.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] have five minutes more, not to be deducted from the time allowed on each side.

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. As I stated, Mr. Chairman, the Supervising Architect is charged with the entire amount of money that is appropriated for all the public buildings in this country which are authorized by law to be constructed; but other laws step in and restrain him from the expenditure of any of this money until certain prerequisites have been complied with. There are conditions precedent which are provided for by law, which have to be complied with before he can draw on the Treasury for a dollar of money. I have stated what they were. The acquisition of the site, which, as I have already suggested, occupies considerable time, except in instances where the site is donated.

If condemnation proceedings are necessary, a much longer period of time is required. During all this time, however, the Supervising Architect is charged with the appropriation which has been made for a specific building which is in contemplation of construction; and after this has been done then comes the preparation and submission of plans and specifications to the supervisory committee or commission, composed of the Cabinet officers whom I have mentioned, and then the advertising. All this takes time. Besides, Mr. Chairman, we must remember that at present the Supervising Architect's Office is employed in the construction of more public buildings than at any other period in the history of this Government. Out of 392 public buildings in the United States, as I said a few minutes ago, either completed or in process of construction, 75 were authorized by the last Congress.

The force of the Supervising Architect's Office has not been increased, and certainly the more buildings to be completed the more time to be taken, the more labor to be employed; and, notwithstanding all that, I have the assurance of the Supervising Architect, officially given in the statements which I have read, that before the expiration of this calendar year every dollar of the money appropriated by all the other Congresses that have provided for public buildings, not already completed, will have been covered by outstanding contract liabilities. This is bound to be the case under the system which we have adopted in the construction of public buildings in this country. There will always be a large amount of money appropriated, but not expended, because of the very reasons which I have suggested.

Certainly my colleague [Mr. SAYERS] does not want us to wait four or five years, until all of these buildings shall have been completed, before Congress shall provide for the construction of other public buildings in other portions of the country, equally important and equally necessary. And, Mr. Chairman, it is poor economy that denies to the Government, which, after all, is nothing but the representative of the people, the necessary buildings in which to carry on its business. The Government is an intangible entity. The men who occupy official positions are merely the agents of the people. The aggregation of those agents we call the Government; but the Government itself is something that is the creation of the mind. It is the result of a mental conception.

The individuals whom we have chosen, either by election or appointment, to act as our agents, constitute the Government; and I say in conclusion that the people of this country, while they are opposed to wasteful prodigality and are in favor of rigid economy, yet they despise parsimony.

Aggregate of amounts of "limit of cost" not yet asked to be appropriated	3,315,694.55
Aggregate of amounts of specific appropriations per above statement	44,897,110.66
Total amount of unpaid liabilities	$4,064,873.95
Total amount of payments	28,358,059.03
Total amount of the balances of appropriations on buildings completed and to be transferred to "surplus fund" before June 30, 1892	303,486.40
Total of balances available of said appropriations, March 1, 1892	12,170,691.28
Aggregate amount shown in the foregoing summary as balance available of all of the specific appropriations March 1, 1892, or the aggregate amount against which contract liabilities have not yet been charged	12,170,691.28
Under the law (acts of September 11, 1841, section 355, United States Revised Statutes; February 27, 1877, page 237, Supplement United States Revised Statutes) no expenditure can be made for the preparation of plans or for the commencement of work on a public building until after title to property for the site shall have been actually vested in the United States. The cases marked "A" in the foregoing statement are the cases in which title to the property selected for the sites has not yet been actually vested in the United States, and therefore no other expenditure can be made on account of the appropriations made in such cases. An examination of the statement will show that there are 23 such cases, and the amounts of specific appropriations that can not be used for that reason at present, or until after the titles shall have been vested in the United States, aggregate	1,523,363.66
The cases marked "B" in the foregoing statement are the cases wherein sites have not yet been selected, and of course the law above explained also applies thereto and prevents any expenditures from the specific appropriations. The foregoing statement shows that there are 4 such cases, in which the specific appropriations aggregate	523,950.07
Under the law (act of March 3, 1875, page 159, Supplement of United States Revised Statutes) no expenditure can be made until the plans, detailed estimates, etc., for a building shall have been prepared and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Postmaster-General, and the Secretary of the Interior. An examination of the foregoing statement will show the cases, marked "C," wherein the plans have not yet been wholly completed and approved, and this explains why no further contract liabilities have been established on account of the specific appropriations in such cases beyond the expenditures made for properties for the sites and preparation of plans. It will be seen that there are 65 cases of the character explained, and that the balance of the specific appropriations aggregate	7,550,371.19
Thus it will be seen that	2,564,997.25
of the amount actually available March 1, 1892, viz, $12,170,691.28, is the entire amount that was available at that date for the purpose of expenditures, and against which expenditures could be charged.

Mr. HERBERT. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS].

Mr. SAYERS. I do not propose to raise any issue with my colleague [Mr. CRAIN of Texas] as to the deductions which he has drawn from the tables furnished to him by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department.

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. I did not draw any deductions. The Supervising Architect himself draws them.

Mr. SAYERS. I only rise, Mr. Chairman, to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the tables from which I spoke, or rather which I submitted to the House on the 3d of March, 1892, came from the Treasury Department and from the very same officer who furnished the tables which my colleague [Mr. CRAIN of Texas] has been using to-day. Now, any member of the committee can examine the tables furnished to myself and also those furnished to my colleague, and from those tables he can draw the deduction whether or not there was $18,000,000 and upwards in the Treasury against which there was no contract on the 1st day of December last.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Has there ever been a time within the last twenty-five years, and perhaps I might say in the history of the Government, but will not, when there has not been a large amount of money in the same condition in the Treasury?

Mr. SAYERS. As much as $18,000,000 at a time?

Mr. MILLIKEN. I do not refer to the sum, but a large amount of money. And is it not true that there should be, and must be, a large sum of money in that condition?

Mr. SAYERS. I can not understand what the gentleman means by a large amount. If he will specify a particular sum I may be able to answer him. I will say, however, that there has not been, so far as I can remember, so much as $18,000,000 lying in the Treasury at any one time during the past eight or ten years for the construction of public buildings against which there was no contract.

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. And there never have been so many public buildings in process of construction.

Mr. SAYERS. I admit that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, the construction of the Navy is a matter of grave public interest. It is a matter intimately connected with our national greatness and the public security, and it seems to me that it ought to be a matter of national pride with every citizen of the American Republic. We are engaged in reestablishing the position of the United States among the recognized naval powers of the earth. For reasons well understood, during a long period of years immediately succeeding the exhausting civil war from 1861 to 1865, the attention and activities of our people were gladly diverted to all of those enterprises and vocations that led through the paths of peace, and for a time our military arms for offense and defense upon the land and upon the sea were seriously neglected.

Up to 1883 the entire expenditure on the part of the Navy was devoted to repairing our old wooden ships of war, and every gentleman who has had experience in the repairing of old buildings on the land is thoroughly aware that there is no such extravagant expenditure as that involved in patching up old structures of any kind. Naturally, the large expenditures involved in repairing our old wooden ships became a subject of public animadversion; and to-day there is a survival of the criticism against the naval establishment, unjustly based upon the large amounts expended during the period to which I have referred, in the repairing and refitting of the old wooden vessels that constituted the remnant of a once powerful but practically obsolete naval force.

It was during the Administration of President Arthur that the then Secretary of the Navy proposed a new departure by asking for legislation to prohibit the repairing of wooden vessels in any case where the repairs would cost more than 20 per cent of the value of the ship. That was the initiative of the new Navy of the United States, and under the operation of that policy, inaugurated by Secretary Chandler, the old ships that had helped to make such splendid history, but that had outlived their usefulness, rapidly went out of commission. An advisory board of distinguished experts was then organized, and under the suggestions of that board the building up of the new steel Navy was begun. It was a new departure in every sense of the word. The designing and building of steel ships in the United States were absolutely experimental, and everything connected with the structural work of these vessels was a novelty in this country.

The types of naval ships of war had been undergoing such a degree of evolution as rendered the designing of our "ships of the future" largely an experimental matter; and in view of the difficulties surrounding the problem then presented, it is a matter of national congratulation that the initial vessels of this new system, the first ships devised and put into construction in this country of the new types, proved to be among the very best of their class when compared with the naval ships of every other nation. So true is that fact that to-day, with the single exception of a lack of the highest speed which has since been developed, the four vessels first ordered to be put under construction compare favorably now with vessels of their class flying the flag of any other nation on the globe.

Those who have followed the evolution of the new Navy are well aware that within a few years, and subsequent to the design and partial construction of those first four ships, new inventions in the development of the triple-expansion engine and other modern improvements in steam machinery gave an impetus to the development of speed of which those ships had not the advantage; and yet it is but just to say that each of them—the Chicago, the Atlanta, the Boston, and the Dolphin—not only vindicated the expectations of their designers in all respects, but proved to be faster ships than their designers anticipated. We therefore date the inauguration of this new departure in our naval construction in 1883, during the Administration of President Arthur and Secretary Chandler, when under the act of March 3, 1883, the construction of the Chicago, Boston, Atlanta, and Dolphin were authorized, followed by the acts of July 7, 1884, and March 3, 1885, authorizing the construction of the Newark, Charleston, Yorktown, and Petrel, these eight vessels aggregating a displacement of about 23,000 tons.

Gentlemen who were in this House during the Forty-seventh and Forty-eighth Congresses are well aware that after the beginning of the Navy by the Forty-seventh Congress there was a refusal in the Forty-eighth to provide the additional appropriations for carrying on the work until an appropriation of $1,895,000 went through at the very close of the second session, under which the construction of the four vessels last named above was begun.

That brings us to the Administration of President Cleveland.

Immediately upon his accession to the Executive Office and his appointment of a Secretary of the Navy from the State of New York, the question whether we should go forward in the construction of our Navy became a prominent one, and I am glad to say, Mr. Chairman, that it was the unanimous conclusion of the Republican membership of this House that no change of political administration should in the slightest degree modify their favorable attitude toward what they regarded as a matter of great public necessity, the rebuilding of the Navy. Therefore, from the beginning of President Cleveland's Administration to the close, the work of adding to our naval force received the practically unanimous and most cordial support of the Republican membership of the House.

During the Administration of President Cleveland twenty-one vessels were authorized, which, including the authorization for completing the double-turreted monitors and the eight vessels previously authorized under the Arthur Administration, brought the total up to thirty-four vessels, aggregating 86,000 tons.

Of these twenty-one ships authorized during the Administration of President Cleveland, only three had been put in commission at the time of the accession of President Harrison to the Executive office. Eighteen of them had been begun, and the construction of thirteen more of them had not been entered upon. They are all now in progress and in the last stages of completion; so that during the present Administration at least twenty-four ships of war will have been put in commission.

During the Fifty-first Congress 45,000 tons of vessels for the Navy were authorized, and these vessels were of a type which make them equal at least to three times their number of any of the other ships previously authorized. When we reach the completion of the vessels now under construction the new Navy of the United States will consist of three first-class battle ships, one battle ship of the second class, five improved double-turreted monitors, two harbor-defense ships, nineteen cruisers, seven gun-boats, and two torpedo boats; or a fleet of thirty-nine vessels of all types. And it is a very gratifying thing to state to the committee that this result will have been reached by the comparatively slight expenditure of an average of less than six millions per year during the twelve years that will have been occupied in their construction. The following table furnishes an interesting exhibit of the excellent results that have been obtained thus far in the work of building up our new Navy:

Now, I believe very firmly that no duty resting upon Congress to-day is more important or more pressing than that of going forward in the construction of our naval force until we are placed upon a footing that will at least give us reasonable security for the defense of our seacoast; that will at least put us in a position where we can defend our great cities on the Atlantic and Pacific seaboard against assault. Believing as I do that this is the duty of Congress, I desire to impress upon the members of this committee, especially in view of the present very large preponderance of one of the great political parties in the membership of the House, the responsibility that rests upon them in regard to this question.

I purpose to show that up to the present moment, while both political parties have been given more or less credit in the public press and in every political platform for the carrying forward of this great work, and while I am willing to freely concede the ability and the zeal with which the present chairman (now and previously the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs) and his political associates on that committee have devoted themselves, in coöperation with the rest of us, to the carrying on of this work; while I am willing to concede all of the progress that was made by Secretary Whitney and President Cleveland's Administration in this regard, making, as I must, of course, a special reservation of regret that their administration was ushered in by a most unjust and cruel assault upon that great ship-builder who put afloat the first of our new naval fleet—conceding all this, yet it is nevertheless the fact that the records of our legislation show that the rebuilding of the Navy up to the present time is due to the votes of the Republican party in this House, and has been accomplished at every contested point in spite of the opposition of a majority of the votes of the Democratic Representatives.

I introduce this aspect of the case for the purpose of impressing upon this committee that now, with a membership of 240 or 250 on the Democratic side, you must take the responsibility, gentlemen, of making the record of your party in regard to this great public interest. In 1886, under the Cleveland Administration, the then Committee on Naval Affairs reported a bill carrying over $10,000,000 for the new Navy, and the Democratic party was credited for this liberality by the press of the whole country. It is a matter of history, however, that the committee were compelled to reduce that bill to about one-third before it could be passed through that Democratic House.

The bill, which was unanimously reported from the committee, of which I was a minority member, on March 10, 1886, carried $10,128,046 for new ships, and for months the newspapers teemed with praise of the generous provision for the new Navy made by the Democratic House a year after the inauguration of a Democratic administration. But before it was taken from the Calendar, late in the summer, the Democratic caucus committee issued an edict that the amount must be mercilessly cut down, and in accordance with that edict a substitute was reported which carried only $3,500,000. The chairman of the committee very reluctantly, as I believe, was compelled to advocate the reduction of his committee's bill to one-third of the amount it had recommended.

On behalf of the Republican minority I took the floor against the substitute and in favor of the passage of the original bill. I was sustained by several of my Republican associates, but the leading Democrats in the House advocated the reduction, and on a yeas-and-nays vote, July 24, 1886, the first bill reported under the Cleveland administration for the increase of the Navy was reduced from $10,128,046 to $3,500,000 by a vote of 118 to 103, the votes in favor of the reduction being given by 116 Democrats and 2 Republicans, while 99 Republicans and 14 Democrats voted with me in favor of the original bill.

On the same occasion my amendment to provide that only materials of American manufacture should be used in the construction of the ships and armaments authorized was carried in Committee of the Whole by a vote of 101 to 67, but when it came up in the House the Democrats succeeded in defeating it by the close shave of 111 to 103. That contest, however, planted the seed, and the subsequent action of the Senate resulted in the legislation authorizing the Secretaries of the Navy and of War to invite proposals for the domestic manufacture of armor and gun metal that has borne fruit in the establishment at Bethlehem, Pa., of the largest and best equipped steel forging plant in the world. And I am glad to say that for years every bill providing for newships of war has contained a clause imperatively requiring "that in all their parts said vessels shall be of domestic manufacture."

We have thus speedily wrought our independence of foreign countries for either designs or materials for our naval vessels, and with the exception of a few of those earliest constructed the new Navy of the United States realizes the aspiration of my first speech in Congress in its behalf for "an American Navy of American design and American materials."

The bill was reported on March 10, 1886, carrying $10,128,046 for new ships, and for months the newspapers teemed with praise of this generous provision for the Navy.

But, proceeding with the record, it will be found on the 25th of February, 1887, as the RECORD shows, two prominent members of the Democratic side—Mr. McMILLIN and Mr. Rogers of Arkansas—demanded the yeas and nays on the only provision of the naval appropriation bill authorizing new vessels; and on that division 100 Republicans, with the help of only 51 Democrats saved the bill reported by a Democratic committee, all the other Democratic votes being recorded against it.

Again, on the 15th of April, 1890, more than eighty Democrats voted for Mr. HOLMAN'S motion to strike from the naval appropriation bill the provision for three battle ships, and then again voted in favor of Mr. HOLMAN'S motion to recommit the bill so as to reduce the battle ships to but one. On the first vote the gentleman from Indiana was beaten by 103 Republicans and 25 Democrats, and on the second by 104 Republicans and 25 Democrats. And I regret to say that the Democratic vote included a large proportion of the leading and representative gentlemen of that party, such as Messrs. CARLISLE, BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky, BYNUM, CRISP, BLOUNT, HOLMAN, MILLS, McMILLIN, OUTHWAITE, and SPRINGER, with Mr. HATCH and Mr. WILSON of West Virginia paired the same way, which list, it will be seen, includes every one of the gentlemen afterward brought forward as candidates for the office of Speaker.

Again, on the 26th of January, 1891, on Mr. HOLMAN'S motion again to strike out the single ship provided for in the naval appropriation bill, 67 Democrats and 3 Republicans voted yeas—in favor of striking out; and the motion was defeated by the practically solid Republican membership, with the assistance of my committee colleague from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT], and the few gentlemen on that side whom he was able to bring to the support of the Navy.

Now, I enforce this upon the attention of the committee in order that there may be no mistake this year in regard to the political responsibility for carrying on or arresting this great national work. I noticed when the contest for Speakership was waging that some of the candidates were interviewed in regard to this matter, and I have here a clipping from a Washington dispatch to the New York Herald, of November 10, 1891—a few weeks prior to the assembling of Congress, giving an interview with Mr. McMILLIN of Tennessee upon this subject. The writer says:

Mr. McMILLIN of Tennessee, a candidate for Speaker, looks with favor on the improvement and increase of our Navy, and perfecting of our coast defenses. When I asked him what Congress would do regarding the matter he said, "Of course I can not predict what the Democratic majority in the House will do; but I believe the sentiment and disposition of the coming Congress will be to make adequate appropriations for our Navy. It is the policy of the party to have our Navy equipped with the fastest vessels in the world and the best that are constructed. The improvement in the construction of our war vessels and the increase in their number and effectiveness are due to Democratic foresight and enterprise. During twenty years or more of Republican rule our Navy became a disgrace to the country. It is building up now, and I think the policy of the Fifty-second Congress will be to continue the improvement."

As a matter of politeness I am willing to concede a great deal in the way of "Democratic foresight and enterprise" if the gentleman will only come up to his promise now and help us this year in carrying forward this work of building up our Navy.

I find upon examination that appropriations thus far made since March 3, 1883, amount in all to a grand total of $58,839,326.41, which with $1,000,000 additional for the purchase of nickel, brings the amount up to $59,839,326.41. In this connection I refer to the following table:

Total amount appropriated each year for increase of the Navy.
Appropriation for Roach vessels, Chicago, Boston, Atlanta, and Dolphin:
Act of March 3, 1883.....	$1,300,000.00

Mr. Chairman, it is a significant fact that of this amount for the increase of the Navy the Fifty-first Congress in its two sessions appropriated no less than $26,582,000, or nearly one-half the entire amount that has been appropriated since this work began—that one Republican Congress appropriated within less than half a million dollars of the entire amount ($27,053,362) appropriated for the increase of the Navy during the four years of the Cleveland administration.

Mr. HERBERT. I will ask the gentleman whether, during all this time since the construction of the new navy has been going on, each Democratic House has not appropriated all the money necessary to do the work as it was progressing—whether there has ever been any lack of appropriation?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have stated, Mr. Chairman, that the fact of the appropriations for carrying on the work having been made year by year has been due to the votes of the Republican side of the House.

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman has not answered my question. I want to know whether Democratic Houses have not made all the appropriations which were required.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Well, the gentleman has five hours—

Mr. HERBERT. You do not deny that we made all the appropriations necessary to carry on the work.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I shall endeavor to make no error in this summary of facts. If I do, I am sure it will not escape the vigilant eye and ear of my colleague, the chairman of the committee. I desire to call attention to the manner in which the Republican side of this House rose to the responsibility and met the full measure of its duty in the last Congress, when we found it necessary to provide more money to carry on the work upon vessels started under the Cleveland administration than had been appropriated for these vessels during any year of that administration. We did not shrink our duty or seek to evade the Government's obligations because the Democrats were coming into control in the House.

We did not provide for the creation of a deficiency; we did not shrink under the outcry that we were "extravagant," or for fear of being denounced as the "billion-dollar Congress." We made the appropriations that were deemed necessary. We sent to the Navy Department for a statement of the legitimate expenditures that would devolve on the Government in meeting its contract and other obligations on behalf of the Navy, and when that report was sent to us we framed our bill to give every dollar needed to keep the work going and meet every just demand as it matured. That report showed, Mr. Chairman, among other things, that in the construction of these ships we had reached that point where during the current year, ending June 30, 1892, we would be called upon for a larger expenditure on account of the construction, etc., of ships than at any previous time since the work of reconstruction began, and that thereafter the expenditures would rapidly decrease down by reason of the fact that many of the ships would be completed, or would have passed beyond the point of largest expenditure.

In the tables of estimates then furnished me and printed on page 1775 of volume 116, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, second session Fifty-first Congress, the number of vessels then authorized that would be under construction each year, and the probable expenditure upon them was approximated, as follows:

1891, expenditure on 31 vessels.....	$10,336,300.76
1892, expenditure on 24 vessels.....	11,364,347.32
1893, expenditure on 20 vessels.....	7,158,004.00
1894, expenditure on 3 battle ships.....	1,523,799.00

Since then only one additional vessel, Cruiser No. 13, has been authorized, so that in 1894, unless we now authorize more ships, the only work will be in completing the three battle ships and that one cruiser.

I say that we assumed the full responsibility and provided the entire amount declared by the Department necessary to carry on the work of completing the vessels authorized by Congress. And now, after having done that, having left over nothing in the way of a burden upon this House or Congress, in view of the fact that the completion of these vessels is so rapidly reducing the expenditures upon them that the Committee on Naval Affairs has been enabled this year to make provision for the next fiscal year and yet show a very large reduction from the amount that we found it our duty to appropriate the preceding year, it seems to me there is abundant reason why this House can afford to exercise at least a reasonable liberality in carrying forward the important work.

I do not purpose to indulge in any extended argument at this time to convince the House that the building up of the Navy is desirable and important. I think that there are very few who will candidly dispute it. I know that there are here and there gentlemen willing to argue that we can regard ourselves as practically an isolated people; that we can assume a contemptuous indifference as to our relations with the other nations of the earth, and that it matters not whether our extended coast is unprotected, and our great seaboard cities left liable to bombardment; but I must think that they are in a very small minority in this great country; and I certainly hope that gentlemen holding such narrow views will not be able to dominate, or come near controlling a Democratic majority of the House of Representatives, which is so large that it ought to be able, with the aid of the Republicans, to protect a great national interest against the eccentric and the niggardly in its ranks.

I desire to say that there is no dispute between myself and the committee, or the chairman of the committee, in reference to the importance of providing for the class of ships embraced in my amendment. You will find in the report prepared by the chairman of the committee, where the whole subject is quite exhaustively discussed, this statement of his opinion:

To regain the relative position among these navies we occupied prior to our civil war is certainly not too much to attempt, especially as we know now that we have no such efficient coast defenses as we then believed ourselves to possess. To reach this point it is not disputed that we need more first-class battle ships. We have now only three authorized. Eight or nine more of these in addition to our authorized fleet would give us a respectable navy sufficient perhaps for our purposes.

And again the chairman of the committee says:

If we should conclude to continue building our modern navy until we shall have, say, ten or twelve battle ships and one more swift fighting cruiser like the New York, it would seem to your committee that such a work ought to extend through some years. Germany sometime ago adopted a programme of shipbuilding which was to continue for eight years, equal amounts being appropriated annually. Results have proven the wisdom of the scheme. We might well authorize all these battle ships in four years.

So, Mr. Chairman, it will be seen that there is a consensus of opinion on the part of the Navy Department and the majority of the Committee and the minority of the Committee on Naval Affairs, that the most important factor of our naval development is the construction of a sufficient number of battle ships. This is because a navy is built to fight when fighting may be necessary. If we do not want a navy that can fight effectively in time of need, we do not want a navy at all. If we are to build any navy we want one that in case of necessity will be able to make war, or resist it when made upon us. This can only be done by providing a sufficient number—not an extravagant number—of the most powerful battle ships—not undertaking to compete in number with the great naval fleets of some other powers that have numerous and remote dependencies to protect—but a reasonable navy, an adequate fleet of vessels—war vessels—a navy powerful to repel any assaults that can be made on us from across the sea, and at the same time securely defend the great harbors of our coast now open to irresistible attack from all but the very weakest of the naval powers of the world.

The Secretary of the Navy in his report calls attention very urgently and convincingly to this matter, and in one of his recent utterances he repeated his conviction that "there is no doubt of the correctness of the principle that first-class battle ships, with their accessories, form the main element of strength and determine the fighting efficiency of a modern fleet." That being the case, the question arises, why should we not go on in the work that we have begun? I apprehend that no Representative in Congress will question the duty of the Government to provide for the defense of our own territory. I will not make the statement quite so broad as that, because I believe there are a few, including the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], who are sufficiently removed from the seaboard or who live high enough up in the mountains to feel secure from bombardment, and who are sublimely philosophical in their willingness to permit their fellow-citizens along the coast to shift for themselves in case of a foreign war; but I am talking now about Democrats who believe in some of the patriotic tenets of old-time Democracy, men who can remember a time when a sturdy declaration for "sailors' rights" had a place on Democratic banners, and who believed that the United States should assert itself as at least a power to be respected among the nations of the earth.

Among such I do not believe there is a man who has a word of regret to express for the fact that under the combined efforts of a Republican and a Democratic executive administration we are having constructed in this country to-day, of American material, by American mechanics, and upon American designs, three vessels at least that are believed to be superior in offensive and defensive power to the most formidable naval vessels that any country in the world could send to our shores. If there is a man who regrets that, I am sorry for him, and I give him the benefit of my sympathy.

I want to know if there is a man within the sound of my voice who will not feel a thrill of pride when I call his attention to this report of the meeting of the Institution of Naval Architects of London, in March last, before which appeared the constructor of the finest two ocean steamers afloat, the designer of the City of Paris and the City of New York, Mr. J. H. Biles, one of the most eminent among the naval architects of the world, who in that meeting spoke in unstinted praise of the splendid work done in building up the United States Navy. Should it not be a matter of some pride to us as a people and as a Congress, in view of the brief period in which we have been engaged in building up an absolutely new industry, experimenting in an entirely new field, that this leader among naval architects, after visiting all our shipyards, after going through our navy-yards, after inspecting all our designs, was willing to stand up before the members of the British admiralty and the other great architects of the Clyde and the Mersey and elsewhere in England, and speak of American construction of ships in such complimentary terms as these in his address of March 18, 1891, when Mr. Biles said:

I carefully inspected the Newark, which is now practically completed, at the yard of Messrs. Cramp, Philadelphia, and was afforded every opportunity of forming an opinion of the workmanship and details of American war ships, and feel sure that in these respects they are quite equal to our best practice.

The American designers and builders have shown that they are capable of producing vessels quite equal to their promises, and at least equal to the best European practice. This is an important thing to bear in mind in considering the recent designs upon which ships are now being built for the American Navy.

Of the armored fast cruiser New York, Mr. Biles said:

Compared with the Edgar class, this vessel is much more powerfully armed and much better protected. Her sustained sea speed will probably be greater.

Of the three coast-line battle ships authorized by the first session of the Fifty-first Congress, and now well advanced in construction, Mr. Biles said:

The armament of these vessels seems to be more powerful than that of any European battle ship, there being four guns (13-inch) capable of piercing any armor afloat, and eight guns (8-inch) capable of penetrating almost any armor, and certainly of penetrating the armor at the ends of the belt's and on the barbettes and redoubts of most of our battle ships at close quarters. There are also four 6-inch guns, twenty-eight small, rapid-firing guns, and six torpedo tubes.

They have a partial belt of 18 inches of armor 7½ feet wide extending over 56 per cent of the whole length. This belt rises 3 feet above the water line, and extends 4½ feet below. The under-water protective decks at the ends of the belt are 3 inches thick; the armored deck over the belt is 2½ inches thick. Above the 18-inch belt there is a 5-inch belt similar to our latest battleships. The four 12-inch 35-caliber guns are mounted in two turrets formed with inclined armor 17 inches thick, extending from the top of the armor belt to 3½ feet above the main deck.

He goes on to say that while in these vessels it is true we have sacrificed the highest rate of speed, and reduced the coal capacity below that of some of the great cruising war vessels of Europe, for the purpose of increasing our armament and our armor, he says, as these vessels will probably have to act very much nearer their base than European vessels, their bottoms will probably be in better condition, so that we shall not suffer in that regard. But I will give his own words:

As these vessels will probably have to act very much nearer their base than European vessels, their bottoms will probably be in better condition, so that the real speed would not be much, if any, less. For the same reason their coal supply need not be so large, and therefore it would seem that their preponderance of armament would give them an advantage in a combat near their own coast line with any European vessel.

They are distinctly superior in most respects to any European vessels of the same displacement, and for the purposes intended of protecting the American coast line, they seem to be quite a match for any ships afloat.

Mr. Chairman, these remarkable encomiums from the lips of a great naval architect of England, who stands foremost in his profession, furnish the most ample and gratifying testimony of the success we have attained in the design and construction of the three powerful ships intended for the protection of our coast against any vessels that might be sent against them. My own interest and pride in those grand creations of the genius of our naval architects and the skill of our constructors have been stimulated and confirmed by the untainted commendation of one of England's most famous experts.

The paper from which I have read forms a significant concession and compliment to the naval constructors and engineering talent of the United States in a field of modern development upon which they entered less than ten years ago. It ought to cause us to feel an especial degree of pride that we have been able thus to develop this capacity of our own people, and to make such progress as we have in placing ourselves in a respectable attitude for the defense of our commercial interests and the protection of our coasts.

Now, to come nearer home. Within a few months we have had a demonstration of the incalculable benefit conferred upon this country by the development of our Navy to its present status. Is there a man who doubts that had we been in the helpless position of ten or twelve years ago we might have been subjected at least to temporary humiliation, to say nothing of enormous expense and disaster at the hands of as weak a power as that of Chile? Any gentleman who has studied the phases of that situation must recognize the fact that, given one or two factors but slightly modified from the existing conditions, we should have been in a position of great disadvantage in that controversy. Had the Congressional party failed to sink the ironclad Blanco Encalada by a torpedo, and had the Captain Prat been completed a few months earlier at the shipyard of the French contractors, and had we been in such a state of naval weakness as that of a dozen years ago, who doubts that San Francisco would have been liable to bombardment, or that the great city of New York might have been put under tribute or partially destroyed by so comparatively insignificant a power as Chile?

The fact that we are not engaged in a warfare to-day, smarting under humiliation at the outset and with the possibility of untold disaster while preparing adequate military and naval forces; the fact that we are not to-day employed, in the midst of hostilities, in lifting ourselves up to the plane of ability to maintain and defend the national honor, and to uphold our national flag and the rights of our citizens against a fourth-rate power, is solely due to the fact that the completion of the modern ships that I have enumerated enabled the Secretary of the Navy, by the click of the telegraph, to set in motion, converging to the point of the then storm center, a naval force under the flag of our country adequate to the maintenance of the dignity and honor of the United States against any power that could be wielded by the hot-headed South Americans in whose port our sailors had been wantonly assassinated by a mob.

That is the history of the Chilean controversy and its settlement without war.

Let me call your attention for a moment to a more recent diplomatic difficulty. I presume that the majority of the people, who have watched the Bering Sea discussion, have felt a deep regret at the possibility that friction of a threatening character could arise between the two English-speaking people of the world. But friction did arise, and I hold in my hand to-day a paper received the day before yesterday from a friend in England, containing an editorial of which he says that all the English papers similarly characterize the assertion of our rights as "brag and bluster" because of our lack of powerful battle ships in our Navy. This paper has an editorial article on the United States Navy which illustrates the fact that those gentlemen on the other side are closely watching every step of our development.

The editorial contains an accurate roster of our ships of war; it contains an exact statement of just where our vessels are stationed, just how many guns they mount, and in the course of the article this editor of the Journal of Commerce, of Liverpool, England, March 30, 1892, says:

It has been frequently proved that the readiest way of securing peace is to be prepared for war, but America has allowed this axiom to lie out of sight and out of mind. For this reason it seems extremely unlikely that a calamitous conflict between Great Britain and the United States will result from the Bering Sea dispute.

That is based on the idea that England's contentions must be accepted because we lack the ability to reject them.

The paper then refers to the few steel cruisers and the old wooden vessels upon that station and says:

We may leave these wood warships out of the calculation, and when we hear that our splendid ships—Melpomene, Warspite, and Champion—have set out for the northward there remains little to be said, except that it would be midsummer madness for the new American cruisers to attempt to cope with British warships opposed to them.

The article closes by saying:

If the United States desires to become other than a self-contained country warships in greater number and of modern date are essential, and her merchant vessels should be on every sea. She is a truly great and powerful nation, our near kindred to whom we wish every success, but President Harrison requires a better hand of ironclads to carry out his game of bluff to the bitter end, and he knows it. It is sufficient to say that his officers and many of his men are of the same race as ourselves, and may be depended upon to do their duty. His ships are sadly wanting.

I clipped yesterday this extract from another paper, showing what another of the nations of Europe is doing in strengthening its naval power:

Russia keeps on her course with grim determination in spite of famine and financial troubles. Her new naval programme provides for the construction of twenty-two war vessels within the next four years. There will be three ironclads of 11,000 tons displacement, costing over $5,000,000 each, a lighter ironclad, an armored cruiser, two armored coast-defense vessels, two torpedo cruisers, one torpedo-gun vessel, two dispatch vessels, and ten first-class torpedo boats. Only one of these new vessels is intended for service on the Black Sea. All will be built by the Russians themselves on the Baltic. This is supposed to be Russia's response to the naval activity of Germany.

I might go on multiplying the evidences of the fact that every other nation of the world is strengthening its naval force, as I believe we ought to strengthen ours. Now, this brings me directly to the point of the amendment which I have offered to the bill. The only issue between the chairman of the committee and myself is as to what is a desirable and expedient addition to our vessels to be authorized in the present appropriation bill. I desire to remind the committee on that point that unless we make provision on this bill authorizing the construction of additional ships, the close of the year 1894 will find our work of construction in the Navy Department limited to the one vessel now provided for in this bill.

The last blow of the last hammer upon the vessels now authorized will be struck during the year 1894. If we do not authorize these battle ships during this session we can not authorize them until late in the next session of Congress; and in determining this question gentlemen should consider the length of time that is required for the construction of these ships. Gentlemen must dismiss from their minds the idea that we can improvise a navy as we did at the outbreak of the civil war. The conditions are entirely changed. Many gentlemen in the House are fully aware that for some of the most important naval purposes in our civil war a Staten Island or a Jersey City ferryboat made as good a gunboat as we needed, and forty-eight hours sufficed to mount upon such a craft guns that rendered her as effective as any vessel of her class needed to be.

But that condition of things has absolutely passed away with the period in which it was possible. The war ship of to-day is an intricate machine, a ponderous, complicated, and expensive piece of mechanism. These battle ships that we are now constructing will require at least four years for their completion, and when the chairman in his report states that we ought to have eight or ten more ships and admits that we have only three under construction, it seems to me that that in itself furnishes the strongest possible argument for beginning now if at all the additional work upon that class of ships that it will take longest to complete.

Mr. HERBERT. Will the gentleman permit me to ask a question at that point?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Certainly.

Mr. HERBERT. If we should find that the gentleman's prediction is correct, that during the year 1894 all these vessels are to be completed, and we should authorize the construction of additional battle ships at the next session of Congress, which must close on the 4th of March, would not work begin upon them in time for the succeeding year after that?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I think not.

Mr. HERBERT. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that upon the battle ships now under construction work began within thirteen months after the authorization.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Well, I am willing to give my friend all the latitude he desires upon that point, but I am trying to impress upon this committee—

Mr. HERBERT. But my point is that if we should authorize any number of battle ships at the next session of Congress work would begin upon them by the 1st of July, 1894.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. But if you are going to authorize them at all, why not now?

Mr. HERBERT. One reason is that the appropriations during the year 1894 will run away up to $10,000,000 for the Navy.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The chairman of the committee, I know, is going to say that in his own time. Of course every member of the House sees that the point in dispute between the chairman and myself is whether we should let this work absolutely lapse, or whether we should come within an ace of letting it lapse.

Mr. HERBERT. I say that it would not lapse at all.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Now, I say if we need more of these battle ships, as is conceded, and if it will take four years to build them, then we can not begin them any too soon. If we do not begin them this year we shall certainly delay the construction one year at least, and that is the whole of my contention. Now, is there any reason why we should delay that one year? I say not. I speak as a member of a former Congress, and as chairman of a committee in that Congress that came boldly before the people with an appropriation of $32,000,000 for the Navy, because it was needed, and in their name I say that the duty is resting upon this House now, by reason of the decreased expenditure in construction, to make adequate provision for building the ships most needed.

There is another aspect of this case which, it seems to me, ought not to be without interest and weight. In connection with what I have quoted from Mr. Biles I may advert here to the fact that under the stimulus of this legislation and these measures for building up the Navy, we have erected in this country some of the greatest industrial establishments in the world. My friend, the chairman of the committee [Mr. HERBERT], recollects very well the situation in which we were a few years ago when we stood here higgling over an appropriation bill as to whether the Secretary of the Navy was to be permitted to buy any of the material abroad; and I moved to strike out the whole permission. The controversy came squarely on the line of the development of our own resources. Gentlemen then told me, "You can not produce the armor to-day in this country; you will not produce it next year, and some think you can not do it for ten years. You can not produce the hydraulic hollow shafting; we have not the plant; we have not the machinery."

I stood on this floor saying—and I have never failed to be gratified that I said it—that if the alternative were presented whether at the end of ten years we should have afloat twenty first-class ships of war, the best of their class in every respect, but in the construction of which we should have to be dependent upon foreign governments or foreign labor for one-quarter or one-third or one-half or any considerable proportion of their essential materials, or whether on the other hand at the end of ten years we should not have a single modern war ship afloat, but would have somewhere on our own soil, within our own jurisdiction, even one great establishment capable of producing every portion of the material that enters into the construction of vessels for our own defense, I would accept the latter branch of the alternative without hesitation.

That dream has been realized almost as by magic. When I made that proposition here I was ridiculed for suggesting the idea that within any reasonable time we could reach such a condition of independence. Since this Congress met I have visited, in company with other gentlemen of this House and of the Senate, the great steel works at Bethlehem, Pa., which, I am glad to say, is not third, is not second, to any similar establishment in any other nation, but is to-day in its capacity for wielding these great forces, for handling the metal in enormous bulk, the greatest and most powerful armor and gun steel-forging factory in the world. Ought we not to be proud of that? Is there not some reason for national felicitation that in the construction of the three battle ships now being built, instead of being obliged to go to the works of Whitworth in England, or Creusot in France, we can say that at this very hour, in the adjacent State of Pennsylvania, the most ponderous hammer that ever swung to the impulse of the human mind is forging out from American ore, with the aid of American workmen and American machinery, the great armor plates and tubes that are to be the bulwark of our national safety on the broadsides and in the batteries of our ships of war.

And so here in the city of Washington we have established a manufactory for the production of the armament of our ships which confessedly is superior to that of any other people. I hope gentlemen will not think I am indulging in the prerogative of an American Congressman add flying the eagle too freely on this occasion. I say to you that within a year Col. Hope, one of the most distinguished ordnance officers of the British army, has stated over his own signature that in the city of Washington he found the most perfectly equipped gun factory within his knowledge and that the work turned out here is beyond comparison superior to any other work of the kind in the world. And he gave this wholesale commendation in the statement that "the high-power rifle of the American Navy is to-day superior of any other gun in the world, ashore or afloat." No higher meed of praise could be awarded to the development of an ordnance manufactory that will stand as a monument to the genius and practical skill of the United States Navy as manifested by the present Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance and the accomplished corps who have aided him in bringing the Washington gun factory to the perfection it has attained. I will print the following exhibit of the splendid work it is doing:

THE PRODUCTION OF NAVAL ARMAMENT—THE WASHINGTON GUN SHOP.

[From report of the Chief of Bureau of Ordnance to the Secretary of the Navy for 1891.]

This shop has been running from ten to twelve working hours each working day throughout the present year, the present force employed therein numbering 115. It has been worked to the full capacity of the machinery on guns of the following calibers, viz. 12, 10, 8, 6, 5, and 4 inch. The capacity of the shop, as it stands at present, is estimated as follows:

12-inch.....	31	Or 6-inch only.....	84
10-inch.....	8	Or 12-inch.....	31
8-inch.....	10	10-inch.....	10
6-inch.....	80	6-inch.....	5
Or 10-inch.....	16	Or 12-inch.....	45
8-inch.....	8	6-inch.....	72
6-inch.....	30	Or 8-inch.....	24
Or 10-inch.....	16	6-inch.....	30
6-inch.....	45

Different arrangements of calibers will, of course, show different figures, as, for example, two 4-inch guns can be made in the same length of time that is required for one 8-inch.

The estimated time under ordinary circumstances required to complete guns of different calibers is given below, with comparison with time required one and two years ago:

Gun.	Two years ago.	One year ago.	Present time.
	Days.	Days.	Days.
4-inch.....			48
5-inch.....			55
6-inch.....	144	75	60
8-inch.....	250	150	105
10-inch.....	300	205	150
12-inch.....			270
13-inch.....			*300

* Estimate.

Showing a marked decrease in time; and it is possible that a still further reduction may be made.

The number of guns now in the works completed and in various stages is as follows:

12-inch, of 35 caliber.....	4	6-inch, of 30 caliber.....	23
10-inch, of 30 caliber.....	11	5-inch, of 40 caliber.....	26
8-inch, of 35 caliber.....	4	4-inch, of 40 caliber.....	32
8-inch, of 30 caliber.....	1	6-pounder field gun.....	5
6-inch, of 40 caliber.....	5
6-inch, of 35 caliber.....	3	Total.....	117

There are also at the proving ground eight guns, as follows:

10-inch, of 30 caliber.....	1	6-inch, of 35 caliber.....	1
8-inch, of 35 caliber.....	3	6-inch, of 30 caliber.....	2
6-inch, of 40 caliber.....	1

It is believed that when the new lathes, now under construction, are received the heavier guns can be completed in less time than that given above. Seven months will probably suffice for a 12-inch gun.

Number and caliber of guns put afloat each year.

These are some of the auxiliaries of the building up of the American Navy. To-day there are at least 50,000 industrious skilled American citizens engaged in work more or less directly connected with the construction of these ships. Do you regret it? Are you sorry that 40,000 of them are not carrying on their work on foreign soil, to send their finished product over to our country? Is it a matter of regret that that great body of intelligent artisans are earning an honest livelihood in our own land in the work of building up the defenses of our country? Are you prepared to say that this Congress, upon an appropriation bill which in the nature of things has shrunk to a degree that will enable you to do justice to the Navy and yet make a political boast of economy, which I do not grudge you—are you prepared to say that your action shall be such as to put out the fires in those forges, to stop that great hammer from swinging, to send back to their homes in idleness this great army of intelligent, skillful American artisans engaged in a great national work which you helped to inaugurate and which you would declare to-day ought to go forward, only that some gentlemen think perhaps some petty political point might be made by deferring an appropriation until after the next Presidential election?

Gentlemen there is nothing in such a policy. I say it to those of you who represent the section to which your party is looking to decide the next Presidential contest. You are not anxious about the electoral vote of the South. You are not lying awake at nights worrying about the electoral votes there. You think that they are measurably sure; and I am inclined to think myself that under the present condition of the suffrage you have some basis for that belief. But I tell you that in the great States of the North and Northwest, and in the middle sections of the country, it is not going to accredit a political party very much to the popular support if, at this stage of our naval development, it puts so poor an estimate on the popular intelligence as to believe it can get the consciences and convictions of the people to assent to the proposition that it is good public policy to leave our seaboard unprotected a year longer, in order to bridge over a Presidential campaign with an appropriation bill showing a footing of a few millions of dollars less.

Now, it is going to cost much to do the patriotic thing. It is an easy thing to do right in this matter, and that is all the more reason why it should be done.

Mr. HERBERT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I have already occupied so much time that I think I must decline to be interrupted further. May I ask how much time I have occupied?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has occupied an hour and ten minutes.

Mr. HERBERT. I will not intrude upon my colleague's time.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have already overlapped the time that I intended to occupy, and I must beg my colleague to excuse me from further inquiries.

I say it is not going to cost much to do the right thing, and the right thing is to continue the work in a reasonable degree. I have offered an amendment relative to continuing this work. The amendment is not so liberal as it ought to be, or as I originally wrote it, but so strong is my conviction of the absolute and paramount importance of continuing the construction of these first-class ships on which our great reliance must of necessity be placed in case of an emergency that I have reduced the amendment to the bare terms of two battle ships and ten torpedo boats, the latter a class of vessels of which those who make the greatest fight against the big ships always insist that we should have a greater number and of which we now have but two.

In the figures that I have given showing the sums to be expended for the construction of ships for the year ending June 30, 1893, and to which I have already called attention, it will be seen that the expenditures for that year would run down to $7,158,000, and in 1894 the expenditures, there being then only three big battle ships left in construction, the total expenditure would be but $1,529,000.

Mr. HERBERT. That is, as I understand it, the estimate of last year?

Mr. BOUTELLE. The estimates of last year. I do not give them, of course, as accurate. They may have been modified or amended in some degree. But they are near enough for my purposes, to show that this expenditure is rapidly decreasing and that we can well afford to be liberal this year.

Adding cruiser No. 13 to the estimates published last year, and also estimating for the expenditures that would be required for 1893 and 1894 upon the armored cruiser proposed in the bill and the vessels authorized in my amendment, we should have these approximate figures:

Estimated expenditures on new ships (exclusive of armor and armament).

	1893.	1894.
As per table on page 1775, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Fifty-first Congress, second session.....	$7,158,604	$1,529,799
No. 13.....	527,500	505,400
New appropriations:	7,686,104	2,035,199
Two battle ships.....	1,320,000	1,674,170
One torpedo cruiser.....	500,000	(*)
Ten torpedo boats.....	1,000,000	(*)
One new New York.....	895,000	1,253,533
	11,401,104	4,963,902

* Finished.

Upon this basis the total amount required for carrying on the work in the year 1894 on the vessels authorized by bill and amendment would be only $4,963,000. And so I say that the duty of expediting this work is not only obligatory upon us, but it involves so comparatively small additional outlay that we can not manfully or reasonably fail to do our duty.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I will say, in answer to the one objection that the gentleman from Alabama, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, will bring forward in this discussion, in the statement of his belief that it is unnecessary and useless to authorize the construction of these ships now because we can not procure the armor in time to complete them, I will endeavor to show later, sir, that that belief is absolutely unfounded. I will content myself now by making the simple statement that there will be no difficulty whatever in providing all the armor which is required for these ships long before they will be ready for their armor. And, as a matter of fact, I may add that the manufacture of the armor for the armored cruiser

New York, provided for in the bill, will probably take longer to procure than the heavy armor for the battle ships, for the reason that it is in more complicated shapes and requires more handling than the heavy armor.

The statement that there will be no advantage in authorizing the battle ships now, because they would not be completed any sooner than if deferred a year, is without foundation. I have the highest authority, that of the Department and that of the manufacturers themselves, that while there has been naturally and necessarily some delay in the inauguration and installation of the great plant necessary to do such ponderous work that hereafter it will be so rapidly accelerated that there will be no trouble in furnishing armor for all the ships that will be provided for by Congress.

The chairman says in his report that we ought to have ten or twelve battle ships, and in another place he says:

We might well authorize all these battle ships in four years.

I agree with him fully in both statements, but to carry out that view we must certainly begin now.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I hope that the members of the House of Representatives will deal with this matter as with a great affair of national concern, for they will recognize that throughout our entire history the prestige of the United States Navy has been one of the sources of American national pride, and we can not maintain our position as one of the foremost nations of the earth without asserting our dignity and our power upon the high seas. We can not afford, when such an occurrence as that in the harbor of Valparaiso is reported to us, to satisfy ourselves with the remark that I once heard made, that if those Americans had staid at home they would not have gotten into any trouble. We can not afford to abase American citizenship to that degree or to declare that the rights of our people shall have no protection abroad. It should be a matter of pride and of duty to every Representative of the greatest nation upon the earth to provide that its greatness shall be respected everywhere upon the earth, on the lands and on the seas. [Applause.]

Mr. HERBERT. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SCOTT].

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to remind the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE], who has just expressed such solicitude for the safety of this country from foreign invasion, that since the war of 1812 there has been no suggestion of the need of a navy to repel a foreign foe. This war was simply the embers of the Revolution. England was unwilling to surrender the Colonies and the rights she claimed, and pursued American seamen. It is seventy-seven years since this war closed, and since then no danger has even been suggested from abroad.

The committee recommends that one new ship be authorized this year. Pursuing the policy of one ship each year we shall have the greatest navy of any nation on earth if it be as long till the next as to the last naval war. With the vessels now authorized and those in existence the provisions in the bill as reported are ample. The gentleman who has just spoken is not only solicitous for the safety of the country, but is equally concerned for the business of the shipbuilders. It will hardly be seriously insisted that unnecessary works should be authorized merely to engage the energies and give profits to the shipbuilders of the country.

In discussing this measure, Mr. Chairman, I desire to sustain it from a standpoint somewhat different from that taken by the committee. The time has come when nations should cease warfare. The progress of civilization, Christianity, humanity, demands that swords shall be sheathed. While force dominated reason and might made right, war, pillage, and destruction were the legitimate occupation of nations. Man's blood was shed by man that puerile potentates might have fuller scope for oppression and debauchery. In this land, enlightened by the genial rays of intelligence, where brute force has been dethroned and the fraternity of man holds sway, there is little apology for war. The time may never come when all thought of repelling force with force will be abandoned, and something of a navy should be maintained. The time has come, however, when the nations of the world prefer to trade with each other. They do not seek to fight. War destroys. Human sacrifices must be prepared for the altar of strife. Life, health, happiness, and property are the food upon which fattens this insatiate monster. To build up homes, to secure the greatest measure of human happiness, ought to inspire truest and most emphatic support on all questions. When assailed, and national rights are trampled under foot, governments may by the sword maintain their inalienable rights. The intense oppression of Great Britain led the otherwise peaceful colonists to fight with desperation that the dearest boon of liberty of person and property might be preserved. No other excuse can be given for the carnage and pillage of war than the defense of essential rights assailed.

When nations were prevented from communication with each other by natural obstructions there was greater temptation to resort to force to avenge trivial grievances. Now, with the ocean spanned with wires throbbing with human thought and commercial intelligence, the great waters covered by fleet-footed vessels which bring London, Liverpool, Berlin, and Paris within speaking distance of New York, Chicago, Boston, and New Orleans, men do not seek to fight. They want to trade. Railroads and canals have beaten down the mountain barriers and brought the products of the West and Northwest to the very doors of seaport cities.

Space and time have been almost annihilated, and people once far away are now nearest neighbors and should be closest friends. To talk of war is to speak of family strife among nations. The right of conquest has given place to the settled doctrines of the rights of property. Difficult of access, possessing little wealth and fewer attractions, our nation could not even afford to fight Chile. The infant Republic, just emerged from the rule of a dictator and yet torn asunder by the contending factions, had our sympathy rather than our hate. The people's love of humanity and popular freedom were greater than the disposition to make a show of strength against the puny republic. England could not afford to allow Chile to fight. Her trade was of too much importance. She would aggravate the contention in order to cement Chilean trade to her and to wean it from our country. This accomplished, British commerce speedily ended all thought of war. Even the slender cords of trade held in the United States are supposed to have drawn our once bellicose State Department into commendable conservatism.

The Bering Sea dispute was a master play of politics. No sane man believed that Great Britain for all the seals in the salt water would come nearer to war with the United States than belligerent diplomacy. Her large capital invested in American enterprises and securities was too sensitive to the blight of war. Her trade interests would have overthrown in the twinkling of an eye any administration that would permit any but inevitable war with the United States.

Hemmed in as our nation is by tariff walls; there is yet enough of commercial interest to destroy any possibility of war with England. Every farmer knows that to shut up the ports of Liverpool to his surplus grain would make him almost penniless. Grain, cotton, and provisions must go abroad, and to England, or the farmers will become helpless with their crops. Talk then of war was idle. Neither country wanted it; neither would have it. Settlement of all questions by intelligent arbitration is inevitable between the two greatest nations on the globe. Mr. Chairman, if a presidential election were not impending, the lurid lightnings of war would not have flashed to scare innocent citizens and tickle-wily politicians. The ties of trade with rapid communication and speedy transportation are sufficient to insure the settlement of all international questions in which our Republic is interested. Our country no more than Great Britain desired a Bering Sea warfare.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] contends that it was the fear of a conflict with our improved Navy that prevented war with Great Britain, the mistress of the seas, no less than with Chile, the pigmy republic of South America. If the mightiest naval power on earth should thus be held in check by our present incomplete and confessedly inferior naval equipment why should there be such hot haste in building so many more of these enormously expensive war vessels to rot and rust from disuse?

Abroad, puny monarchs may be compelled to fight to maintain their thrones. But these are rapidly passing away before the onward march of civilization and popular power. Our country, however, is doubly armed with intelligent and sovereign citizens intent on material, social, and religious progress. Our national fortifications are the high seas. Conscious in our own strength we do not need the presence of a strong navy. No nation will seek to attack us. We have no time or inclination to go abroad for conquest. Since the days of Jefferson and his acquisition of a new empire by the Louisiana purchase, no thought of territory by conquest has ever been entertained. Even conquered Mexico was given an agreed consideration for her possessions. Alaska and her seal-fishery disputes were acquired by purchase. The policy of our nation has ever been to grow by peaceful acquisitions.

It is highly proper that Great Britain, weakened by her island throne and weighted down by monarchy and insipid aristocracy, should be compelled to maintain a naval armament sufficient to ward off designing powers and hold together her widely separated dependencies. Our nation so intrenched and solidified needs no such show of force. Our navy does not need to be mistress of the seas. We have no time for such expensive nonsense. A strongly armed man is often tempted to commit deeds that render him forever after miserable. So of a country. A strong standing army and powerful navy are evidence of weakness and fear. They too often tempt to war and oppression. Not only are modern nations driven to peaceful settlement of differences by arbitration through considerations of trade and commerce, but the development of the means of destruction of human life has been so great that war now means depopulation and annihilation.

Human ingenuity seems to have exhausted itself in engineering for killing men. The world therefore must not fight. The amount saved by the reduction of this naval appropriation bill over former ones can be used to pay pensions to the soldiers maimed and torn in the last war. The great army of men whose life, death, and limbs were given as a sacrifice on the altar of their country should lead our thought away from such conflicts. To preserve life, property, and happiness plans should be made to avoid carnage and bloodshed. The time of the realization of the vision of the great prophet is almost here.

Many centuries ago Isaiah said:

They shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks. Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.

Trade, commerce, humanity, civilization, Christianity have led to the fulfillment of this prophecy. The bellowing cannon is silenced in the greater roar of the machinery of modern industry and the smoke of battle lost in the black clouds which roll from furnaces and factories of human activities. Human progress stands upon the troubled sea of international discord and gently commands "Peace, be still." The storm is hushed, reason rules, and there is a great calm.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] that inasmuch as it is quite late, and no gentleman will desire to begin a speech at this hour, the gentleman now submit to an adjournment.

Mr. HERBERT. At the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], I will move that the committee do now rise. The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHIVELY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the naval appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HERBERT. I move that the House do now adjourn.

ELEVENTH CENSUS.

Mr. FITHIAN. Pending that, I wish to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk. It is reported from the Committee on the Eleventh Census, and is in regard to the investigation of the Superintendent of the Census.

The resolution was read at length for information.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. FITHIAN. I will say for the information of gentlemen that a resolution has already been adopted by the House, instructing the Committee on the Eleventh Census to investigate the Superintendent of the Census. This is a resolution coming from the committee for the appointment of a subcommittee, and to give them authority to visit various cities.

Mr. DINGLEY. To perambulate over the country.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It seems to me that that should be brought up when more of the members of the House are present.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there need be no haste about this matter.

Mr. FITHIAN. The chairman of the committee had to go away and he asked me to call it up. There is no objection on the part of the minority of the committee, as I understand.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I think in view of the fact that so few of the members are present, I will have to object for the time being.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; in which concurrence was requested:

C. W. BURS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Attorney-General, submitting the claim of C. W. Burs, of Elreno, Okla., for services as police officer, which he desires shall be considered in connection with a matter contained in House Executive Document No. 144; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

EXPENSES OF FIRST AND SECOND CLASS POSTMASTERS AT CONVENTION IN WASHINGTON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Postmaster-General, transmitting, in response to resolution of April 6, 1892, certain information to the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

CHAUNCEY M. LOCKWOOD.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 527) for the relief of the legal representatives of Chauncey M. Lockwood; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that that bill be considered at the present time. It simply refers the case to the Court of Claims. A House bill of a similar character has been considered by a committee of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of this bill.

Mr. ATKINSON. I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HERMANN. Then I ask unanimous consent that it may lie on the Speaker's table for the present.

Mr. ATKINSON. I shall not object to that.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

JAMES M. WILLBUR.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 466) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust and settle the account of James M. Willbur with the United States, and to pay said Willbur such sum of money as he may be justly and equitably entitled to; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. ROCKWELL. I ask unanimous consent that this bill lie on the Speaker's table for the present.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

RECORDS OF VOLUNTEER ARMIES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2305) to provide for the permanent preservation and custody of the records of the volunteer armies, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that that bill be allowed to lie on the Speaker's table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following Senate bills; which were severally read a first and second time, referred to the committees indicated below, and ordered to be printed:

ASSESSMENTS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (H. R. 5978), with an amendment of the Senate thereto, proposing to amend the title so as to read "An act to extend the time for making an assessment of real estate in the District of Columbia, outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown."

The SPEAKER. This is a House bill, with a Senate amendment, which the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPILL] asked to have concurred in yesterday, but the bill was passed over at the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON. I made the request on account of the absence of my colleague on the committee, Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the House concur in the Senate amendment. It is only an amendment as to the title. It was laid over, I believe, because of an idea that it might interfere with some investigation ordered by the House, but it does not interfere with any investigation.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I asked yesterday that this bill should be permitted to lie on the table, because an investigation had been ordered by the House into the assessment now being made of city property for taxation. I thought that possibly this would be the only means by which we could obtain any relief from that investigation, but with the explanation made by the gentleman from Ohio I think the amendment of the Senate should be concurred in.

The amendment was concurred in.

LINEAL PROMOTION IN THE ARMY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (H. R. 328) to establish lineal promotion throughout the several lines of artillery, cavalry, and infantry of the Army, with amendments of the Senate thereto; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CHAMPLAIN AND ST. LAWRENCE RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (H. R. 4275) to grant to the Champlain and St. Lawrence Railroad Company a right of way across the Fort Montgomery military reservation, with amendments thereto; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

NATIONAL BANKS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (H. R. 5681) for the general control and to promote safety of national banks, with amendments of the Senate thereto.

The SPEAKER. This bill will be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry before the reference is made. Will the bill be privileged on being reported back from the committee? I assume that it will.

The SPEAKER. The rule is, as to House bills with Senate amendments, that it shall be in order, when they are laid before the House, to move to concur in the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. DINGLEY. But will the bill have that privilege after it is reported back from the committee?

The SPEAKER. Whether the privilege extends to the bill at that stage the Chair is not quite certain, not having specially examined the question. The rule, as the Chair has said, is that it shall be in order, when House bills with Senate amendments are laid before the House, if they involve no appropriation, to move to proceed to consider the amendments; but whether the same rule will obtain after the bill has been reported back from the committee, the Chair can not say with certainty, not having looked into the matter. If the gentleman desires, and there be no objection, this bill can lie on the Speaker's table for the present.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, I will ask that the bill lie on the Speaker's table for the present.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, does not that bill go back to the Committee on Banking and Currency under the rule?

The SPEAKER. It is in order when House bills with Senate amendments are laid before the House to move to proceed to consider the amendments. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] asks that this bill lie on the Speaker's table for the present.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to know what the amendments are.

The SPEAKER. They are quite long.

Mr. BLAND. I understand that this is a proposition to give to the banks the power to issue the full amount of the bonds, and I object.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. The amendment of the Senate proposes that national banks be authorized to issue circulating notes to the amount of the par value of the bonds deposited by them. The original proposition of the bill is totally different. The bill involves no appropriation of money or anything of that kind. As the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON], the chairman of our committee, is absent I ask that the bill be passed over until he returns.

Mr. BLAND. I prefer to have the bill go regularly to the committee. This is a very important measure, and I do not want it to lie on the table to be called up and possibly put through when nobody may be paying attention to it.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to call attention to the exact language of the rule:

And House bills with Senate amendments which do not require consideration in Committee of the Whole may be at once disposed of as the House may determine.

Mr. BURROWS. What rule is that?

Mr. DOCKERY. That is the last clause of section 1, of Rule XXIV.

The SPEAKER. That agrees with the statement already made by the Chair.

Mr. BLAND. Well, I move to refer the bill, with the amendments of the Senate, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. DINGLEY. Allow me to make a single suggestion. I have no particular preference myself in regard to this matter; but as the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency is absent, it occurs to me it would be but courtesy to him to allow the bill to lie on the table until he returns. I appeal to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. This is too important a bill for us to extend courtesy in such a way that the bill might be taken from the Speaker's table and passed when the attention of members of the House might not be particularly called to it. I insist on my motion.

Mr. DINGLEY. But let me say to the gentleman that it is probable the bill can not possibly be reached unless it be considered at the present time under the rule.

Mr. BLAND. Well, I hope it may never be reached and never passed.

Mr. DINGLEY. It would seem that courtesy to the chairman of the committee would suggest the course I have indicated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] moves that the bill the title of which has been reported be referred, with the amendments of the Senate, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. A parliamentary inquiry: As I understand this bill comes back from the Senate with amendments.

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. We could vote more understandingly if the amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. The amendments of the Senate will be read. The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, April 13, 1892.

Resolved, That the bill from the House of Representatives (H. R. 5681) entitled "An act for the better control of and to promote the safety of national banks" do pass with the following amendments:

Page 2, after line 25, insert:

"SEC. 4. That upon any deposit already or hereafter made of any United States bonds bearing interest in the manner required by law, any national banking association making the same shall be entitled to receive from the Comptroller of the Currency circulating notes of different denominations, in blank, registered and countersigned as provided by law, not exceeding in the whole amount the par value of the bonds deposited: Provided, That at no time shall the total amount of such notes issued by any such association exceed the amount at such time actually paid in of its capital stock. The Comptroller of the Currency shall prescribe a form of bond which shall hereafter be used by all national banks to secure the fidelity of cashiers and all other officers of whom bonds are required. The examiners of national banks shall from time to time report the amount and character of the sureties of such bonds taken by any bank by them examined, and the said Comptroller may require any bank to take such other or further surety as he may think fit."

Page 2, after line 25, insert:

"SEC. 5. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

Resolved, That the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the said bill and amendments.

Ordered, That Mr. SHEPHERD, Mr. ALDRICH, and Mr. HARRIS be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Missouri is that this bill, with the amendments of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move that the House nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate, and agree to the conference which has been asked.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. In the absence of the chairman of the committee it has been agreed, after conference among the other members of the committee, that we ask to have the bill sent back to the committee without any action at present by the House. I presume that will be satisfactory.

Mr. DINGLEY. The House ought to act understandingly on this matter. As I understand, the action proposed is practically an end of the bill. The moment it goes back to the committee it has no privilege.

Mr. BRETZ. That is what we want; we hope it will be the end of the bill.

Mr. BLAND. Would a negative vote on nonconcurring be tantamount to concurrence?

The SPEAKER. The motion to refer must, the Chair thinks, be first put.

The question being taken, the motion of Mr. BLAND was agreed to; and the bill, with the amendments of the Senate, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows: To Mr. COOPER, for ten days, on account of important business. To Mr. WADSWORTH, for two days, on account of the death of a relative.

O. P. COBB AND OTHERS.

The SPEAKER. Yesterday the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SCOTT] asked unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill; but, by some arrangement, the matter went over until this morning. The Chair will again submit the request. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1376) referring to the Court of Claims the claims of O. P. Cobb and others.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, that bill is too important to be called up for consideration by unanimous consent. I demand the regular order.

Mr. SCOTT. I have an amendment here which I think will obviate any objection the gentleman may have to the bill.

Mr. KILGORE. I demand the regular order.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE, NOYES VS. ROCKWELL.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit my separate views on one feature of the election case of Noyes vs. Rockwell, from the State of New York, heretofore submitted by the committee.

The SPEAKER. The views of the gentleman will be printed, to accompany the report of the committee.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, at the instance of several gentlemen I withdraw the demand for the regular order, but not my objection to the bill presented by the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects to that bill?

Mr. KILGORE. I do.

Mr. BERGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 730) for the relief of James A. Finley.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KILGORE and Mr. BUTLER objected.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ENLOE. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of the standing and select committees for reports.

Under the call of committees for reports, bills were severally reported, with the accompanying reports, ordered to be printed, and referred to the committees indicated:

EULOGIES ON THE LATE JOHN R. GAMBLE.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution submitted by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc. That there be printed the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the Hon. John R. Gamble, late a Representative from the State of South Dakota, 8,000 copies, of which number 2,000 shall be delivered to the Senators and Representatives of the State of South Dakota, which shall include 50 copies to be bound in full morocco, to be delivered to the family of the deceased; and of those remaining 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 4,000 copies for the House of Representatives; and the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to have engraved and printed a portrait of the said John R. Gamble, to accompany the said eulogies.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee have considered the House concurrent resolution to print eulogies delivered in Congress upon the Hon. John R. Gamble, late a Representative from the State of South Dakota, and direct me to report the same with the recommendation that it do pass. The estimated cost of the same is $2,470.

The resolution was agreed to.

PUBLIC PRINTING.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a report, not for immediate consideration, but in order that it may be printed and the bill reported by title and recommended to the Committee on Printing. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the committee have leave to report this bill for consideration at any time, not to interfere with appropriation or revenue bills. It is the bill to regulate printing for the Government.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill, after which the Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1549) providing for the public printing and binding and distribution of public documents.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee submits this report and asks that the bill be printed and recommended to the Committee on Printing, and that that committee have leave to report it at any time for consideration, not to interfere with revenue or appropriation bills. Is there objection?

Mr. MCCREARY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if this is the bill which passed the Senate, and which is, to a certain extent, like the House bill that was under consideration at the beginning of the session?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is, but with certain amendments made by our committee to make it conform, I think, to the wishes of the House.

Mr. MCCREARY. But you desire no action now?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is it the same bill which was before the House early in the session, with modifications?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, with certain modifications.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BUNN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, and, pending that motion, I desire to ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1466) for the relief of the legal representatives of Henry H. and Charlotte K. Sibley, and that the amendment offered thereto in Committee of the Whole in the nature of a substitute by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] be considered as reported favorably to the House, and that the previous question be ordered on the same to the engrossment and third reading, and that a ye-and-nay vote be taken thereon.

I desire in that connection—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will first submit the request of the gentleman.

Mr. MCCREARY. I ask that the motion made by the gentleman from North Carolina be read by the Clerk, as we could not hear it distinctly.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar; and, pending that, asks unanimous consent for the adoption of the order which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of House bill 1466, for the relief of the legal representatives of Henry H. and Charlotte K. Sibley, and that the amendment offered thereto in Committee of the Whole in the nature of a substitute by Mr. BYNUM of Indiana be considered as reported favorably to the House, and that the previous question be ordered on the same to the engrossment and third reading, and that a ye-and-nay vote be taken thereon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina, in connection with this request, desires to make a statement.

Mr. GROUT. I have no objection to the statement, but reserve the right to object to the adoption of the order.

The SPEAKER. Of course the right to object will be reserved.

Mr. BUNN. Mr. Speaker, in connection with that request, as I understand some gentlemen desire to debate the bill, I will state that this request does not relate to debate upon the final passage of the bill; it is only to the engrossment and third reading of the bill, and when the question on the passage of the bill is reached gentlemen who desire to debate it will have an opportunity; but I hope there will be no objection to this agreement, so that we can proceed to the consideration of other business.

Mr. GROUT. After the discussion upon this bill some weeks ago, I think the day following I received a letter giving some information concerning the granting of this patent. I put that letter into the hands of a notary of this city, and a certain affidavit was taken. Now, if that letter and affidavit can be read, I shall make no objection; otherwise I shall.

Mr. BUNN. It does not relate to any discussion which may arise on the final passage of the bill?

Mr. ATKINSON. I see no reason why this bill should be taken out of the ordinary course of procedure in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania object?

Mr. ATKINSON. I do.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TUCKER. Is it in order now to limit debate in the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. What is the condition of the bill in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. BUNN. Debate on this bill has already been exhausted by general consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that by unanimous consent debate had been limited and exhausted on the bill in committee, and the question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the object of the gentleman from North Carolina is to get the Sibley bill out of the way, so that we can get to other bills; and as I understand his resolution, it does not prohibit debate on the final passage of the bill. It seems to me, therefore, that it would be good policy to get that bill, which has consumed two or three days now, out of the way, so that we can get to the other bills on the Private Calendar, and when that bill comes up again it will be upon the same footing that it was before.

Mr. ATKINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the bill shall be considered as laid aside for the day, not to lose its place on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. TUCKER. I object.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

The question was put, and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, Mr. HATCH in the chair.

HENRY H. AND CHARLOTTE K. SIBLEY.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the Clerk will report the unfinished business.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1466) for the relief of the personal representatives and heirs of Henry H. and Charlotte K. Sibley.

Be it enacted, etc., That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized to pay to the heirs and personal representatives of Henry H. and Charlotte K. Sibley, deceased, the sum of $37,700.11, which sum, when so paid and received by the parties aforesaid, shall be in full satisfaction of all and every claim or demand against the Government of the United States on the part of said heirs and personal representatives growing out of a contract made by Henry H. Sibley, in his lifetime, with the said Government, to wit, February 18, 1858, for the use of a patented invention known as the "Sibley tent."

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman. By the Calendar furnished us that does not appear to be the first bill on the Calendar. The first bill seems—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that this is the "unfinished business." The bills the gentleman refers to were laid aside by unanimous consent.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. And this was under consideration when the committee last rose?

Mr. BUNN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TUCKER. I ask that the amendment be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will cause the record to be examined, so as to see what the condition of the bill was when last under consideration. [After a pause.] The pending question on his bill is the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM], which the Clerk will now read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"The Court of Claims is authorized to adjudicate the claim of the legal personal representatives of Henry H. Sibley, deceased, growing out of a contract made by Henry H. Sibley in his lifetime with the Government of the United States for the use of a patented invention in the manufacture of a tent known as the Sibley tent; and that for this purpose the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction, notwithstanding any bar of the statute of limitations.

Sec. 2. That either party to any suit that may be brought under the provisions of this act shall have the right to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from any final judgment the Court of Claims may render.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman, is this still open to debate?

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee last had this bill under consideration debate had closed upon this amendment and a vote was ordered by tellers, no quorum having appeared. Before that vote was determined the committee rose and the House adjourned. The pending question is on the amendment.

Mr. GROUT. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to have the letter read to which I referred a moment ago, and also an affidavit in connection with the letter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] asks unanimous consent that the letter referred to by him may be read as a part of his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. BUNN. I object. Debate has been closed.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman declared that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. GROUT. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 77, noes 1.

Mr. GROUT. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum being made, the Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Vermont, Mr. GROUT, and the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. BUNN.

Pending the count by tellers.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my point of no quorum, with the understanding—

Mr. BUNN. And now, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my objection to the reading of the letter which the gentleman from Vermont desires to have read.

The letter was read, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 26, 1892.
SIR: Having read the proceedings of the House in this morning's RECORD in regard to the Sibley tent business, I wish to say to you as an old soldier, it is a shame and disgrace to allow this thing to go any further.

Capt. and Bvt. Maj. Sibley never invented that wigwam tent. It was his company clerk, True, or Drew, a French Canadian, invented it, and shortly after making the first tent he was locked up in the guardhouse for drunkenness. After his discharge from Company I, Second Dragoons, at Fort Graham, Tex., about forty years ago, Sibley went to Washington and got a patent for True's tent, and the whole squadron, Companies F and I, Second Dragoons, were surprised to hear of this business. There are now two men, and perhaps more, at the Soldiers' Home, Washington, D. C., who can tell you all about this alleged steal from poor True. These inmates of the Home are Sergt. P. Devine and Private Barrett, both of Sibley's squadron at that time, who saw the tent made. The tripod used was made out of a wagon tire.

I am, sir, very truly and respectfully yours,

JOHN CODY,

Once a Member of Company F, Second Dragoons.

Hon. W. W. GROUT.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman, as I said a moment since, I put that letter in the hands of a notary, and asked him to get the affidavits of the two inmates of the Soldiers' Home referred to,

but he found that one of them was not there. The affidavit of the other I have here, and I ask that it be now read.

The affidavit was read, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 29, 1892.

My name is Patrick Devine, and I am at this time an inmate of the Soldiers' Home, in the District of Columbia. I entered the United States Army about March 18, 1848, as a member of Company F, Second Dragoons—Capt. R. A. Arnold's dragoons—and served a whole term of four years, and soon after being discharged enlisted in Company I, Second Dragoons—Capt. H. H. Sibley's dragoons. I knew said Capt. Sibley well, and was present when the first Sibley tent was being patterned and invented at Fort Graham, Tex., about 1852 or 1853.

I saw the canvas cut and spread on the ground and the work of fixing and making this first Sibley tent, or rather the pattern tent. The men who did the work were one James Bott and a Frenchman, so called, by the name of Raux. The work was done just outside of company quarters, back of parade ground, and I remember well seeing it done by the said Bott and Raux, and that I saw them at work on the job several times and saw them lay out the canvas on the ground. I have been informed and believe that Capt. Sibley did apply for and receive a patent on this tent. It was generally believed among the members of the dragoons that the tent was invented by said Bott and Raux instead of by Capt. Sibley. I have been told that Comrade Bott is dead and of Comrade Raux I have seen or heard nothing since that time.

At the time this first tent or tent pattern or model was made we thought little of patents, but were more interested in doing duty; but I clearly remember that it was generally talked and believed at the time that the invention was made by the said Bott and Raux.

PATRICK DEVINE.

District of Columbia, ss:

On this 29th day of March, 1892, personally appeared before me, a notary public in and for the aforesaid District, Patrick Devine, who, being duly sworn, says the affidavit hereto attached is true.

JAY B. SMITH, Notary Public.

Mr. OATES. I wish to ask the gentleman from Vermont whether he offers those papers here for the purpose of defeating the reference of the case to the Court of Claims, or merely for the purpose of putting the Attorney-General in possession of the means of getting this evidence. I trust that my friend does not offer them here to defeat the bill; but if that kind of information exists, it is altogether proper that it should go before the Court of Claims. It is impossible for us to tell here what credibility is to be attached to those statements, and I trust that the gentleman will not urge that kind of evidence for the purpose of defeating the reference to the court.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman, I put this information before the House, because, having come into possession of it, I felt it my duty to do so. And finding these inmates of the Soldiers' Home referred to, I felt it further to be my duty to see whether they really knew anything on the subject and if they did, to get their affidavits. As the gentleman from Alabama suggests, this matter could be inquired into by the Court of Claims; but every lawyer knows that if a patent has been obtained through fraud that defeats the patent. If Sibley was not the real inventor of this tent it cuts the ground completely from under this claim. This testimony may be explained, or perhaps the statements are wholly groundless, although the writer of the letter, I have been informed, is a credible and intelligent gentleman, and he certainly writes an intelligent letter; but, as I said before, if the statements are true they really defeat this whole claim. All I can say is that, for myself, I shall consider this as an added reason to those which before were quite sufficient for voting against the allowance of this claim in any form.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon this question the tellers report—ayes 103, noes 2—

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of no quorum.

Mr. BUNN. It was the understanding that that point was withdrawn by agreement.

Mr. TUCKER. That is not good faith. I ask now, Mr. Chairman, that that letter and affidavit be excluded from the RECORD.

Mr. BUNN. No, no.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] will not insist on the point of no quorum. The point was withdrawn upon a condition, and the condition has been complied with, and I think that both sides ought to feel bound to see that the agreement is carried out.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. If there was an agreement between the parties of course I do not wish to interfere with it, but it has seemed to me that, in addition to the evidence now brought forward by the gentleman from Vermont, there were already abundant reasons why the members of this House should stop this bill here without referring it to the Court of Claims or doing anything further about the matter.

Mr. TUCKER. The gentleman will remember that the evidence introduced by the gentleman from Vermont would not be in but for the agreement.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that by order of the committee all debate upon this proposition has been closed.

Mr. ENLOE. I understand that. Debate can be had only by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The unanimous consent, which was granted simply for a brief statement of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] and the reading of these papers, has been exhausted. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] withdraw his point?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. If there was an agreement between the gentleman from Vermont—

The CHAIRMAN. There was an agreement under which, as the Chair stated, the point made by the gentleman from Vermont was withdrawn, and the gentleman from North Carolina withdrew his objection to the reading of the papers. The gentleman from Vermont then made his statement and the papers were read.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. In view of the statement made by the Chair I withdraw the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers report—ayes 103, noes 2; and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. ATKINSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. ENLOE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ENLOE. I would like to know whether it was not agreed by unanimous consent that debate should be closed on the bill and the amendments and a vote be taken. I do not understand that the bill is still open to amendment.

Mr. BUNN. If I understand the order of the House, debate is not now in order upon any amendment to this bill, but amendments are in order. Debate has been closed by order of the House.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. When was that done?

Mr. BUNN. The last time this bill was under consideration debate on the bill and amendments was closed; but amendments without debate are now in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will examine the RECORD to ascertain what was the order of the House.

Mr. BUNN. I think the Chair will find my statement to be correct.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I think it will be found that the agreement did not go so far as to cut off the offering of amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. While the Chair is examining the RECORD the Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON].

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

"Provided, That in no event shall the finding of the Court of Claims exceed $37,700.11."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read the action taken by the House in regard to closing debate on this bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MANSUR. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar; and, pending that motion, I move that all debate on the bill (H. R. 1466) for the relief of the personal representatives and heirs of Henry H. and Charlotte K. Sibley be limited to ten minutes on each side.

Mr. ATKINSON. I move to amend that by making it half an hour on a side.

Mr. MANSUR. Let us compromise on twenty minutes. We have had this bill debated for three days.

Mr. ATKINSON. There are some gentlemen on our side who want to speak. We would very much prefer thirty minutes.

Mr. MANSUR. Make it twenty minutes on a side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] moves that the House resolve into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, and pending that the gentleman from Missouri moves that when the House goes into Committee of the Whole all debate on the pending bill be limited to forty minutes, twenty minutes on each side.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I move to amend that by making it an hour, or thirty minutes on each side.

The question was taken on Mr. OUTHWAITE's amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri as amended.

The motion as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ATKINSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, as I understand the action of the House—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the action of the House as just read cuts off any further debate upon the bill or any amendment. The language of the order was that "all debate" be limited to thirty minutes on each side, which time has been already occupied.

Mr. ATKINSON. I submit that the order as read covers only debate upon the bill; that amendments which may be offered are a matter separate and aside from the bill, and are not included in the order. I do not propose to debate this question at very great length, but I believe under the rule I am entitled to five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not; the Chair is advised that this order of the House for the closing of debate has been executed, and that the occupant of the Chair on Friday last decided that no further debate was in order.

Mr. ATKINSON. That was upon the bill and the then pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There was an amendment pending, offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM].

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I wish to ask a question for information. The suggestion was made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] that the evidence which has been submitted here this morning by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] might be considered by the Court of Claims, and that this might be a reason for sending this claim there. I wish to ask whether it is not true that in law the validity of a patent can not be inquired into except by a direct proceeding, which must be commenced by the Attorney-General, and that therefore this evidence, while it might properly influence the votes of members here as to whether they would pass this bill, can not be used as evidence before the Court of Claims in determining whether these heirs should be paid.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman present this as a parliamentary question?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I want to know from the Chair whether I am correct in that view.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hardly thinks the question of the gentleman is within the purview of a parliamentary inquiry. The Chair does not want to lay down the law for the Court of Claims.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I desired to bring that question before the House, and inasmuch as there can be no debate I sought to put it as a question to the Chair. I will state, however, that according to my understanding of the law this evidence could not be judicially examined except in collateral proceedings instituted by the Attorney-General.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must say to the gentleman from Illinois that this is in the nature of debate.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. All right.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Chair will allow me a single suggestion. I understand that all debate was closed on this bill; but at that time there was no amendment pending, and it seems to me the agreement does not cut off debate on amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The language is as broad as it can be made, the Chair thinks, and if amendments were pending at that time it certainly included them in the general order limiting the debate.

Mr. HOLMAN. But, Mr. Chairman, the universal practice has been, if the Chair will pardon the suggestion, that where it is desired to cut off debate upon amendments as well as upon the bill, it is so specified in the request. I think I have never known a ruling where by agreement or order of the House debate should cease on a bill, or a paragraph of a bill, without specifying also on amendments pending or to be offered, that it has been held to apply to both.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the then occupant of the Chair, after the order was obtained, seemed to entertain the idea that such was the meaning of the order.

Mr. HOLMAN. It would be very perilous to establish a ruling of that character. It has been the uniform practice of the House that, when debate is closed on a bill, or on a section, or on a paragraph, unless it also specified the amendments, it only closed the general debate upon such paragraph. It will be perilous in the extreme to rule that closing debate simply on a bill or section would also close it on any amendments that would be offered. Because the right of amendment would continue after the debate is closed, and certainly amendments should be permitted at least to be explained.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana will certainly recognize that the House has it always in its power, either by a vote or by unanimous consent, to stop all debate.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. And this order was that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, and pending the motion that all debate—

Mr. HOLMAN. On the bill.

The CHAIRMAN (continuing). On the pending bill should be limited to one hour. The Chair thinks it is clear that it also includes debate on amendments, and the Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That in no event shall the findings of the Court of Claims exceed $37,000.11.

Mr. ATKINSON. I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to occupy the floor for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. ATKINSON. Mr. Chairman this amendment is strictly in line with the recommendation of the committee itself in this report. Under the amendment already adopted by the last vote this claimant would have a right to recover the whole sum of $100,000, or rather three times $37,000. But the committee in their report believe that this lady should be restricted in her recovery to only one-third of the entire claim of Henry H. Sibley. The report adopted by the committee is clear on this subject. I quote from it:

We suppose that in an ordinary case Congress would remove without question the bar of the statute of limitations in the case of a person who had failed to bring a suit under such circumstances, but the committee seriously question whether they ought to waive the bar of the statute of limitations to enable a person to bring an action against the United States under a contract for a military invention the use of which invention by the Government was largely increased, and, indeed, almost wholly occasioned, by a rebellion in which the claimant himself took part. If Mr. Sibley were himself the person seeking relief this objection would, in the opinion of a portion of the committee, be fatal to his claim.

But we think, on an appeal to the sense of equity and to the indulgence of Congress, the case of Mrs. Sibley and her children stands differently. She was unquestionably loyal to the Government, as were all her kindred. She endeavored to induce her husband to remain loyal. As he is dead, one-third of his property would become hers, either by his will or by the policy of most of the States in spite of his will, if he undertook to convert it from her.

Now, under the circumstances, and in view of the fact that the committee itself recommends only that this lady should be allowed a dower interest and no more, I think it but proper that the House should limit her right of recovery to the amount that the committee claims she is entitled to.

Mr. OATES. Let me ask the gentleman if this bill authorizes an adjudication on the part of the Court of Claims?

Mr. ATKINSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. OATES. And waives any and all defenses that may be made by the Government?

Mr. ATKINSON. The amendment which authorizes this claimant to go to the Court of Claims expressly waives the statute of limitations, and that is all that is waived in the amendment as I understand it. It is not a part of the bill itself, but an amendment to the bill as originally presented. The bill appropriated the sum of $37,000 to this lady and her children. But the amendment authorizes them to recover the entire sum, or something over $100,000. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that it is no more than equitable and right that this recovery, if recovery be had at all, should be limited, as the committee have advised in their report, to her one-third interest; and for that reason I have suggested the amendment, which I hope will be adopted.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. No debate is in order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I am not asking to be heard, but I am asking for recognition to make a motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois—

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "thousand."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] proposes an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON], which is to strike out the word "thousand." The Clerk will read the amendment as it would read with the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS].

The Clerk read as follows:

Thirty-seven seven hundred dollars and eleven cents.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. That covers more than was due at the time Sibley went into the rebellion.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the entire amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That in no event shall the finding of the Court of Claims exceed thirty-seven seven hundred dollars and eleven cents.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I ask the Clerk to read the amendment as it was proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON].

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That in no event shall the finding of the Court of Claims exceed thirty-seven thousand seven hundred dollars and eleven cents.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] moves to amend that amendment by striking out the word "thousand." The question is upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS].

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois (from his seat). Division.

The CHAIRMAN. The yeas have it, and the amendment to the amendment is lost.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I called for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that while the present occupant of the chair is in the chair, gentlemen desiring a division will have to get it under the rule. When the Chair simply hears the word "division" and sees no gentleman rising, he can not tell whether it is demanded by a member or by someone on the outside, or in the galleries.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois (rising). Mr. Chairman, I demand a division.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 14, noes 45.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] makes the point that no quorum has voted, and the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BUNN].

The committee again divided.

Pending the announcement of the tellers,

The CHAIRMAN said: The Chair desires, in connection with the ruling previously made concerning debate, to call the attention of the committee to a further proceeding that was had the other day after the debate closed. The debate had continued for one hour, when the following took place, as appears by the RECORD:

Mr. MANSUR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the bill and amendments be now closed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman, that was what I desired to call attention to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was not aware at the time that there had been any subsequent action on the part of the committee, but this shows the construction placed by the committee upon the order of the House.

The committee having divided, the tellers reported—ayes 1, noes 84.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist upon his point?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I have not withdrawn it. I have offered to do so if gentlemen will accept an amendment of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT].

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum having voted, the Chair will cause the roll to be called.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following members failed to answer to their names:

Alderson.	Cowles.	Lockwood.	Rockwell.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the committee will rise. The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker resumed the chair.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole House, having under consideration bills on the Private Calendar, found itself without a quorum. Thereupon the Chairman caused the roll to be called, under the rule, and 196 members answered to their names. The Chair reports the names of the absentees to the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reports that the committee found itself without a quorum, that he ordered the roll to be called, when 196 gentlemen answered to their names. The names of the absentees will be entered upon the Journal, and the committee will resume its session.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague [Mr. BYNUM] be recorded as present. He is suffering from a chill, and is in the lobby sick.

There was no objection.

The committee resumed its session, Mr. HATCH in the chair. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON], and the tellers will please take their places. In the absence of the gentleman from Illinois, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] will please act as teller.

The tellers took their places; the committee again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 1, noes 65.

Mr. GROUT. No quorum, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ENLOE. I ask for a call of the roll, under the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, when the following-named members failed to respond:

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the committee will rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker resumed the chair.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole House, having under consideration bills upon the Private Calendar, found itself without a quorum; thereupon the Chair caused the roll to be called, when 173 members answered to their names. I report the names of the absentees to the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reports that that committee found itself without a quorum, and that he directed the roll to be called, when 173 gentlemen answered to their names. The names of the absentees will be entered in the Journal, and, under the rule, the committee will resume its session.

Mr. BLAND. Is it in order to move that the House do now adjourn? It is Good Friday, and I think we ought to have a little rest.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the rule to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rule XXIII, clause 2:

"Whenever a Committee of the Whole House find itself without a quorum, the Chairman shall cause the roll to be called, and thereupon the Committee shall rise, and the Chairman shall report the names of the absentees to the House, which shall be entered on the Journal: but if on such call a quorum shall appear, the committee shall thereupon resume its sitting without further order of the House."

Mr. BLAND. I take that, Mr. Speaker, to be subject to another rule, which is that it is always in order to adjourn. I submit the House has a right to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not examined the precedents, but the purpose of the gentleman can be reached by first moving that the committee rise.

Mr. BLAND. I think a motion to adjourn is in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the object of the gentleman from Missouri would be best reached by a motion that the committee rise; still the Chair has not examined the precedents.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Chair is entirely right. Under the rule I have never known a motion to adjourn entertained. When a quorum is present the rule is that the committee shall resume its session at once. The object of the committee rising is to have the names of the absentees spread upon the Journal. If a motion to adjourn is pending in the House, that may be amended by a motion to adjourn to a day certain, which is in order as a substitute, if a gentleman desires to offer it; but when the Committee of the Whole has found itself without a quorum, and the report is made of the absentees, nothing can be done, under the rule, except that the committee shall resume its session.

The SPEAKER. The impression of the Chair has always been that, without the transaction of any business whatever, the committee resumes its session when the presence of a quorum has been reported.

Mr. BURROWS. Nothing can be done, except that the committee resume its session.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not aware of any rulings on the point; but the Chair has often seen the Speaker refuse to entertain any motion.

Mr. BLAND. I will withdraw the motion.

The committee accordingly resumed its session, Mr. HATCH in the chair.

Mr. BLAND. I move that the committee rise.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BLAND. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 72, noes 39.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. HATCH, from the Committee of the Whole House, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 1466), and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BLAND. I move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock to-night, as this is pension night.

Mr. MEREDITH. I move to amend that by striking out "8 o'clock to-night" and inserting "10 o'clock to-morrow morning."

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LANHAM. Would it now be in order to make a motion to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. That is in order.

Mr. LANHAM. Then I make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] moves to take a recess till 8 o'clock this evening for the consideration of business under the special rule, pending which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MEREDITH] moves to amend that by striking out "8 o'clock this evening" and inserting "10 o'clock to-morrow morning," pending which the gentleman from Texas moves that the House do now adjourn. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MARTIN. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 45, nays 133, not voting 150; as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The amendment of Mr. MEREDITH was rejected, and the motion of Mr. BLAND was adopted.

The House according (at 3 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) took a recess until 8 p. m., the Speaker announcing that Mr. RICHARDSON would preside at the evening session as Speaker pro tempore.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 p. m., with Mr. RICHARDSON in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider bills on the Private Calendar under the rule. The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first bill.

HIRAM STIMSON.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1424) for the relief of Hiram Stimson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion now standing against Hiram Stimson, as a late private in Company D, One hundred and fifty-fourth Regiment of New York Volunteer Infantry, and substitute therefor "absent without leave" from July 15, 1863, to September 30, 1864, when he enlisted in Company M in the Twelfth Regiment New York Cavalry Volunteers, and served faithfully until the name of Arnold Bennett until mustered out and honorably discharged on the 23d day of June, 1865; and the Secretary of War is further authorized, upon the surrender of the discharge issued to the said Hiram Stimson under the name of Arnold Bennett or proof of its loss or destruction, to cause to be issued to the said Hiram Stimson, as a member of Company M, Twelfth Regiment New York Cavalry Volunteers, an honorable discharge in his proper name and to correct the official records to show his service under that name.

The report (by Mr. BOWERS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs have had under consideration the bill (H. R. 1424) for the relief of Hiram Stimson, and report the same back as follows:

From the evidence presented by the military record and other papers, including the statement of said Stimson, it appears that he enlisted in the One hundred and fifty-fourth New York Volunteers in September, 1862, and served faithfully until June, 1863, when he received information that his wife was dangerously ill and not expected to recover. Procuring a furlough of ten days he went home, and at the expiration of that time applied for an extension. The surgeon wrote him that he had better make his way back to the regiment as soon as possible, and to stop and report at Washington, and that he would probably be punished as a deserter. This, he says, frightened him, and he did not go back, but went to Michigan and other places until the 30th of September, 1864, when, under the name of Arnold Bennett, he enlisted in Company M, Twelfth New York Cavalry, and served until June 23, when he was honorably discharged, and now holds an honorable discharge from said company.

In view of the fact that this man went back to the service and served faithfully until the detachment was mustered out after the close of the war, your committee recommend that the bill be amended by adding thereto the following: "Provided, however, That no pay or emoluments shall become due by virtue of this act," and as so amended that the bill do pass.

The record furnished by the War Department is appended hereto and made a part of this report.

Case of Hiram Stimson, late private Company D, One hundred and fifty-fourth New York Volunteer Infantry, alias Arnold Bennett, late of Company M, Twelfth New York Cavalry Volunteers.

RECORD AND PENSION DIVISION, January 22, 1892.

Hiram A. Stimson was enrolled August 12, 1862, in Company D, One hundred and fifty-fourth New York Infantry, to serve three years, and mustered into service September 24, 1862.

A descriptive list of deserters, dated July 31, 1863, reports him "deserted July 1, 1863."

The company's muster-out roll, dated June 11, 1865, shows him "deserted, as private, June 1, 1863, from Stevens's Farm, Virginia."

Arnold Bennett was enrolled as a private in Company M, Twelfth New York Cavalry, September 30, 1864, to serve one year, and mustered into service the same date.

He is borne on the muster rolls of said company and regiment as follows: October 31, 1864, "present;" December 31, 1864, "absent on detached service since December 18;" February 28, 1865, "absent, detached service;" April 30, 1865, "present."

He was mustered out of service with a detachment as a private, June 23, 1865.

On the 13th of November, 1891, the soldier, Hiram Stimson, made application for removal of the charge of desertion, declaring under oath that he enlisted in Company D, One hundred and fifty-fourth New York Volunteers, in August, 1862, and served faithfully until April or May, 1863, when he left the regiment under the following circumstances: Upon the recommendation of Dr. Henry Van Aernam, surgeon of the One hundred and fifty-fourth New York Volunteers, he received a furlough of ten days to enable him to visit his wife, who was dangerously ill and not expected to recover, and on the expiration of said furlough made application to Dr. Van Aernam for an extension thereof; that he received from Dr. Van Aernam, in reply, a letter telling him that he (applicant) knew the regulations of war, and had better make his way back to his regiment with as little delay as possible, stopping off at Washington to make his excuses, as he would probably be punished as a deserter; that he became frightened at this and left home for Michigan, where he remained about four months, then returned to Buffalo, N. Y., where he worked for a time, and then went to Canada, remaining there until about the middle of September, 1864; that he then went to Lockport, N. Y., and enlisted in Company M of the Twelfth New York Cavalry, on the 30th of September, 1864, under the name of Arnold Bennett, from which company and regiment he was honorably discharged on the 23d day of June, 1865, and that he now has an honorable discharge from said Company M, Twelfth New York Cavalry, dated June 23, 1865.

Under date of November 16, 1891, the applicant was informed, through his attorney, that his case was not covered by the act of Congress approved March 2, 1889, the only law on the subject now in force, the period of his absence from the service between desertion and reenlistment having exceeded four months; and that neither the legality of his second enlistment nor any claim for service rendered thereunder could be recognized by the Department, the law viewing him as in a constant state of desertion during the whole period of his second enlistment.

Since the date of that communication the status of the case has not been changed, either by the introduction of new testimony or by legislation. Respectfully submitted.

F. C. AINSWORTH,
Major and Surgeon, United States Army.

THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, or any gentleman who is familiar with this case, whether the beneficiary in this bill has acquired any benefit under the other name, for I observe that he served under two names?

Mr. MCKINNEY. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill from the Committee on Military Affairs. Perhaps some member of that committee can give the gentleman the information he desires.

Mr. RAINES. Mr. Chairman, I would say that there is hardly a possibility that in this case or in any similar case a man can have received any benefit under another name. The Pension Office is very particular in searching out, through the records of the War Department, the entire service of the individual, and if they find that in any service in which he has been engaged the record of desertion stands against him he can get no benefit whatever until that is cleared up, even though he may have served faithfully for years after that record was placed against him.

Mr. BAILEY. Then I desire to ask the gentleman from New York if it is not true that, enlisting as this man did, the second time, in the State of Michigan, he obtained something like $1,000 or $1,200 bounty?

Mr. RAINES. I do not know what bounties were paid in the State of Michigan, and I do not remember at what period this man reenlisted. It is possible that a man enlisting a second time as late in the war as 1863 or 1864 might have obtained some bounty. We have found a number of cases where the Department has refused to remove the charge of desertion, under the limited power that they have now under the law, on the ground that it was possible that the man might have received bounty and might have deserted for the purpose of reenlisting and getting the bounty. That may be so in this case. I really do not know anything about the case.

Mr. BAILEY. It was because that seemed to me to be possible, and not unlikely, that I made the inquiry.

It appears to me that any gentleman in charge of a bill of this kind, before asking the committee to approve it, ought to be able to show that the soldier did not obtain by his second enlistment that sort of a benefit to which I have referred.

Mr. RAINES. I understand that this is a bill reported by the gentleman from California [Mr. BOWERS], and as that gentleman is not now present, if there is to be any contest over it, I ask that it be laid aside without prejudice.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I wish to call attention to the fact that this bill provides that "no pay or emolument shall become due by virtue of this act." It seems to me this provision meets the question which has been raised.

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly, if the passage of the bill will not involve any charge against the Government I make no objection.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. That is specially provided for in the bill. As to what bounty may have been received the Committee on Military Affairs has no means of learning definitely the facts, because the records of the War Department do not show the bounties given by the different States.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Would not the passage of the bill put the beneficiary in a position to ask for a pension hereafter? I would like the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAINES] to answer that question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAINES] asked unanimous consent that the bill be laid aside without prejudice.

Mr. BAILEY. I am perfectly willing that course should be taken.

Mr. HULL. The report was made by the gentleman from California; I do not know who introduced the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAINES] that the bill be laid aside without prejudice?

Mr. MEREDITH. I object.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I wish to ask the gentleman from New York whether it is true that the person for whose relief this bill has been introduced resides in the State of New York?

Mr. RAINES. I do not know anything about the bill. I simply responded to the question of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. RICHARDSON. I wish to say a word or two; and I may as well say it on this bill, although what I shall say relates more especially to the pension roll in general than to this particular case. If this bill is to pass and another person is to be placed upon that roll, I should be glad myself if that person is a citizen of New York rather than Indiana.

Several MEMBERS. Why?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The reason is this: The State of Indiana has upon the pension roll a far greater number of pensioners in proportion to the number of soldiers contributed to the Army than the State of New York or the State of Illinois, or any of her sister States in the North.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Let me ask—

Mr. RICHARDSON. No, I can not yield just now. I say that I have not risen particularly to oppose this bill; but I do want to call attention for a few minutes to the condition of the pension roll. We are now paying out yearly about one hundred and fifty million dollars for pensions, and it behoves us to see that the pension roll is honestly made up.

I believe that pensions ought to be granted to soldiers who became disabled in the war, and I do not believe there is any opposition in my part of the country to granting pensions under the laws in proper cases. Speaking for myself as an ex-Confederate soldier, I would not oppose and I do not believe my constituents oppose the granting of pensions in proper cases. But, Mr. Chairman, we do not think that pensions ought to be given for political services at the polls; we think that they should be confined to cases where services have been rendered in the war. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, speaking seriously, what I shall say relates more particularly to the manner in which pensions have been granted heretofore and are now being granted. In my judgment, pensions are being granted and have been granted for political services and not for military services; and as an evidence of this fact I have figures here which I propose to submit, showing that in close States (politically speaking) in the North, the pension roll is much larger in proportion to population and in proportion to the soldiers contributed to the Army than in States where the political contest is not so close. Now, I wish to see whether or not politics has anything to do with this fact. As I would not undertake to carry the figures in my mind, I have made a little memorandum; and I want some gentleman who is a friend to pension legislation, particularly some gentleman from Indiana—the Chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions [Mr. MARTIN] would perhaps be a proper one—to tell me why the facts are as I shall show them to be.

What I assert is that in a Northern State of the Union which is close, politically speaking, the pension roll is larger, comparatively, than in a State where the contest is not so close.

Mr. BAILEY. You mean in the Northern States.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I mean in the Northern States. I am speaking now of the Northern States solely; I am not referring to any of the Southern States. And to come more nearly to the subject, I wish to ask this question: Why is it that Indiana should have a pension list so much larger than the State of Illinois, in proportion to the soldiers furnished to the Army during the war? The difference is so great, Mr. Chairman, as to shock the sense of thinking men. Let me illustrate for a moment. The State of Indiana placed in the field during the late war 196,363 soldiers. Remember the number. She has on the pension list to-day 55,704 persons. Her sister State of Illinois, lying side by side geographically speaking, placed in the field in the late war, and subject to the same conditions as those furnished by the State of Indiana, 259,097 soldiers, and yet the State of Illinois has on the pension rolls only 49,711 persons. Illinois, with 65,000 more soldiers in the war than Indiana, has 6,000 less pensioners on the rolls.

Take the population of the States and compare them in the same way as I have compared the soldiers contributed: Indiana has a population of 2,192,140 people, while Illinois has 3,826,351. Indiana has 1 in every 39 of her population on the pension roll, while Illinois has 1 in 76 of her people on the rolls. Of her enlisted men Indiana has on the pension rolls 1 in every 34 men enlisted, as nearly as I can estimate it, because the fraction does not run out exactly—

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON. In a moment. While Illinois, the State of my friend now on his feet, has of her enlisted men only 1 in about 6.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Can the gentleman from Tennessee state whether Illinois has been gaining on Indiana since the last election?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Well, I will refer that question to my friend, who is better informed on the subject than I am. I only know that since the late war Indiana has always been close and doubtful, politically speaking, while Illinois has been heretofore regarded as pretty surely Republican.

But let me proceed with this illustration a little further. Ohio, though not so close, politically speaking, as Indiana, is always a close battle ground, sent 313,180 men to the war, and she has on her pension rolls 75,448 people; while the State of New Jersey, which has not been so doubtful politically, but has been steadily Democratic, sent 76,814 soldiers to the war and she has a pension roll of only 13,375—

Mr. RAINES. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAINES. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the pending bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is just where the gentleman from New York is mistaken. Perhaps the gentleman's State should get another soldier on the pension roll for the purpose of equalizing the matter a little if possible. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that the gentleman from Tennessee is not discussing the pending bill. Does the gentleman insist on the point of order?

Mr. RAINES. I do.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I suppose the gentleman from New York will not object to getting another man from his State on the pension roll.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will cause the Clerk to read the rules governing debate in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk will first read clause 1 of Rule XIV.

The Clerk read as follows:

1. When any member desires to speak or deliver any matter to the House, he shall rise and respectfully address himself to "Mr. Speaker," and, on being recognized, may address the House from any place on the floor or from the Clerk's desk, and shall confine himself to the question under debate, avoiding personality.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read clause 8 of Rule XXIII.

The Clerk read as follows:

The rules of proceeding in the House shall be observed in Committees of the Whole House so far as they may be applicable.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee will proceed under the rule.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I shall endeavor to do so, Mr. Chairman.

Now, I stated that I might be induced to favor this bill because it puts another man from New York on the roll and helps to bring her up to Indiana. I have just shown that Ohio sent 313,180 men into the war, and has a pension roll of 75,448, while New Jersey, a steadily Democratic State sent 76,814 men to the war, and has a pension roll of but 13,375. Ohio has of her enlisted men on the rolls, 1 in about 4; whereas New Jersey has only 1 in 6. Of her total population Ohio has 1 in 48; Indiana, as you will remember, had 1 in 39; while New Jersey has only 1 in 107. So, Mr. Chairman, I might extend these inquiries into the State of my friend who has just interrupted me—

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield for a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will, in a few minutes. New York has about one in seven of her enlisted men only on the rolls, and only 1 in 99 of her population.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the gentleman from Tennessee give way for a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will if it is in the line of increasing the pension roll in New York; but I do not want to yield generally.

Mr. CURTIS. I came in a little late, and I want to know what is the result to be obtained by the reading of this record, so that I can fall in line with my friend and follow him through.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman will follow me and see the result which I reach; but I do not want him to anticipate me.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will yield in a few minutes. Pennsylvania has of her enlisted men in the war about 1 in 54 on the pension rolls, and of her population 1 in 82. Massachusetts has 1 in 6 of her enlisted men, and 1 in 86 of her population on the rolls. Rhode Island has of her enlisted men, about 1 in 9 on the rolls, and of her population 1 in 119. I will insert a table here showing, if the committee will consent, the figures of the different States as I have given them, and of some of the other States in detail.

Mr. HULL. I would like to ask the gentleman one question, if he will yield. It is in connection with your figures.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. HULL. In regard to New York, Rhode Island, and those States, so small in proportion of soldiers to population, will the gentleman from Tennessee please explain that it is because nearly all the old soldiers from the Eastern States have moved West, and the number of soldiers is, therefore, very much greater in the West than in the East in proportion to the population?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Why did not some of them stop in Illinois instead of in Indiana?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is strange to me that so many of them stopped in Indiana and not in Illinois, the State represented in part by my friend [Mr. WILLIAMS], who is a little restless, who is sitting behind me here. It is certainly as good a State to locate in to get a start as is Indiana, and I say nothing in disparagement of Indiana. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOUK of Ohio. I want to know whether the sources of information from which you derive your statistics inform you how many persons there are on the pension rolls from Ohio who were not residents of Ohio during the war, and did not enter the service from Ohio?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No, sir; I have no information on that point.

Mr. HOUK of Ohio. To my certain knowledge there are hundreds of men in Ohio who are on the pension rolls who enlisted from other States.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. That is the case in other Western States.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No one can answer as to that. I get my figures, however, from the Pension Office.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me to say that there are a great many Ohio soldiers in Illinois drawing pensions.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, to resume again, and I would have been through by this time if I had not been interrupted—

Mr. KILGORE. Oh, you have got plenty of time; go on.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not intend to take the time of the committee. Why is it that Indiana has on the pension rolls 100 persons for each 350 enlisted soldiers during the war, while Illinois has only 100 for each 550 soldiers enlisted during the war? Pennsylvania and Massachusetts show about the same ratio as Illinois, and New York shows 100 for each 700 so enlisted. I ask if this difference, which is so marked, is to be accounted for on the ground that the Indiana and Ohio soldiers fought more bravely in that war than did those from Illinois or Pennsylvania or from the old Bay State?

Were they more exposed to the dangers of battle and driven more recklessly into the deadly conflict? Were more of them wounded and disabled than their comrades in the other States which I have mentioned? If so, there should be more of them on the pension rolls, and no complaint should be made thereof; but, on the other hand, Mr. Chairman, is it not possible or probable that this large pension roll in the States of Indiana and Ohio has been created, not for honorable scars incurred in the heat of battle and conflict of arms in time of their country's peril which tried men's souls, but in the less dangerous conflicts of ballots in time of profound peace? Are they not receiving reward for valiant services, not rendered to their country on the bloody fields of carnage and death during the war where they came up in battalions of boys in blue, but rather upon the less gory fields in time of peace when they came up in divisions of "blocks of five?" [Laughter and applause.]

That is the question I would like to have some Indiana gentlemen answer, and that, Mr. Chairman, is about all I desire to say. I want to repeat again that we are here ready and willing to vote pensions in all honorable and just cases; but we do think that they ought not to be voted for political services; and unless this pension roll in Ohio and Indiana has been increased by political services, I am at a loss to account for the number of cases there.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman give way for a question now?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. PICKLER. Do I understand the gentleman to be in favor of cutting down the pension roll in Indiana, or of increasing the pension roll in the other States?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think we should "slow up" in these States a little while, where pensions have been based on political grounds, until the others catch up. That is what I think we ought to do. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAINES. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to undertake to solve the conundrums that have been put by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], but I want to say to him that I do not believe that the veterans of this country are splitting hairs in any State on the question as to whether there are more pensioners on the roll from the State of Indiana than there are from the State of Ohio, Illinois, or New York. I do not believe they have heretofore been putting the question to the Government or to this House as to whether the pensions have been granted for political service or not.

I believe that every man on the pension roll knows that he got there through having furnished absolute proof that he was entitled to have his name on the pension roll, except a few that have gotten there in previous Congresses, not in this, through the favor of the National Legislature of this great country. I do not think the gentleman shows good taste in taking up the time of this House to interject a political question, to try to array the pensioners or the veterans of one section of the country against those of another. Whoever is on the roll from Indiana is there by reason, not of political services, but because he was able to prove that he was entitled to be there. Whoever is there from the State of New York is there for a similar reason; and it makes no difference to the pensioner whether there are a few more from Indiana than from New York or Illinois.

I do not believe the majority of the gentlemen on that side of the House or this, who come here at great inconvenience to themselves Friday night after Friday night, for the purpose of doing service to some veterans or to the widow of some veteran who are not on the roll, interest themselves as to what per cent is on the roll from these several States.

In regard to the bill under consideration, I wish to say this: That by its terms it carries not a dollar of benefit to this man. It simply relieves him from the charge which stands against him in the record, and I want to ask gentlemen on this side of the House and on the other side as well, after what this great country has done in relieving from all criminal charge in any way and from all responsibility whatever men who, south of Mason and Dixon's line, drew their swords against and fired upon the flag of this Government, if it is asking very much of this House to relieve a poor soldier from the charge of desertion?

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. RAINES. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. I desire to know, as this soldier appears to have served under two names, if the gentleman can explain how it was that he did not serve under his own name in the second enlistment?

Mr. RAINES. From the report of the committee it appears that he left on furlough for his home on account of the sickness of his wife, he overstayed his furlough, and was written to and informed that he would probably be tried for desertion. Consequently he left his home afterwards and went West, and finally reenlisted in another regiment.

Mr. SCOTT. In a different name.

Mr. RAINES. Under a different name, and he is seeking relief from that charge of desertion. I do not think that under the circumstances it is asking too much to give him that relief. But, I want to say right here that I have no sympathy for a man who under ordinary circumstances deserted his flag, his regiment, or his company. There may have been cases where it can be excused. I have no sympathy with many cases, but it seems to me, from this report, there is some excuse for relieving this man from this charge.

Mr. SCOTT. Just one other question. Can the gentleman state whether he received any benefit from his reenlistment?

Mr. RAINES. That I can not say. I do not know whether he received any benefit for his reenlistment. The man appears to have been from New York, but I do not know him—never before heard of him. It is a fact, however, that a bounty was paid to about all who enlisted at the time he reenlisted.

Mr. TARSNEY. Most of those who enlisted at the time he reenlisted were paid bounties.

Mr. RAINES. But, Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is asking too much of the House, under the circumstances, and in view of the legislation that has been passed relieving our friends who fought against the flag from all disabilities—and I do not say it was not right to do so—to relieve this poor soldier from this charge which stands against him, especially as he reenlisted and fought until the close of the war.

Mr. TARSNEY. Why did not he return to his own regiment?

Mr. BUTLER. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question.

Mr. RAINES. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman from New York has asserted that this would cause no expense on the Government. Now, I noticed when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] rose, he objected on the ground that it might make some charge upon the Government. I think that question ought to be answered to the gentleman from Texas very clearly whether, if this bill should pass, it does not put him in condition to go to the Pension Department and secure a pension in case he is cleared of this charge of desertion?

Mr. RAINES. That seems to have been made clear by the committee, as they offer this amendment:

Provided, however, That no pay or emolument shall become due by virtue of this act.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. That does not prevent him from receiving a pension.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. I would suggest further that no pension would be allowed unless it was shown that the disability originated in the service and in the line of duty.

Mr. TARSNEY. Under the act of 1890 he would be entitled to a bounty no matter how the disability arose.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. Not under the old law.

Mr. TARSNEY. But under the law of 1890 he would be entitled to $12 a month, no matter how the disability occurred.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Can the gentleman from New York give us a satisfactory reason why this soldier changed his name, and in his last enlistment went under a different name?

Mr. RAINES. It would appear from the report that he must have changed his name because he feared arrest and trial for his desertion.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. One more question: Can you satisfy the committee that he went into the service the second time of his own volition, or did he go as a substitute and get a bounty?

Mr. RAINES. It appears that he enlisted the second time voluntarily, and not as a substitute.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Did he get a bounty for it?

Mr. RAINES. I do not know that.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. I submit to the gentleman that this man could not have enlisted in 1864 without getting a bounty.

Mr. RAINES. Bounties were usually paid in 1864, and it is very possible that he received one.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Do you not think the reason he changed his name was to get a bounty?

Mr. RAINES. I can not state anything about that. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, with all due respect to the Committee on Military Affairs, from which this bill has come, I think the discussion already provoked makes it entirely proper for me at this juncture to ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana, the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. KILGORE. I think I must object for the present, because several gentlemen want to make speeches on it. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. YOUNG. I object.

Mr. TARSNEY. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt but that on this Private Calendar there are many meritorious cases that ought to pass. Personally I am desirous that every case upon the Calendar should be disposed of upon its merits, and I desire here to call attention to the fact that if there be a determined effort to put forward cases that on their face do not show merit the result will only be to prejudice those that are meritorious.

We should not treat these cases by classes; we should not treat them indiscriminately; we should treat each case upon the facts presented for our consideration. Now, what does this report show? If I recollect the reading of it aright the claimant in this case enlisted late in 1862, in August or September. Serving in the Army until June, 1863, he deserted, was marked upon the records of his company as a deserter, and remained as such until September, 1864, when, under an assumed name, and in a different organization, he reenlisted. Now, we are not unfamiliar with the facts of the history of those days.

There is no man in this House who does not know that in the State of New York, as in nearly every other State of the Union, in September, 1864, no man entered the Army without receiving a bounty of from $400 to $1,200, and that fact shows the inducement for this man to conceal his identity. That shows the reason why he did not, as an honest soldier would have done if he desired to serve out his time in the cause of his country, return to the command from which he had deserted; it shows that his purpose in reenlisting was to obtain the benefit of the bounty laws of that period, to get the high bounties that were being at that time paid. If that was not the case, why does not this report show or state that it was not? Why is it not possible for some member of the committee having this bill in charge and who come here and ask us to wipe out the record of desertion against this man, which a late Adjutant-General of the Army would have designated, as he did many similar cases, a bona fide desertion—why, when they come here and ask us to wipe out that record, do they not bring this man here at least with clean hands?

Put yourselves, gentleman, in the position of this man. Would any of you come into this House with this kind of a record without presenting the proof, or at least making the statement, that in September, 1864, when you enlisted under an assumed name, it was not for the purpose of obtaining the pecuniary rewards offered at that time to those who enlisted? Would you come here with the flimsy pretext that you were afraid to go back to the organization from which you had deserted—that you feared the penalties which would be inflicted upon you by reason of that desertion? Is there a man in this House who was a soldier in the war who does not know that when a man who had deserted returned to his command voluntarily and was willing to atone for the error or the crime of the past and to give to the Government for the remainder of the war the benefit of his service the past was forgotten and he was placed again upon the roll of honorable soldiery? Believing that this man does not come here presenting a meritorious case, I say let us defeat this bill and then proceed to pass other bills—bills which are meritorious. [Applause.]

Several MEMBERS. "Vote!" "Vote!"

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Chairman, there is no use in making a "row" over these bills. The whole purpose of this class of legislation since the enactment of the law of July, 1890, has been, as it was largely prior to that time, to electioneer. This is nothing more than electioneering legislation. It is very much like the distribution of garden seeds and agricultural reports and books on the horse, and other matters of that kind. It is for the purpose of electioneering. Why should we talk about the "merits" of any case, if the bill involves a few votes to some friend here, Democratic or Republican, in his contest for renomination? I notice another thing, Mr. Chairman, in this connection—that as the time approaches for the assembling of the "primaries" in the various districts of the country the zeal of our friends who electioneer with this character of legislation is greatly fired, and as the time for the election draws near there is no end to such zeal; it is unmeasured.

Mr. OWENS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. KILGORE. Well, sir, I have no objection, provided you do not put a speech into mine. I do not want to send your speech—

A MEMBER. "Down the corridors of time."

Mr. KILGORE. "Thundering down the ages" along with mine. [Laughter.]

Mr. OWENS. I will make my question very brief. I want to know whether you are not electioneering; and I ask whether all Federal legislation in favor of pensions is not obnoxious in your district as a running measure in a political contest?

Mr. KILGORE. In answer to the gentleman, I will say that I have been zealously urging before this House for the last three months—or before a committee of this House—a bill the purpose of which is to remove the charge of desertion against a friend of mine who fought in a Maine regiment during the war, and who now lives in my district.

Mr. LEWIS. Does he vote for you?

Mr. KILGORE. I think he is a Republican; but that does not do any hurt down there, as there are so few of them.

Mr. ALLEN. If he is a Republican, do you not think a pension would convert him? [Laughter.]

Mr. KILGORE. It might possibly help him along in that way.

Now, in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAINES], I desire to say that the intimation that those who fought on the losing side in the late contest ought to be punished instead of being in Congress—

Mr. RAINES. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. KILGORE. Well, the gentleman did not say that—

Mr. RAINES. No, I did not.

Mr. KILGORE. But that was the idea intended to be conveyed; and then the gentleman goes on to say that the Government magnanimously removed all our disabilities. The truth of the business is, Mr. Chairman, they could not get along without us. [Laughter.] As was recently remarked by a distinguished member of the United States Senate, whose name I will not repeat, "Riding in a fine carriage drawn by two bob-tailed horses, driven by a negro wearing a plug hat, here I am, full of champagne and terrapin, drawing my pay from the Federal Treasury at the rate of $5,000 a year, besides a clerk and other perquisites; yet twenty-seven years ago, they say, I ought to have been hanged, and probably I ought." Now, the gentleman says the Government has magnanimously relieved us from all the consequences of what we did.

Mr. RAINES. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. KILGORE. Oh, yes.

Mr. RAINES. I wish to ask if the Senator referred to is the same gentleman who stated on the floor of the Senate that the Union soldiers were "looters of the Treasury and robbers of the taxpayers?" I allude to Mr. Reagan of Texas.

Mr. KILGORE. No, sir; I am not referring to Mr. Reagan, and he is not now a member of the Senate. But the pretended friends of the Federal soldiers have, in the name of the Federal soldiery, been themselves the looters of the Treasury. The Congress of the United States since the war have looted the Treasury and plundered the people in the name of the Federal soldier, but not for his benefit and not in the interest of the people at large.

Now, he says that the passage of this bill carries with it no emoluments, in pay or otherwise, when in point of fact he knows or he must know—for this House knows from the repeated declarations he made on that subject, which, if not made for the purpose of misleading the House, would mislead the House, for he knows that the moment the ink is dry on the signature of the President approving this bill the beneficiary will be an applicant for a pension or to be put on the retired list with back pay, and having been honored by an act of Congress in his behalf he will deem that an additional reason why he should be so treated. Now, this being an electioneering scheme and the Democrats having so much the advantage to-night over our Republican friends, being some sixty or seventy Democrats present and probably fifteen or sixteen Republicans, I do not think we ought to go on until we get more members here. I am willing to take a vote on this measure and see how it stands.

Mr. TARSNEY. Well, let us do that and stop talking.

Mr. KILGORE. Very well; at the suggestion of my friend from Kansas City I will check up right here. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to occupy any of the time of the committee further than to do what I believe to be my duty as a member of the committee reporting this bill. That committee has had referred to it some twelve or fourteen hundred bills, a large number of them being for the purpose of removing charges of desertion. In their consideration the committee has examined each case with the greatest care, and in a single sitting have reported from twenty to forty of that character of bills adversely. The House is well aware that during the last ten years several general bills have been passed by Congress giving relief in cases of desertion and authorizing the officers of the War Department to grant an honorable discharge where a soldier was borne on the rolls as a deserter in certain cases.

The cases presented to the committee by these bills, or the greater part of them, would come under one or other of the general clauses of acts to which I have referred, which provide that soldiers who had served honorably at least six months should have the charge removed by application to the War Department, and this soldier served for a much longer period than six months; but the general law also provides that the soldier shall not have been absent for a period of more than six months. In this case the soldier was absent a longer period. But he returned, as the record shows, and for more than a year served faithfully, and until the end of the war.

Mr. TARSNEY. Oh, he did not return; he volunteered in another organization.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. That is correct; he enlisted in the Army, but in another command, and served faithfully, and the committee in considering this case felt that where Congress had made a general law that would have given relief had he been absent only six months, that in a case like this, coming, as it does, so nearly to the requirements of the general law, they might submit the case to the House for their consideration and action. Individually I think the general laws are quite as lenient as they should be. I think all or nearly all proper cases are covered by the general law as it stands, and I am clearly of the opinion that special laws should be carefully scrutinized.

Mr. TARSNEY. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Yes, sir.

Mr. TARSNEY. I wish to ask, first, if the committee that examined this case made any inquiry, or got any information, from the office of the Adjutant-General of the Army, or from the office of the adjutant-general of the State of New York, as to what bounties were paid to this man when he enlisted in the Army in the year 1864?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. The Adjutant-General of the Army has no information on that subject.

Mr. TARSNEY. Oh, yes.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. The Adjutant-General of the Army of the United States has no record to show the bounties which were paid.

Mr. TARSNEY. Were there any inquiries made of the adjutant-general of the State of New York, or of the State of Michigan, wherever this man enlisted?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I will state that the investigation I have made and the inquiries which have been propounded in connection with this matter develop that the States have not any organization by which they can readily give information on that subject. They can give general information; but they have no pension office, or auditor's office, or other means of giving ready information as to an inquiry of that character with regard to any special soldier.

Mr. TARSNEY. Then another question to which I ask the attention of my friend from Alabama; whether he, who was himself a soldier, would not consider it a gross injustice to the honorable, meritorious, and faithful soldiers of the Army (if it be true that this man reenlisted in the Army simply for the purpose of getting bounty)—if he does not think it would be a gross injustice to these honorable soldiers of the Army to wipe out the record of desertion and give him an honorable discharge, and thereby not only do this injustice, but set a bad example?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. In reply to the gentleman I will say that I think no member of this body has a higher regard and admiration for a brave and faithful soldier than myself; and no one, permit me to say, has a more intense disregard and contempt for an unfaithful soldier than myself, and I am not on the floor to advocate the passage of this bill.

And I will further say that the committee sought to provide that this soldier should have no benefit from the bill further than the benefit of having this stain removed of the charge of desertion.

Mr. TARSNEY. But that stain is there to punish for something. Do you want to wipe that out?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I will state to the gentleman that it matters not what errors men have committed; that some men, even though they have committed errors amounting to crimes, have so conducted themselves thereafter as to be deserving of the pardoning power.

Mr. TARSNEY. And to be put upon an equality with those who never committed an error?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. When a man is pardoned for any offense, he is placed upon an equality with every other citizen of his country; and the principle of the pardoning power is considered throughout the world as one of the most beneficent elements of the power of executives, or bodies that have the power to grant pardons; and when this case was presented to this committee, with proof of the very creditable and gallant conduct of that soldier during the last year of the war, a year when there was more fighting done than in all the preceding three years, a majority of that committee felt that that was a case where the pardoning power could with propriety be exercised.

Mr. TARSNEY. Now, is there any evidence before this committee that he ever participated in a single engagement after his reenlistment?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Yes, sir.

Mr. TARSNEY. When and where?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I will try and look that matter up for the gentleman.

Mr. DICKERSON. The important question is, was he in fact a deserter, or was it a mistake of someone?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. There is no doubt the charge of desertion was properly entered. The facts stated by the War Department show that he had a leave of absence for ten days, to visit his wife, who was dangerously ill and not expected to recover. At the expiration of the furlough he made application to Dr. Van Aernam for an extension; that he received from Dr. Van Aernam, in reply, a letter telling him that he, the applicant, knew the regulations of war, and had better make his way back to his regiment with as little delay as possible, as he would probably be punished as a deserter; that upon receiving that letter he became frightened and did not dare to go back to his own regiment, and did not go, his furlough having expired, but went off and enlisted in another regiment.

Mr. DICKERSON. I understand he ran off to Canada instead of going to the regiment.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. His home was near Canada, and he probably entered that Dominion, but he returned and served until the war closed.

I wish to say—and this is the point I was coming to—that the Committee on Military Affairs, in exercising this pardoning power which is granted to them under the rules of the House, wish to conform to the views of this House in their action. This case grazes as nearly as possible to the general law, without coming under it; and if this House feels that the pardoning power has been exercised too freely by that committee, they want to know it, as a guide for their conduct in future. That committee and its members are servants of this House, delegated by this House to perform certain duties, and they wish to perform those duties in such a manner as to conform to the wishes of this body.

There is no committee in this House which has harder work than the Committee on Military Affairs. It is a work for which its members receive no thanks. I am the only member of that committee from a Southern State. My constituents have but little interest in the legislation which comes before it; but I endeavor to faithfully perform the duties, because they have been assigned me by this body.

Mr. DICKERSON. I would like to ask the gentleman another question: Has the committee discovered whether or not it was frequent during the war for soldiers to desert and then to go back and reenlist under some other name, simply for the purpose of obtaining the bounty?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. They have found that to be so in certain cases, and the committee have invariably refused to exercise the pardoning power or to remove the charge of desertion when that fact was before them.

Mr. TARSNEY. You have not stated what the man's military service was yet after his reenlistment.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I will try and give it to you.

Mr. TARSNEY. The War Department record shows that during the time he was in Canada; and Lockport, where he reenlisted for this large bounty, is right on the line.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I find that the report does not give his military service further than to say that he served faithfully and honorably during the summer and fall of 1864 and spring of 1865.

Mr. PICKLER. Was he honorably discharged at last?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Honorably discharged from that regiment; and, as I have stated, the only difficulty in the way of his getting an honorable discharge and having the charge of desertion removed under the general law is that he was absent a little longer than the law prescribed.

Mr. YOUNG. What State did he enlist from the second time?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. From the State of New York.

There has been a great deal said about which States deserve the most credit for putting most soldiers in the military service during the war; and I will inform this House that the States which gave the most soldiers were the Southern States. I want to state this fact, because some people question its accuracy. The Southern States furnished to the Federal Army more soldiers than they furnished to the Confederate army. They furnished 391,000 white men, in white regiments organized in Southern States.

They furnished 225,000 colored soldiers; and then, by means of bounties, regarding which much has been said, a number of men estimated at 100,000, and some estimate it higher than that, and that is estimated in a large degree from the records of places of birth, and from these records it is assumed that more than 100,000 Southern men enlisted in Northern regiments from Southern States. These three items added together show a greater body of men from the Southern States in the Federal Army than were furnished to the Confederate Army.

Mr. ANDREW. What do you mean by the Southern States; the States in rebellion, or slave States?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I include the States of Missouri, Kentucky, Maryland, and the District of Columbia, and all the Southern States. In the Mexican war the Southern States furnished by far the largest quota, and their losses in the battles in Mexico were much larger in proportion to other States. So in the Creek wars, the Seminole war, and other Indian wars from 1832 to 1836.

Now, I want to make a reply to my friend from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON]. He asked the question how it was that the people of the State of Indiana had a larger number on the pension roll than other States. I will say it is presumed that all officials do their duty, and assuming that the pension officials have acted fairly, the facts presented by the gentleman from Tennessee will justify the argument by the people of Indiana that they fought very well, and that the reason why there is a larger number of Indiana soldiers on the roll is because they fought so well. I know my friend fought in many battles against Indiana soldiers, and I expect he will testify that they fought hard enough for him.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not doubt that at all.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. And if they fought well it is only natural that the people from Indiana should give that as a reason why they have a larger number on the pension roll.

Mr. RICHARDSON. My friend will recognize the fact that there never was a battle in which Indiana soldiers fought alone on the Federal side, but they fought side by side with regiments from other States. Therefore, there can be nothing in that part of the gentleman's statement.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. But the Indiana people will argue that.

I want to say, in conclusion, that I do not want to have anybody in this House under the impression that any man in the Southern States hesitates for a moment to most gladly pay his quota for pensioning any soldier in the Federal Army who was wounded in the war or who under the general laws is deserving of a pension.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to ask my friend, does he think that the Indiana soldiers fought more bravely than the Illinois soldiers in the war?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I do not say that, but I say that the Indiana men might be justified in making that argument from the statistics presented by the gentleman from Tennessee. The soldiers from all States fought with most commendable courage and I would not if I could make invidious distinctions. I am proud of the courage of all Americans.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope this House will consider this bill and give it the just and fair showing that it should receive, because the Committee on Military Affairs want the sense of the House to guide them in future action upon bills of this character. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CHIPMAN. Mr. Chairman, if the objection made to this bill is well founded it ought to be respected. If the claimant in this bill deserted and reenlisted in my State, and received a township, county, or State bounty, that fact is very easily susceptible of proof; at least by his own affidavit he ought to disclaim the reception of any bounty, and the records of the adjutant-general's office and of the townships and counties in which bounties were paid would very easily demonstrate whether he did or did not receive a bounty on the name in which he reenlisted.

That being the case, and being anxious that no injustice shall be done to this claimant, I hope the committee will consent that this bill shall be passed over to-night without further discussion, retaining its place on the Calendar, so that we may investigate and ascertain the truth concerning the matter.

Mr. BUNN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CHIPMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUNN. I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not they did not all receive bounties who enlisted about the time this soldier reenlisted, and whether the presumption is not well founded that he did receive a bounty.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I do not propose, Mr. Chairman, to foreclose this claimant by a presumption. He was not obliged to receive a bounty unless he chose. I would like to place the case in such an attitude that we can ascertain the facts without any presumption; no guesswork, but the fact itself. It is just to the claimant and just to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. TARSNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that this bill be laid aside with the recommendation that it be re-referred to the Committee on Military Affairs to inquire into the facts and motives concerning this case of desertion.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Chairman, upon that question I want to be heard. Gentlemen, I am a member of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized.

Mr. CHIPMAN. What has become of my request?

Mr. BOWERS. Now, I have been recognized, just give me the floor for about five minutes.

Mr. CHIPMAN. What has been done with my request?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asked the gentleman as to the form of his request, and just at that moment he was interrupted by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BUNN] and did not again present the request.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I thought I said "yes."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear the request, but will submit the proposition if desired.

Mr. BOWERS. The Chair recognized "the gentleman from California," and I will not occupy much time, but I desire a few moments.

As I said, I am a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, and also a member of subcommittee No. 7, to whom these bills go.

I have reported a great many bills, that is, they have been reported from my subcommittee, and my name goes with them as having reported them; but at the same time that subcommittee have laid away in the pigeonholes a great many more bills than they have reported to the House. Now, for the last four weeks I have almost dreaded to come up here, because there are so many members coming to me all the time and saying, "BOWERS, will you look after that little bill of mine?" [Laughter.] All you gentlemen have got "little bills" in which you feel a personal interest, and we have been just as good-natured in that committee as we could be; perhaps a little too much so. Now, gentlemen, the war is over.

Mr. FITHIAN. Oh, no.

Mr. BOWERS. Yes; it is over, and I am ready to forgive them. [Laughter.] I am perfectly willing that you gentlemen should "sit down" upon this bill or upon any other, but if you are going to do so, just let us know, and save us a whole lot of work in that subcommittee, for there will be no use in our reporting any more of these bills. If you are going to beat these bills here, do not come to me any more and ask me to report your "little bills." [Laughter.]

Mr. CARUTH. Did the gentleman report this bill?

Mr. BOWERS. I did.

Mr. CARUTH. Did this man receive a bounty?

Mr. BOWERS. I do not know about that.

Mr. TARSNEY. Did you not consider that a material inquiry?

Mr. BOWERS. There was no evidence that he had received a bounty.

Mr. TARSNEY. Why did you not inquire of him?

Mr. BOWERS. He was not here.

Mr. TARSNEY. Or of whoever presented the bill?

Mr. CARUTH. Whose bill is this?

Mr. BOWERS. This bill was introduced by Mr. HOOKER of New York. You all know, gentlemen, that I have reported about a hundred of your bills, and I am perfectly willing you should stop right here; only, I repeat, do not come and bother that committee any more about these bills. [Laughter.]

Mr. TARSNEY. Can you conceive of a case that would illustrate what was known as "bounty-jumping" better than the record of this case in the War Department?

Mr. BOWERS. Oh, yes.

Mr. TARSNEY. Well, I can not.

Mr. BOWERS. Do you know that this man ever received a bounty?

Mr. TARSNEY. I do.

Mr. BOWERS. You do?

Mr. TARSNEY. I do; because I know that bounties were universal at the time that he reenlisted.

Mr. BOWERS. Well, I was down at the front for about four years, and I do not know it. [Laughter.]

Mr. YOUNG. But did the committee take any pains to find out whether he had received a bounty or had not?

Mr. BOWERS. It was impossible for us to find that out.

Mr. TARSNEY. You could have found it out through the State adjutant-general's office.

Mr. BOWERS. In regard to the office of the Adjutant-General—I mean the Adjutant-General of the United States—I want to say that we never consider any of these bills or take any action whatever upon them until we get a report from that office, and that report governs the committee almost entirely, except that, as I have already said, we have been very good natured in responding to the appeals of gentlemen who come to us and say, "Now, this bill belongs to a friend of mine, and I wish you would try to get it on the Calendar." [Laughter.]

Mr. KILGORE. The gentleman says that his committee have reported bills of this character promptly right along.

Mr. BOWERS. We have reported quite a lot of them.

Mr. KILGORE. Well, I want to say that I have had a bill for a Maine volunteer who is now down in my district, a bill to remove a charge of desertion, and that bill has been before your committee for a month.

Mr. BOWERS. Did you ever come to me and say anything about it? [Laughter.] If you had done that you would have got it a month ago.

Mr. KILGORE. Have I got to go and hunt up the bill and "bother" the committee about it? These bills ought to stand on their merits, and ought to be attended to by the committee without prompting from any outside source.

Mr. BOWERS. I wish to say that in considering these bills brought before the Military Committee by honorable members of this House I have supposed that no member would come there and put in a bill that was not worthy to be considered by the committee or that he did not believe was correct.

A MEMBER. There is where you were mistaken.

Mr. BOWERS. Well, what member has done it? What member has put in a bill that ought not to pass? Get up here and show your hand, and tell me what member has come here and deliberately put in a bill that he knew ought not to pass or knew was not a good bill.

Mr. YOUNG. If they were all worthy bills, why have the committee thrown out so many?

Mr. BOWERS. I want you to come down to cases. Gentlemen go on and say a great many things generally—

Mr. TARSNEY. Will the gentleman allow me to "come down to cases?"

Mr. McMILLIN. If the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. TARSNEY] will allow me, I wish to ask the gentleman from California one question, with his permission.

Mr. BOWERS. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman has stated that a large number of bills—I believe about fourteen hundred—have been before his committee, many of them involving the question of desertion. Now, in the consideration of these bills, where under the law bounties were given at a certain period, on what presumption does the committee act in determining whether or not bounty was paid in a particular case?

Mr. BOWERS. I will answer the gentleman. The committee—the subcommittee always reports to the full committee—has not taken into consideration that question of bounty at all.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does not the gentleman think it would be very unjust to the Government and to soldiers who never deserted if we should give an honorable discharge to a man who deserted from the Army for the purpose of reenlisting and obtaining a bounty?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes, sir; it would.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then does not the gentleman think that where the law gave a bounty it is a fair and proper presumption to assume that the bounty was received by the soldier on reenlistment?

Mr. BOWERS. You assume that the soldier in every case reenlisted for the bounty, which is not the case. He may have received the bounty, and may have been, as is shown to be the fact in many of these cases, a good soldier, and the question whether he received a bounty or not may have made no difference in regard to his service.

Mr. McMILLIN. But where there was a double enlistment, and where bounty was in fact ordinarily given at the time of reenlistment, is not the presumption that the soldier did receive a bounty sufficient to debar him from an honorable discharge?

Mr. BOWERS. That might be the presumption in some cases; but in many of these cases the evidence shows that the soldier did not receive the bounty or that it did not govern his action.

Mr. SCOTT. Does not the fact that the soldier enlisted under an assumed name give color to the presumption that he enlisted for the bounty?

Mr. BOWERS. It might give color to the presumption; but we have not had in most of these cases the evidence as to why the soldier enlisted the second time under an assumed name. If I had time (and I do not want to consume the time of the committee) I could refer to plenty of instances.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Did you wish to be understood as saying that in every case where the gentleman introducing a bill called on you to report it favorably you had done so on the assumption that members making such requests were honorable gentlemen?

Mr. BOWERS. Oh, no; we considered the cases on their merits, of course. We assumed that the members thought the bills meritorious; but that did not control our action.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. TARSNEY] kindly restate his motion?

Mr. TARSNEY. My motion was that the bill be laid aside—

Several MEMBERS (to Mr. TARSNEY). Withdraw your motion.

Mr. TARSNEY. Very well; I withdraw my motion; let us take a direct vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from Missouri being withdrawn, the question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. KILGORE. What is it?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "name," in line 20, insert:
"Provided, however, That no pay or emolument shall become due by virtue of this act."

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I move to amend that amendment so as to provide that "no pay, emolument, or pension shall become due by virtue of this act."

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. KILGORE. Before that amendment is voted on, I would like to know from some of the learned lawyers of this House, and there are plenty of them, the legal effect of this bill as to the granting of a pension in the future by the Pension Office.

Now, I will give my opinion, and I am not going to charge anything for it, but I am not amongst the learned lawyers; and that is, that the proposition as the bill stands, or rather the amendment of the committee if adopted, provides that it shall carry no pay, allowance, or emoluments of any kind. That relates to everything in the past. But the granting of a pension refers to the future. The purpose of the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama is, as I understand it, to prevent this man from securing from the Pension Office in the future a pension which might by law come to him. It provides that the claimant shall not be entitled to any pension.

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. No; it provides that no pension shall accrue by the passage of this bill.

Mr. KILGORE. But the purpose of the passage of the bill itself is to clear the way in order that he may receive a pension. I say that that amendment, therefore, of the gentleman from Alabama, so far as it affects the future action of the Pension Office, would be of no binding force in law. I think that the moment this bill became a law, that moment the claimant would have a perfect right to go before the Pension Office and ask to receive a pension, provided he made the proper proof required by law to show himself entitled to it.

Mr. ALLEN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman from Texas in regard to this question, that this is one instance in which the unlearned and the learned lawyer take the same view of the situation. [Laughter.]

Mr. KILGORE. Well, there are very few instances in which they do agree.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, in regard to the wording of this new amendment of the gentleman from Alabama, permit me to say that it would have no effect whatever upon the privilege of the Pension Office in the granting of a pension. It simply says that there shall be no pension due to this man by virtue of the passage of this act. There is no pension due to anybody until it is adjudicated in the Pension Office and allowed to him, and of course there is no pension due by the passage of this act, whether you so provide in the bill or not. It is a mere waste of words, simply that and nothing more. It is an amendment that has no business in the bill. You can not by any such means prevent a man from getting a pension who is entitled to it. If he is not a deserter, and should be restored, as this act contemplates, he is entitled to a pension and he ought to have it, and this amendment, therefore, would not affect his right one way or the other, and if it would affect his rights after being granted an honorable discharge as contemplated by this act, certainly the amendment would be entirely unjust.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I think gentlemen are entirely mistaken in their views regarding this amendment. This man when he applies for a pension is confronted in the Pension Office by a report from the War Department that he deserted, and therefore, without this action on the part of the House, removing the charge of desertion, he could not secure a pension.

This bill, if it becomes a law, is a certificate by which he may get a pension if entitled to it. But before the office can act they must have the bill itself filed before them.

The bill goes to the office, stating in the very terms of the bill itself, which removed the charge of desertion, and which would otherwise give him the right to apply for a pension, that no pay or emoluments of any description shall become due by reason of the bill; nor shall any pension become due by virtue of this act. The bill itself would otherwise give him the right. Therefore if this bill were filed in the Pension Office it would show the intent of the law in removing the charge of desertion, and would undoubtedly prevent his securing a pension hereafter.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Would the passage of this bill, amended as we propose to amend it, grant the soldier an honorable discharge?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. It removes the charge of desertion, but with the condition that no pension be granted to him.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Does it grant an honorable discharge?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. It removes the charge of desertion and grants an honorable discharge.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Then is this case an exception to the provisions of the law of 1890?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Certainly, because the bill itself provides that he shall not have a pension, and it would be a violation of law for a pension to be given him. If we pass the bill with my amendment the soldier is forever debarred a pension. If we defeat the bill, he can come next Congress and might get a bill through in a shape which would give him a pension.

Mr. SCOTT. It provides that by the force of this act he shall not have a pension.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. The effect of the passage of the bill would be to prevent him getting a pension hereafter. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BRETZ. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRETZ. Would it be in order in Committee of the Whole for any member to demand the previous question?

The CHAIRMAN. That would not be in order, as the previous question does not apply in Committee of the Whole.

The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken, and the Chair decided that the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I demand a division.

Several MEMBERS. Do not do that.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Very well, I will withdraw the demand.

Mr. KILGORE. I demand a division myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas demands a division—

Mr. KILGORE. At the suggestion of these gentlemen around me I will not insist.

Mr. PICKLER. Then I demand a division. If they want to cut off pension legislation let us know it now.

Mr. BAILEY. I hope the gentleman from South Dakota will not consume the time of the committee in hunting up a quorum.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand a division.

The committee proceeded to divide, but before the announcement of the vote

Mr. PICKLER said: I withdraw the call for division.

So, no further count being demanded, the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on laying the bill aside as amended with a favorable recommendation.

The question being taken; the Chairman announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. KILGORE), there were—ayes 41, noes 62.

The CHAIRMAN. On this question the yeas are 41 and the noes 62. The yeas have it, and the motion to lay aside the bill with a favorable recommendation is disagreed to.

Mr. KILGORE (speaking at the same time). Mr. Chairman, I am very much inclined—

The CHAIRMAN. What is the statement of the gentleman?

Mr. KILGORE. I think we ought to stand by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand the statement of the gentleman from Texas.

Several MEMBERS. He has not made any.

Mr. KILGORE. I withdraw my statement.

So the motion to lay aside the bill with a favorable recommendation was disagreed to.

JAMES A. DAVIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4488) granting a pension to James A. Davis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James A. Davis, a soldier in the Black Hawk war, who enlisted July 31, 1832, for one year, and served to December 21, 1832, when he was discharged on surgeon's certificate of disability, in Capt. Jesse B. Brown's company, United States Mounted Rangers, and pay him a pension of $30 per month.

The report (by Mr. WILSON of Missouri) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4488) granting a pension to James A. Davis, have considered the same and respectfully report as follows:

The records show that the claimant served in the Black Hawk war as a private in Capt. Jesse B. Brown's company, United States Mounted Rangers. He enlisted July 31, 1832, for one year and served until December 21, 1832, when discharged on surgeon's certificate of disability.

The service of the claimant is also shown by the sworn statement of William Bandy, who served with him.

Hon. John C. Black, ex-Commissioner of Pensions, certifies under date of January 27, 1892, as follows:

"I have been acquainted with James A. Davis, who, I understand, is an applicant for pension from Congress—for forty years. I know him to be a man of great age, of sobriety, of the best habits, and yet entirely dependent upon those not legally bound to his support, and at the same time incapacitated by reason of his age from earning his living manually or otherwise. I would be gratified to know that the pension was issued to him because of his services in the Black Hawk war, which, I understand, have been established."

The claimant, who now resides in California, makes affidavit to being without property, and in a dependent condition; his age is stated at 81 years.

L. M. Brown, William R. Harker, and James Ashby also testify to the claimant's great age, dependence, and disability.

Your committee believe the bill to be a meritorious one, and the same is hereby returned with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Chairman, the bill in this case grants $20 a month. No doubt it is a very meritorious case, and the beneficiary ought to have the money; but it is more than Congress has been in the habit of granting. Twelve dollars or $15 a month is the usual amount. I would be willing to amend this bill, not that I care about the amount that is involved, but the precedent that it affords for men who served in the Black Hawk war and other Indian wars to clamor for an increase of their pensions is what I object to.

Mr. DICKERSON. How about the Mexican war veterans?
Mr. KILGORE. They get $8 a month and the soldiers of the war of 1812 get $8 a month. The soldiers of the Black Hawk war do not get anything by general law. This is a case which is singled out of a thousand, perhaps, just as meritorious as this is, and made the subject of special legislation; and in doing that it is proposed to give more than Congress is in the habit of giving under such circumstances. I shall insist upon the bill being amended so as to make the rate paid $15 a month; and I offer that amendment.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Does this bill carry any back pay?

Mr. KILGORE. I think not.

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. I do not think the amendment of my colleague ought to prevail in this case. It will establish no precedent, for the reason that sixty years have elapsed since this man enlisted. In 1832, sixty years ago, he enlisted, and he was then in the neighborhood of twenty-one years of age. He was discharged because of his disability, and certainly $20 a month is not too much for him. My colleague [Mr. KILGORE] cites the amount paid to pensioners under the Mexican war pension act; but he forgets to include the statement that many of those receiving pensions are not disabled. This man was discharged under a certificate of disability given him by a surgeon of the United States Army. Gen. Maxey, of our State, who was a United States Senator, and who is not disabled mentally or physically, is receiving a pension under the Mexican war act—

Mr. KILGORE. Eight dollars a month.

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. Eight dollars a month, and he is a man who is worth $75,000.

Mr. KILGORE. He ought not to have that pension either, I will say.

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. I understand my colleague to say that Senator Maxey ought not to have it. That is simply a question between him and Senator Maxey.

Mr. KILGORE. I make that broad statement.

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. Col. William R. Morrison is receiving a pension of $8 a month under the Mexican war pension act.

Mr. FITHIAN. You are mistaken. That is not the case.

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. If I am mistaken, I will withdraw the statement.

Several MEMBERS. He declined to take anything.

Mr. CRAIN of Texas. Well, so much more to his credit. I mean no discredit to Col. Morrison or anyone else. I simply use these illustrations in order to show that the remarks of my colleague are not applicable.

In this case, Mr. Chairman, it appears from the report of the committee that sixty years ago this man was discharged from the service by reason of physical disability. It does seem to me that he is entitled to at least a reasonable pension, and an amount that will enable him to live; and certainly $20 a month is not too large, in view of the fact that my colleague from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] pays at least $80 a month in order to live in Washington.

Mr. KILGORE. I pay that because they compel me to. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE], to strike out the word "twenty" and insert the word "fifteen;" so as to make it read "$15 a month."

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. KILGORE. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 5, yeas 95.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to have a quorum when it comes to a question of this kind. I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum being made, the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over until next Tuesday.

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. I object to the bill going over.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. Is a motion that the committee do now rise in order?

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. I inquired whether a motion that the committee do now rise is in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. Then I make that motion.

The question was taken, and the committee refused to rise.

The CHAIRMAN. As many as favor the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] will pass between the tellers.

The committee divided; and tellers reported—ayes 5, yeas 115. So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

HIRAM STIMSON.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to call the attention of the committee to the parliamentary status of the bill (H. R. 1424) for the relief of Hiram Stimson. The committee declined to order the bill reported with a favorable recommendation, and under that action its parliamentary status is defined on page 328 of the Manual, second session of the Fiftieth Congress, in these words.

When a vote is taken in Committee of the Whole, on a motion to lay aside a bill to be reported favorably in the House, and such motion is negatived, the bill is not thereby ordered to be reported adversely, but retains its position on the Calendar, and is subject to further debate and amendment.

The Chair thinks that the committee intended to report this bill to the House with an adverse recommendation, and therefore if there be no objection that order will be made, and the bill reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

Mr. HOOKER of New York. I object.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then, Mr. Chairman, I make the motion that the bill be laid aside with the recommendation that it be laid on the table.

Mr. HULL. I want to ask, Mr. Chairman, if that bill is now before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. It is before the committee. It is the unfinished business.

Mr. HULL. My understanding was that the committee simply passed it over and went on to the next bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has not finally disposed of the bill, but it is now properly before the committee as unfinished business, called up by the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. RICHARDSON, and the Chairman announced that the "ayes" had it, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOOKER of New York. Division. [Cries of "Too late!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Was the gentleman on his feet for the purpose of asking for a division?

Mr. HOOKER of New York. I rose for the purpose of calling for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. Before the result was announced?

Mr. HOOKER of New York. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, then, will accept the statement of the gentleman from New York. As many as are in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee—

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent—

The CHAIRMAN (continuing). Will rise and be counted. For what purpose does the gentleman from Alabama rise?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I want to ask unanimous consent that this amendment be voted on. I want to say in that connection—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that debate is not in order.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. If we pass the bill with that amendment it forever disposes of this case, and this man who deserted will be forever debarred from receiving a pension; but I repeat that if we simply vote down the bill there is nothing to prevent this soldier coming here the next Congress and getting a bill passed; and I say we should close the matter now while it is before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I have said all I wanted to say. The committee divided; and there were—yeas 60, yeas 24; so the bill was ordered to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do lie on the table.

LUCY HASKELL.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5602) granting a pension to Lucy Haskell, mother, by adoption, of John Haskell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lucy Haskell, mother, by adoption, of John Haskell, late of Company G, One hundred and sixth Regiment New York Volunteers, to date from the approval of this act.

The report (by Mr. CURTIS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5602) granting a pension to Lucy Haskell, submit the following report:

It is shown by competent evidence that Lucy Haskell is 72 years of age, and she alleges that she was the mother, by adoption, of John Haskell, who enlisted August 13, 1862, in Company G, One hundred and sixth New York Infantry, and died in service, June 28, 1863, of typhoid fever.

It appears in evidence that the soldier was born about June 2, 1843; that his mother was Eliza Watson, and that he had no acknowledged father. About January, 1845, the mother gave him, a baby, to Lucy Haskell and her husband, and the mother, by verbal agreement, relinquished all right and claim to him whatever. He was brought up to consider the claimant and her husband as his parents, and he knew no other, and was recognized in the community as their son, and they gave him the same care and affection as to their own children, of whom there were three.

The claimant and her husband are aged and without sufficient means of support and are dependent on their own labor. The whereabouts of the real mother, if living, are unknown, and the claimant has had no knowledge of her for forty years. It is also shown that the soldier was never married.

Your committee return the bill with the recommendation that it do pass, after being amended by adding, after line 8, the words "at the rate of $12 per month."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Chairman, I am inclined to think that is carrying the rule a little too far. The only argument in favor of this beneficiary is that she is old and indigent, and that argument might be made in behalf of a million of people in the United States. I do not think I would be willing to see this bill pass to-night. If she is old and indigent the State of New York ought to be able to take care of her.

Mr. McKINNEY. Was she not the soldier's mother to all intents and purposes?

Mr. KILGORE. I am not prepared to go into that. I have no objection to you going on and voting on the bill.

Mr. MARTIN. Will the gentleman from Texas yield to me?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. KILGORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MARTIN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Had the beneficiary in this case been the natural mother of the dead soldier she could have obtained a pension long ago under the general law. Now, being the adopted mother, having taken care of him from babyhood until he lay down in death while in the service, and having performed all the duties of a mother as fully as if she had been the real mother, why should she not be entitled to this recognition?

Mr. KILGORE. There was one important duty that she did not perform and that nobody but a mother could perform. But there is no proof in this case that she was dependent on this soldier for support a day in her life, or that he ever gave her any support. The committee say that it was established by competent evidence that she was his adopted mother, but that would not go for anything in law.

Mr. MARTIN. Will the gentleman permit a further suggestion?

Mr. KILGORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MARTIN. Under the general law, had she been this soldier's natural mother, the proof that the gentleman speaks of would not be necessary.

Mr. KILGORE. Well, I think it is important where you go outside of the general law. The proof of the fact that he was the son of his mother and that he was dead would perhaps be sufficient under the present law to secure her a pension, but here you show no interest whatever that she had in his life other than the affection which she may have had for him.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman who reported this bill why it is that the pension is to be granted to the adopted mother rather than to the adopted father?

Mr. MARTIN. By the general law, both parents being living, the pension always goes first to the mother.

Mr. BUSHNELL. What amount of property did the committee ascertain that the adopted father of this soldier, the husband of this woman, has?

Mr. MARTIN. The finding is that they are without special means of support and are dependent upon their own labor.

Mr. BUSHNELL. But is there any evidence before the committee as to the value of the father's property?

Mr. MARTIN. I would suggest that the gentleman put that question to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to satisfy the gentleman on my left [Mr. BUSHNELL]. Mr. Haskell and his wife are poor people, without means of support, at least without means to the extent of making them at all comfortable. This child was given to them as an infant by a woman who had no husband. They took care of the child and raised him as well as they raised their own children. He went to the war and rendered service until sickness overtook him and he died. Now, had he been the natural son of this woman, then, as has been stated by the chairman of the committee, she would have been entitled to a pension from the date of his death; the law giving the pension first to the mother and next to the father.

Mr. BUSHNELL. Would she be entitled to receive a pension if her husband had means to support her?

Mr. CURTIS. If he had not the means to support her she would have been entitled to a pension. If he had such means, perhaps under former pension laws she would not.

Mr. BUSHNELL. I had something to do with these pension matters several years ago, and I remember that inquiry was always made as to the amount of property possessed by the proposed beneficiary.

Mr. CURTIS. If the gentleman believes that the committee have looked after that matter with sufficient care he will accept the statement which the chairman of the committee has made and which I, the introducer of the bill, now make.

Mr. BUSHNELL. But the mere statement that the husband of this woman is "poor" is not definite enough. It is not such a statement as the Pension Office would require in order to determine whether the mother would be entitled to a pension even if she were the actual mother. What I want to get at is the value of the property of the husband. A man may be "poor" and yet have $10,000 worth of property.

A MEMBER. Oh, no.

Mr. BUSHNELL. Comparatively poor.

Mr. CURTIS. I may not be able to answer the gentleman in detail as to the amount of actual money or property possessed by these people, but I do say that were the case to go before the Pension Bureau under the law as it now stands there would be nothing necessary in order to secure a pension but to prove that this dead soldier was the son of this woman, and this bill is designed simply to cure that defect in the case. Congress has passed such bills for twenty-five years past.

Mr. BUSHNELL. I do not know what the pension laws now are in respect to this matter.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Does the gentleman say that nothing is required now by the law except to show that the woman had a son, that he was a soldier, and that he died?

Mr. CURTIS. And that she is in limited circumstances.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Is it not necessary to show that she was dependent upon him for support?

Mr. CURTIS. She would be so if he were living.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Has she not other children?

Mr. CURTIS. None who are able to support her. They have not the means. This was an adopted child.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. But the obligation on the adopted child to support the parent would certainly be no stronger than on a natural child.

Mr. CURTIS. But you can not get a result out of an article unless it is in it. These children are not able to support their parents.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Was that in proof before the committee?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes, sir; as I recollect the proof.

Mr. BUSHNELL. Allow me to ask a question for information. What would be the effect if the natural mother of this deceased soldier should now appear? Would she not be entitled to a pension?

Mr. CURTIS. Not at all. She abandoned this child; it was accepted at the time as the child of this woman and her husband. The natural mother abandoned all her interest in the child.

Mr. BUSHNELL. Well, I do not see the matter in that light.

Mr. CURTIS. She could not resume the relation which she parted with forty years ago.

Mr. DICKERSON. Do you know whether she is now actually drawing a pension or not?

Mr. CURTIS. She is not. She left that part of the country more than forty years ago; she left almost immediately upon abandoning this child.

Mr. DICKERSON. Sometimes two persons get a pension on account of the service of a single soldier.

Mr. CURTIS. But no pension could be obtained without satisfactory proof being presented at the Pension Office. No one is now drawing a pension on account of the services of this soldier. That fact we have learned from the Pension Office.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. You have said that all that is necessary to enable a mother to draw a pension is to show that she had a son who was a soldier and who died in the service.

Mr. CURTIS. And that she was dependent upon him.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Suppose the natural mother comes forward and proves—

Mr. CURTIS. She is not the mother of this soldier in contemplation of law, for she abandoned the relation of mother forty years ago.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Does the gentleman say that there have been any legal proceedings to disrupt that relation?

Mr. CURTIS. I understand so.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Ah! But has it been proved?

Mr. CURTIS. I do not recall the details of the matter, but it is my understanding that it was done in such a form as was acceptable; that there was a real abandonment of this child; that the real mother left that part of the country, and her present whereabouts, if she be alive, are not known.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. But the report of the committee states that the actual mother simply gave this child to these people. Now, that fact alone would not dissolve the relationship of mother and son; and I submit that if this real mother should present herself, she would, under the gentleman's statement, be entitled to a pension.

Mr. CURTIS. That is not the fact; she could not obtain a pension.

Mr. SCOTT. If the real mother appeared and asked for a pension, Congress would have to determine whether the pension should be granted or not.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. But she might not come to Congress at all.

Mr. CURTIS. She could not go the Pension Office and get a pension; for the law would require that she should show the relationship and interest of a mother in the child; that this soldier as a child had been dependent upon her, and that in later years she was dependent upon him. This man has now been dead twenty-five years.

Mr. SCOTT. The real mother could not show that she had ever been dependent on this man for support.

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly not.

Mr. SCOTT. And for that reason she could not get a pension under the general law; she would have to come to Congress for the passage of a special bill if she asked for a pension at all.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Is not every mother dependent upon her son for support where she has no means of supporting herself?

Mr. CURTIS. The natural mother is not this man's mother in contemplation of law. I adhere to that position.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Is there any proof that this woman who now applies for this pension was ever dependent a day upon this man for support?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes; because she reared him in his infancy; and according to the law of our State he would be required to support her if he were now alive.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. The gentleman said a few moments ago, in answer to one of my inquiries, that the law required it should be shown the mother was actually receiving support from the son before he died. Did not the gentleman state the matter that way?

Mr. CURTIS. I do not think so.

Mr. McKINNEY. That is not a part of the general law.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Well, if that is not required by the law, why do you make the point that the actual mother could not receive a pension because she could not be shown to have been dependent on this son?

Mr. CURTIS. She never had any actual relation to this child except for a few weeks after his birth. I must adhere to the position I have already taken on this question.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. But is there anything in the law to prevent the natural mother from receiving a pension?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Will you show it to me, if you please?

Mr. CURTIS. It would take a long time to go over the pension laws; and at this late hour I am not disposed to undertake it.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. But now is the time. The Pension Committee ought to be prepared to meet these questions when they are raised. I respectfully submit there is nothing in the law requiring what the gentleman says is required. I make the issue, and I call for the proof on the part of those who hold the laboring oar.

Mr. MEREDITH. Mr. Chairman, this bill ought not to pass for two reasons. In the first place, notwithstanding what the gentleman from New York [Mr. CURTIS] has said, I am satisfied in my own mind that if the real mother of this man should be found and should make her application to the Pension Office, she would be entitled to a pension under the laws as they now exist.

Mr. SCOTT. How could she show her dependence on the son?

Mr. MEREDITH. She is not required to do so, as I understand it, under the law.

I am opposed to the bill for that reason in the first place. But there is another reason, Mr. Chairman, why I am opposed to the bill. I think we are stretching this pension business pretty far when we go around hunting up adopted mothers. Now, I have heard of adopted children, but this is about the first time in my experience that I have heard of this claim in behalf of an adopted mother, and I have no doubt in my own mind that if we establish this kind of a precedent here, there are quite a number of good old ladies who would be entirely willing to adopt the whole Army if they could get pensions thereby. We would get into the adoption business on a considerable scale. I do not think that we ought to embark upon it, and for that reason I object to the passage of the bill. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question being taken on the amendment of the committee, it was adopted.

The question recurred on laying aside the bill to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation; and on a division (demanded by Mr. EVERETT) there were—ayes 70, noes 20.

Mr. KILGORE. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. KILGORE and Mr. MARTIN were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 75, noes 10.

Mr. KILGORE. No quorum.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole House having had under consideration the Private Calendar under the rules of the House, had directed him to report certain bills with sundry recommendations.

HIRAM STIMSON.

The first business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 1424) for the relief of Hiram Stimson, reported with a recommendation that the bill be ordered to lie on the table.

The recommendation of the Committee of the Whole was concurred in, and the bill was laid on the table.

JAMES A. DAVIS.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 4485) granting a pension to James A. Davis. The bill was read at length.

The question being taken on the engrossment and third reading of the bill,

Mr. BAILEY said: I demand a division.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over with the previous question ordered on its engrossment and third reading—

Mr. DOCKERY. And on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Let me suggest to the gentleman that the same order be made with regard to the other bill.

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. This is the only bill reported favorably.

Mr. BAILEY. Then I am willing to withdraw the demand for a division on the engrossment and third reading of the bill, and will raise the question on the passage.

So (no further count being demanded) the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and it was accordingly engrossed and read the third time. The question being on its passage,

Mr. BAILEY. I demand a division.

Mr. MARTIN. Now I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over with an agreement that the previous question be ordered on the passage of the bill.

In that connection, Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry. Would there be, if that order were made, fifteen minutes on each side for debate?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The debate in the House, the Chair thinks, could not be had under that rule except by unanimous consent, the bill having been discussed in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MARTIN. Then I include in the request that fifteen minutes on either side be allowed for discussion.

Mr. WILSON of Missouri. This matter has been fully debated already. I do not think that anybody desires further discussion. There is no opposition to the bill. Even the gentleman from Texas himself is in favor of it. He is only making the point on principle, he says.

Mr. MARTIN. Then I modify the request so far as the time for debate is concerned.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the previous question be considered as ordered upon the passage of the bill, and that it go over to be called up hereafter.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

NANCY E. RENFRO.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 3202) from the Calendar of Unfinished Business, being a bill to pension Nancy E. Renfro. This bill has been favorably reported from the Committee of the Whole, and the previous question ordered on its engrossment and third reading. It ought to have been considered before the two bills just reported from the Committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman is correct in that, and the bill will be read.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. MCRAE. I now ask the previous question upon the bill. The previous question was ordered.

The question being taken on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. I demand a division.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Has the previous question been ordered on the passage of this bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. McRAE. My motion was for the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But under the rule the previous question can only apply as far as the engrossment and third reading.

Mr. McRAE. The previous question applied to that stage of the bill about a month ago.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that the bill has not been ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. McRAE. I think that is a mistake. This is one of the bills which came over by consent some time ago, and I believe is the only one that has not been passed. The time allowed was not sufficient to finish all of them on the Calendar.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. DOCKERY. The previous question can now be ordered on the passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It can be ordered now, the question being on the passage of the bill. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that the previous question be considered as ordered on the passage of the bill.

There was no objection.

The question being taken on the passage of the bill, on a division (demanded by Mr. BAILEY) there were—ayes 65, noes 1.

Mr. BAILEY. No quorum.

Mr. SCOTT. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, April 16, 1892.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

GRAND RIVER, MICHIGAN.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of the survey of Grand River, below Grand Rapids, with a view of determining the existence or nonexistence of underlying rocks, the hydraulics of the river, and the detailed topography of the valley subject to the overflow; which was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

CHEYENNE AND ARAPAHOE INDIANS, OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior with its inclosures, submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the support of the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indians in Oklahoma, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893; which was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

LATE ENSIGN D. T. TERRELL, UNITED STATES NAVY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 570) to provide for the removal of the remains of the late ensign D. F. Terrell, United States Navy, from Sitka, Alaska, to his home in the State of Mississippi.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, the bill, the title of which has just been read, passed the Senate unanimously. It is to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to provide for the removal of the remains of Ensign Terrell from Sitka, Alaska, where he is buried, to his home in Mississippi. I ask the unanimous consent of the House that the bill may be taken up and acted upon at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. KILGORE. I would like to know what reason there is for the passage of this bill?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. The reason is that this young man is a graduate of the Naval Academy, who was an officer on board the steamer Pinta, and who died while the vessel was in the harbor of Sitka, Alaska. His remains are buried at Sitka, and it is but proper that this action should be taken.

Mr. KILGORE. Is there any proposition to bring home the remains of the privates who died there, and have them buried among their people?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I do not know. He held simply the rank of ensign. Do you object?

Mr. KILGORE. I do.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I ask the reference of this bill to the appropriate committee, and I hope there will be an early report upon it.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be printed and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Senate bills of the following titles were severally laid before the House by the Speaker, read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred to the committees named below:

A bill (S. 754) to authorize the sale of the site of St. Francis Barracks, Florida, the sale or removal of the improvement thereof, and to provide for a new site and the construction of suitable buildings thereon—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 1665) to authorize the Grand Rapids Water and Electric Power Company, of Grand Rapids, Minn., to construct a dam across the Mississippi River—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

A bill (S. 1758) to provide for the erection of an additional fire-proof building for the National Museum—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

A bill (S. 1796) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Tonkawa tribe of Indians, in Oklahoma Territory, and to make an appropriation to carry the same into effect—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A bill (S. 2004) granting a pension to Mary Clare Kelly—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 2021) granting the right and authority to the Mexican Gulf, Pacific and Puget Sound Railroad Company, a company organized under the laws of the States of Florida and Alabama, to build one bridge over each of the following-named rivers in the State of Alabama, viz, the Alabama River, the Warrior River, the Sipsey River, and the Tennessee River; the said bridges to be used, operated for and in behalf of the Mexican Gulf, Pacific and Puget Sound Railroad Company to carry freight and passengers by rail and otherwise—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

A bill (S. 2254) authorizing the Quincy Pontoon Bridge Company to construct and maintain a pontoon bridge across the Mississippi River at the city of Quincy, in the State of Illinois—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

A bill (S. 2437) granting to the Topeka Water and Electric Power Company, of Kansas, the right to erect and maintain a dam or dams across the Kansas River, within Shawnee County, in the State of Kansas—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

A bill (S. 1737) for the relief of William A. Richards, United States surveyor-general of Wyoming—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 371) granting a pension to John Chamberlain—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Joint resolution (S. R. 73) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point, Francisco Alcantara, of Venezuela—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 524) extending the privileges of free delivery of mails—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Joint resolution (S. R. 15) for the erection and location of a bronze statue of Christopher Columbus, and the removal of the Naval Monument to a new site—to the Committee on the Library.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows: To Mr. SMITH of Illinois, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. BABBITT, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. STORER, until Wednesday, April 20, on account of important business.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT QUINCY, ILL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2254) authorizing the Quincy Pontoon Company to construct and maintain a pontoon bridge across the Mississippi River at the city of Quincy, in the State of Illinois.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WIKE] asks unanimous consent that the bill for the present lie on the Speaker's table. If there be no objection that order will be made. There was no objection.

MILITARY POST NEAR LITTLE ROCK, ARK.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 113) to establish a military post near Little Rock, Ark.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon the city of Little Rock conveying, or causing to be conveyed, to the United States the fee simple title to not less than 1,000 acres of land situated within 10 miles of said city, and on or near a railroad, and constituting an eligible and suitable site for an army post, and to be approved and accepted by the Secretary of War for that purpose, then and thereupon there shall be established and located on said lands an army post of such character and capacity as the Secretary of War shall direct and approve; and upon the approval and acceptance of said lands by the Secretary of War for an army post, and in consideration of the conveyance to the United States of said lands, all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the parcel of land situated in said city, and commonly known as the "Arsenal grounds," and bounded on the north by Ninth street, and on the east by McAlmont street, and on the west by the Quapaw line, containing 36 acres, more or less, shall become vested in the city of Little Rock upon the express trust and condition that said grounds shall be forever exclusively devoted to the uses and purposes of a public park for said city.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of defraying the expenses of locating said army post as aforesaid, and of constructing barracks, quarters, hospital, kitchens, mess halls, stables, storehouses, magazines, and other necessary and suitable buildings, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as is necessary, the same to be drawn from the Treasury and applied to said purposes under the direction of the Secretary of War: Provided, That no part of said sum hereby appropriated shall be expended until the aforesaid tract of land shall have been conveyed to and accepted by the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not hear the last part of the first section read. I hope it will be read again. It is the part in regard to the park.

The section was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now see the purpose of the section; that is, that the land now owned by the Government at Little Rock is to be transferred to that city in consideration of the fact that the city of Little Rock gives to the Government a tract containing not less than a thousand acres. Now, I have no objection to that bill, because I think it is a very proper point at which to locate a military post; but inasmuch as the title has not been transferred and the transaction has not been consummated, I think no legislation ought to be had until title is made to the United States. I will only consent to its coming before the House at this time with the understanding that the second section be stricken out.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, in order to obtain unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill, and the assurance of the gentleman from Indiana that a proper appropriation will be made when the title is perfected, I will state to the gentleman from Indiana that I will make no objection to the second section being stricken out.

Mr. HOLMAN. And that it shall not be restored. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Will the gentleman submit his amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the motion that the second section be stricken out.

The second section was again read.

Mr. TERRY. I move the previous question on the amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Indiana, on whose motion that section is to be stricken out, how this transaction can be carried out without an appropriation.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend will see that no title has yet been acquired by the Government to the thousand acres of land.

Mr. DINGLEY. But there must be an appropriation in order to carry out the work which this bill authorizes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not until the Government acquires title to that land.

Mr. DINGLEY. Then you simply want to postpone an appropriation for the work authorized by this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is a uniformity in the application of that principle, and the gentleman from Maine can not point to an exception.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TERRY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH MENOMONEE RESERVATION, WISCONSIN.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5133) to authorize the Marinette and Western Railroad Company to construct a railroad through the Menomonee Reservation, in the State of Wisconsin.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5133) to authorize the Marinette and Western Railroad Company to construct a railroad through the Menomonee Reservation, in the State of Wisconsin.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Marinette and Western Railway Company, a corporation created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Wisconsin, be, and the same is hereby, invested and empowered with the right of locating, constructing, equipping, operating, using, and maintaining a railroad, telegraph, and telephone line, running in an easterly and westerly direction, in, on, upon, and through the Menomonee Indian Reservation, comprised of township 30, in ranges 13, 14, and 15, in Shawano County, State of Wisconsin, with the right to construct, use, and maintain such tracks, turnouts, and sidings as said company may deem it to their interest to construct along and upon the right of way and depot grounds of said railroad herein provided for: Provided, That the company shall have the right to adopt the most feasible and practicable route in following the general direction hereinbefore specified.

SEC. 2. That said corporation is authorized to take and use for all purposes of a railroad, telegraph, and telephone line, and for no other purpose, a right of way 100 feet in width through said Indian reservation, and to take and use a strip of land 200 feet in width, with the length of 3,000 feet, in addition to the right of way, for stations, for every 6 miles of road, with the right to use such additional ground where there are heavy cut or fills as may be necessary for the construction and maintenance of the roadbed, not exceeding 100 feet on each side of said right of way, or so much thereof as may be included in said cut or fill; but no part of the lands herein authorized to be taken shall be leased or sold by the company, and they shall not be used except in such manner and for such purposes only as shall be necessary for the construction and convenient operation of said railroad, telegraph, and telephone lines; and when any portion thereof shall cease to be so used such portion shall revert to the nation or tribe of Indians from which the same was taken.

SEC. 3. That before said railroad shall be constructed through any lands held by individual occupants according to the laws, customs, and usages of any of the Indian members of said Menomonee tribe or tribes through which it may be constructed, full compensation shall be made to such occupants for all property to be taken or damage done by reason of the construction of said railroad. In case of failure to make amicable settlement with any occupant, such compensation shall be determined by the appointment of three disinterested referees, a majority of whom shall be a quorum for the transaction of business, to be appointed, one by the President, one by the chief of the nation to which said occupant belongs, and one by the railroad company, who, before entering upon the duties of their appraisements, shall take and subscribe an oath that they will faithfully and impartially discharge the duties of appraisement, which oath, duly certified, shall be returned with their award to and filed with the Secretary of the Interior within twenty days from the completion thereof, and a majority of said referees shall be competent to act in case of the absence of a member, after due notice; and upon the failure of either party to make such appointment within thirty days after the appointment made by the President, the vacancy shall be filled by the judge of the district court for the eastern district of Wisconsin, upon application of either party. The person appointed by the President shall be chairman of said board, and shall appoint the time and place of all hearings within the nation to which said occupant belongs. Each of said referees shall receive for his services the sum of $1 per day for each day they are engaged in the trial of the cause submitted to them under this act, with mileage at 5 cents per mile. A majority of the board, where all can not agree, may make the award. Either party being dissatisfied with the finding of the referees shall have the right, within ninety days after the making of the award and notice of the same, to appeal by original petition to the district court for the eastern district of Wisconsin, having jurisdiction over the place where the land lies, which court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the subject-matter of the petition according to the laws of the State of Wisconsin for determining damages when property is taken for railroad purposes. If, upon the hearing of said appeal, the judgment of the court shall be for a larger sum than the award of the referees or a sum equal to said award the costs of said appeal shall be adjudged against the railroad company. If the judgment of the court shall be for a sum less than the award made by the referees, then the costs shall be adjudged against the party claiming damages. All proceedings of said district court upon appeal from the award of the referees shall be conducted in the same manner as an original action brought therein, except that the court may direct formal pleadings to be made and served.

SEC. 4. That said railroad company shall pay to the Secretary of the Interior, for the benefit of the particular nation or tribes through whose land said line may be located, the sum of $50 per mile for each mile of road constructed and maintained in said Indian reservation, in addition to the compensation provided for in this act for property taken or damages done individual occupants by the construction of said road, to be paid as each 5 miles of the railroad is graded. If, however, the general council of the Menomonee tribe of Indians through whose lands said railroad may be located shall, within four months after the filing of maps of definite location as set forth in section 5 of this act, dissent from the allowance hereinbefore provided for, and shall certify the same to the Secretary of the Interior, then all compensation to be paid to such dissenting nation or tribe under the provisions of this act shall be determined as provided in section 3 for the determination of the compensation to be paid to the individual occupants of lands, with the right of appeal to the court upon the same terms, conditions, and requirements as therein provided: Provided, That the amount awarded or adjudged to be paid by said railroad company for such dissenting nation or tribe shall be in lieu of the compensation the said nation or tribe would be entitled to receive under the foregoing provision.

SEC. 5. That said company shall cause maps, showing the route of its located line through said Territory, to be filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, and also to be filed in the office of the chief or chiefs of said Menomonee tribe of Indians through whose lands said railroad may be located, and after the filing of said maps no claim for subsequent settlement or improvement upon the right of way shown by said maps shall be valid against said company: Provided, That when a map showing any portion of said railroad's located line is filed as herein provided for, said company shall commence grading said located line within one year thereafter or such location shall be void.

SEC. 6. That the officers, servants, and employes of said company necessary to the construction and management of said road shall be allowed to reside while so engaged upon such right of way, but subject to the provisions of the Indian intercourse laws and such rules and regulations as may be established by the Secretary of the Interior in conformity with said intercourse laws.

SEC. 7. That said railway company shall construct and maintain continually all road and highway crossings and necessary bridges over said railroad, wherever such roads and highways do now or may hereafter cross said railway's right of way or may be by the proper authorities laid across the same.

SEC. 8. That said Marquette and Western Railway Company shall accept this right of way upon the express condition, binding upon itself, its successors, and assigns, that they will neither aid, advise, nor assist in any effort looking towards extinguishing or changing the present tenure of the Indians to their lands in said reservation, and will not attempt to secure from the said Indians any further grant of land, or its occupancy, than is hereinbefore provided: Provided, That any violation of the conditions mentioned in this section shall operate as a forfeiture of all rights and privileges of said railroad under this act.

SEC. 9. That all mortgages executed by said railroad company conveying any portion of its railroad, with its franchises, that may be constructed in said Indian reservation, shall be recorded in the Department of the Interior, and the record thereof shall be prima facie evidence and notice of their execution, and shall convey all rights and property of said company as therein expressed.

SEC. 10. That Congress may at any time amend, add to, alter, or repeal this act, and the right of way herein and hereby granted shall not be assigned or transferred in any form whatever prior to the construction and completion of said road, except as to mortgage or other lien that may be given or secured thereon to aid in the construction thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Are there any amendments to the bill reported by the committee?

Mr. LYNCH. There are amendments reported from the committee and suggested by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the question will be taken on the amendments in gross.

There was no objection.

The amendments are as follows:

Insert after the word "graded," in the eighth line, on page 5, the following: "And also $15 per mile per annum so long as such reservation shall be used and occupied as a reservation by said tribe of Indians."

Also amend by adding a new section, to be designated as section 11, as follows:

"SEC. 11. That said railway shall not charge more for the transportation of freight or passengers through said reservation than for like services outside of the same."

Add after the word "county," in the eleventh line of section 1, the following: "and township 30 in range 16, Oconto County."

Add after the word "stations," in the seventh line of section 2, the following: "purposes not to exceed one station."

Strike out the words "the chief of the nation," after the word "by," in the twelfth line, on page 3, and insert the words, "the Menomonee Indians in general council."

Add at the end of section 3 the following:

"Provided, That all costs of appraisement and compensation of referees shall be paid by the railway company."

Add at the end of section 4 the following:

"Provided, That the title to all timber on the right of way herein granted shall remain in the Menomonee tribe of Indians, and shall be sold and disposed of for the benefit of said Indians under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, all such timber to be removed within a reasonable time after the filing of maps of definite location of the right of way by said company, and the approval thereof by the Secretary of the Interior, to the end that the company shall not be hindered or delayed in the construction of its road."

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LYNCH, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

THOMAS CHAMBERS.

Mr. STEPHENSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1095) for the relief of Thomas Chambers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Thomas Chambers, of Mackinac, Mich., the sum of $3,654.56, in full compensation for the additional expenses incurred by him in carrying the Canada mails, as contractor on route numbered 2443, from Sault de Ste. Marie, Mich., to Mackinac, Mich., from July 1, 1875, to June 30, 1879, inclusive, he having contracted to carry United States mails only.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the report ought to be read, Mr. Speaker.

The report was read at length for information.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BUTLER. Reserving the right to object, I desire to inquire if the Post-Office Department has made any recommendation for the passage of this bill?

Mr. STEPHENSON. The bill has passed the Senate twice.

Mr. BUTLER. But my question is as to whether the Post-Office Department has made any recommendation in regard to this bill.

Mr. STEPHENSON. The bill has passed the Senate twice.

Mr. BUTLER. That is not an answer to my question. If the Department has not made a recommendation approving it, I object.

Mr. STEPHENSON. It is approved by the Department.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa object? The Chair understood the gentleman's objection to be conditional.

Mr. BUTLER. I got no answer to my question, and I object.

Mr. HERBERT. Regular order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

A MEMBER. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, is it not proper that bills which have come over with the previous question ordered upon them should be first disposed of?

The SPEAKER. The Chair finds from the Journal that on last evening two bills were ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and the previous question was ordered upon their passage. Those bills will now be submitted to the House.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HULL. The Committee of the Whole at previous sessions reported several bills to the House which stand, I think, in exactly the same position as those reported last evening. Do not those bills come under the head of unfinished business?

The SPEAKER. As to the other bills to which the gentleman refers, the Chair understands that the previous question was ordered upon their engrossment and third reading, but not upon their passage. There is a distinction made in the rules and in the practice of the House, and where the previous question has been ordered on the passage of the bills they come up before the House in this way.

Mr. HULL. I understood that all these bills were on precisely the same footing.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not so understand. It appears from the Journal that the previous question was ordered last evening on the passage of two bills. The Clerk will report the first bill.

JAMES A. DAVIS.

The first bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union with the previous question ordered upon its passage was a bill (H. R. 4488) granting a pension to James A. Davis.

The bill was read in full, and passed.

Mr. MARTIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NANCY E. RENFRO.

The second bill was a bill (H. R. 3202) to pension Nancy E. Renfro.

The bill was read in full, and passed.

Mr. MCRAE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the committees for reports.

SECTIONS 2807 AND 2881, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. COOMBS, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 7026) to amend section 2807 and section 2881 of the Revised Statutes; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

EDUCATION AND CITIZENSHIP OF INDIANS.

Mr. PEEL, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation a bill (H. R. 6878) to regulate the education and citizenship of Indians; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

MEMORIAL IN RELATION TO THE MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the gentleman to withhold that motion for a moment in order that I may ask unanimous consent to have printed in document form a memorial in regard to the Mississippi River, which I think will be useful in connection with the river and harbor appropriation bill. It is a memorial by Capt. John Cowdon.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The motion of Mr. HERBERT was then agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. SHIVELY in the chair.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. PENDLETON].

Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. Chairman, I very much dislike to differ with the veteran economist of the House, because I have always honored the venerable statesman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. Nevertheless, I think that a time comes when we can go too far in the direction of economy. Under that belief I shall vote against the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, and also, for another reason, against the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE]. I do not believe that it is in harmony with Democratic policy not to try to continue to increase our Navy. I think the legislation upon that subject should be with a view to a steady increase in its strength and efficiency, but at the same time in harmony with the condition of our revenues. If there is one thing in this country that is popular with the American people, if there is one thing for which they will cheerfully vote appropriations, it is our Navy.

The Navy has been popular with our people ever since the war of 1812, and I recollect that in the campaign of 1884 one of the principal charges that the Democratic party made against the Republican administration of our Navy was, that while we had expended nearly $300,000,000 in its support and maintenance, nevertheless at that time we did not have either in commission, in our harbors, or on the high sea, a single ship of war that was capable of facing one of the great ships of modern navies. I know that we criticised our Republican friends very severely upon that point, and that a general pledge was made that if Cleveland were elected in that campaign along with a Democratic Congress we would endeavor to do something to restore the strength and efficiency of a navy of which we had ever been proud.

There are a great many good people in this country who flatter themselves with the idea that there will never be another war in which we may be engaged. It is true that we are most happily situated. It is true that we are far, as a general thing, from the quarrels that prevail among the great nations of Europe. But there never is a time when any nation, however happily situated, can claim for itself that it will always enjoy the blessings of peace. It is not necessary that we should have a great army, for the simple reason that we are protected from foreign invasion by our happy situation. To the south of us there is a Republic that has no desire at any time to engage in warfare with our country.

To the north of us lies Canada, which of itself would never willingly go to war with this country. Consequently, we do not need a great standing army, and probably never shall need it. But a navy is the one defense that this country needs. As Themistocles once said, a navy would be the "wooden walls of Athens," so a navy for this country would be our wooden wall. We have upon our Eastern seacoast more than ten thousand million dollars worth of American property in the great cities of Boston, New York, and Philadelphia in the North; Norfolk, Charleston, Mobile, New Orleans, and other cities in the South, and on the West we have San Francisco.

Now, I say it is wise for us to spend money in order to keep those harbors of ours in a state of defense, in order that whenever a war or a difficulty of any kind with a foreign nation may break out or be threatened, we shall not be restrained in our negotiations by the fear that we are unprepared to protect our commerce upon the high seas; that we may not be prevented from endeavoring to assert our rights by the argument that the agricultural products of our Western fields may be blockaded here in this country from the fact that we have no Navy adequate to their defense.

[Here the hammer fell.]

[Mr. HOLMAN withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

Mr. BOUTELLE was recognized, and yielded twenty minutes to Mr. FELLOWS.

[Mr. FELLOWS withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WATSON].

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully submit to the committee that if we decline to strike out from this appropriation bill the battle ship for which it provides we will lay ourselves open to the charge of having departed from the pledges which we deliberately made to the people at the opening of this session. By adopting the Holman resolution the country was led to understand that this Congress was pledged to retrenchment and reform, and that none of the public moneys would be expended except those that are necessary to carry on the different departments of the Government. I submit to this committee, with the greatest respect, that if we meant anything by that resolution, now is the time for us to demonstrate it.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FELLOWS] spoke about the interior States. He alluded to the State of Georgia, which is a seacoast State. Coming from that State, I desire to say to him that we see no necessity whatever for increasing our Navy, and in the name of those people, oppressed by taxation, by favoritism in the law, by an industrial condition which does not give to the laborers the proper reward of toil, we are opposed to the committing of this Congress to any $350,000,000 scheme to build up an American Navy on a competitive basis with European navies.

The gentleman says that war will surely come; that we will need this Navy. Let us stop and ask ourselves what wars have come upon us since we achieved our independence? I submit to this committee and to this country that it is not so much the guns you have, it is not so much the forts you have, it is not so much the ironclads you have, as it is the people that you have, which makes you a dangerous antagonist in war. Sixty millions of people, Anglo-Saxons, who never met an enemy except to crush him; Anglo-Saxons, who have been the vanguard of civilization and of successful war in modern times, have nothing to fear from any other nation on the face of the earth. By his line of argument the gentleman from New York [Mr. FELLOWS] would prove that if China had more cruisers, larger cruisers, more guns, and greater guns than Great Britain, then China would be a more dangerous antagonist than Great Britain! A more untenable position can not be taken.

Mr. Chairman, I submit to the committee that we have nothing to fear from any European nation whatsoever.

Let us take France. What have we to fear from France? She has a quarrel of more than a hundred years with Germany, and the word that leaps to her people's lips as they think about their latest war is "revenge." They think of fighting Germany, not us.

What have we to fear from Germany? Why, sir, that great people knows that any foreign war engaged in by them would lay Germany open to attack on the French frontier, and that the Republic would struggle to regain the lost provinces which the Empire had to surrender.

Now, let us go to England itself. All this talk means England. Let us see whether we have to fear England. Why, sir, it is well known to every gentleman upon this floor that England to-day is a huge nationality oppressed by its own weight. Spread over every portion of the map, with its colonies in every different zone of the earth, with its dependencies that scarcely preserve the semblance of dependencies, with a chronic quarrel on the Afghan frontier with Russia, with myriads of wild tribes in India ready to strike for independence, with Ireland like a thorn in her side, and ready at any time to smite her upon the flank, England dares not have any fight across the seas, where a thousand miles of ocean barrier make our surest defense from her assault.

Gentlemen speak about coast defenses, about armored vessels; but when from the hand of the Almighty was poured out that thousand miles of ocean, there was erected for us free of cost, to be maintained forever, the surest bulwark from European attack. It is well known that these monster war ships can not even come across the Atlantic or the Pacific without the greatest difficulty. They can hardly carry the coal necessary for the trip, much less a supply for subsequent operations. They can scarcely be managed upon the great deep. It will be remembered by this committee that at a peaceful review in the harbor of Portsmouth, in Great Britain, when there was nothing to be done except to make a display, that those great ironclads, the Thunderer, the Terrible, the Invincible, etc., fell foul of one another, and the English navy came near to disaster on a peaceful parade.

My friend from West Virginia [Mr. PENDLETON] said this is no time to economize. If there was a speck of war in the horizon I would agree with him, because the national welfare, the national honor must be maintained; but I beg leave to submit to this committee that every war we have yet had since our independence was a war of aggression. Within five days after our declaration of war in 1812 Great Britain withdrew her orders in council, the cause of war. The impressment of seamen, which was the only other surviving cause of war, we are warranted in believing could have been removed by the same peaceful methods. We all know that our grievances in that war were not the direct result of English aggression upon us, but originated in a furious contest raging between Bonaparte and Great Britain. They were not aimed at us primarily.

The war with Mexico was also a war of aggression. Mr. Chairman, that great captain, Gen. Grant, never gave his country a better lesson in statesmanship than when he demonstrated that by conservatism and prudence and firmness so delicate a question as that of the Alabama claims, involving a claim against the greatest nation on earth, could be settled by peaceful and honorable arbitration, and the $15,000,000 award secured to the national coffers. I believe the time is approaching when wars—those barbarous settlements of disputes by an appeal to arms—will just as much be a relic of the past, things that we leave behind us in our advance to higher and better development, as are now the old, rude ways of trial by combat and dueling or any other method of personal strife.

Now, the gentleman says there is no need of economy. Upon that subject I desire to say briefly, that if he thinks there is no need of economy at this time he is strangely unobservant of those things that every man in this House should observe.

Just casually this morning I took extracts from several papers. I beg leave to call the attention of this House to them. The state of affairs they show is appalling and is worthy of consideration here. Sir, the real truth is that the enemies we have to dread in the future are, not Great Britain, not France, not Germany, not Italy, not Mexico, but our own people. What do I mean by that? I mean bad laws here at home; I mean class legislation at home; I mean overgrown and insolent corporations here at home; I mean the greed of monopolies here at home. I say, Mr. Chairman, if there ever was a time when that fact ought to impress itself upon this House, now is the time. It should certainly deter us from committing ourselves to the plan of spending $350,000,000 upon our Navy.

Only two days ago we were reminded by the resolutions introduced by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN] that thousands of people in the State of Mississippi are homeless and destitute, and suffering for food—holding out their hands and asking this National Assembly to give them relief.

A most distressing state of things! I find that the same is true in the State of Alabama, the State of the gentleman [Mr. HERBERT] who ably advocates this bill. I find that it is true in Arkansas; and I find it is true in Louisiana. And all around the domestic horizon there is trouble, Mr. Chairman. There is pestilence; there is flood; there are cyclones; there is poverty; there is industrial depression. There is suffering from unjust laws, and petitions that those laws be repealed and better ones made.

In that connection, Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FELLOWS], who made such an eloquent speech on the floor, to an editorial in yesterday's St. Louis Republic. It is not the statement of a demagogue, not an agitator speaking in the line of his calling. It is the editor of one of the most powerful journals of the Southwest. What does he say? I am glad to see that I have got my friend's attention. What does the editor say?

Think of it—an increase of 153 per cent in the number of homeless farmers in Kansas in only ten years of Republican tariff taxes against return cargoes in exchange for farm surplus!

Think of it, over a third of the farmers in the two great Republican States of Kansas and Ohio homeless under the Republican taxation and finance of thirty years.

And remember that these figures of homeless farmers do not include those who have mortgages on their homes. There is a private mortgage debt of between two and three thousand millions of dollars on homes and farms in this country, and the bulk of it is on the producers of the Mississippi Valley.

If such statements, coming from such sources, do not arouse attention and create an irresistible demand for severe economy in spending the taxes of these people, then indeed are we drifting to dangers blindly, recklessly, hopelessly.

Now, I come to Georgia, my own State. The gentleman alluded to says we want "protection." So we do, but we do not want protection from England. We can protect ourselves from England. We do not want protection from France; France is not hurting us. But we want protection from outrageous legislation that is taxing our people to death; which is putting labor under the heels of monopoly, and making corporations greater than the citizen.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WATSON. I should like about five minutes more.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have no objection to the extension of the gentleman's time, but it should be understood that it is to be a concession outside of the regular limit fixed for the debate.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Georgia be allowed five minutes more, not to come out of the time allowed on either side.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I call attention to an article from the New York World of April 13, inspired by a certain investigation set on foot by the Atlanta Journal, one of the most honest and straightforward opponents that I have and which my party has; a paper which fights us right "straight from the shoulder," but does it in that manly way which makes one glad that he has an honorable opponent to encounter. The Atlanta Journal, I say, has exposed a terrible state of affairs among the laborers in the city of Atlanta; a city that has had "booms" in real estate; a city that has been a paradise of real-estate gambling; a city that is great as a railroad center; a city that is rich in banking capital and in the splendid enterprise of its people; but a city where the corporation has oppressed the individual, and the laborer as he works does not get an adequate reward for his labor. I read:

ATLANTA, GA., April 11.
The Evening Journal says that "pestilence and famine exist in the Exposition Mills factory district as terrible as that in the Czar's domain. The living are starving by degrees, the dead are unburied. Many of the sufferers will be relieved by death before to-morrow dawns."

And at the conclusion of the article is this quotation from Dr. Hawthorne, an eminent Baptist divine, whose name is known all through the South and honored wherever known. Dr. Hawthorne says:

I have been in the slums of New York—

I hope the gentleman from New York [Mr. FELLOWS] will note that—and other large cities, but I can truthfully say that I never saw misery or suffering equal to this.

It was attempted to be shown there that the statements of the Atlanta Journal were untrue. This factory tried to clear its skirts by the usual method of exonerating statements, justifying its conduct towards its employees and denying that unusual suffering prevailed among its employees.

In the Atlanta Journal which reached me this morning I see a statement in reply to the factory officials from the workmen themselves, signed with their names, and startling in its contents. They state that those mills, a tariff-protected industry, are paying to their laborers the magnificent sum of 36 cents a day for their labor, and that the average wage fund in the factory district is 9 cents a head divided among the members of the family, out of which they must supply themselves with food, clothing, and medicine. No wonder the cry of distress is heard.

Now, with these facts I ask gentlemen whether it is strange that there should be pestilence and famine. One workman, W. N. Cochran, says that because he made an exposure of these facts and told the truth about the destitution which prevailed, in order that investigation and relief might be had, he was turned out of his employment at the factory, and would have to seek work in some other city. What a commentary upon our wretched system—one laborer cast adrift because he dared to say that other laborers were hungry, sick, destitute.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I beg leave to say to this House that what we want is not the building up of a $350,000,000 navy, but what we want is relief, what we want is retrenchment, what we want is fair dealing under the law.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FELLOWS] spoke of defacing records. Such motions as these made by the gentleman from Indiana on this bill deface no record. They preserve a record—the old Jeffersonian record of economy and of hostility to great naval and army establishments. Such a record deserves to be preserved and handed down, sacred and inviolate, to future times. [Applause.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. I yield twenty minutes to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Chairman, the purposes of a navy (which I believe is the subject under discussion, although we have been led away from it a little) are, as I understand them, the protection and development of commerce, the defense of American citizens and American interests in all parts of the world, and the protection of American coasts and American interests at home in time of war.

First, as to our commerce. We have got so much into the habit of referring to the decline of our foreign commerce that we are apt to forget that, though its amount is relatively small—much smaller than it ought to be—it is still absolutely very large. Over a million tons (an increase of 50,000 tons in the past year) engaged in the foreign carrying trade is not an interest to be lightly set aside. If to that is added our great coastwise and lake traffic, you will find that we stand second in the list of nations of the world and far ahead of those that come after us in point of total tonnage. Along the Atlantic coast alone we have 1,700,000 tons of coastwise traffic, and on the lakes 1,200,000 tons. If you turn to the statistics of the "Shipping World" you will find that in steamers of over 100 tons we stand fourth, while in sailing tonnage we stand second among the nations of the world. This great coastwise tonnage, as well as our foreign carrying trade, needs protection—the protection of the American flag on American public ships. Commerce can not be guarded except by a navy, and without armed protection it retreats and disappears.

Moreover, the development of commerce has followed naval supremacy. You may say what you please about English laws; but the great height of supremacy which England has reached in maritime commerce during the present century dates from the Napoleonic wars when with her victorious navy she swept from the sea every merchant ship of a hostile nation and suppressed nearly all the commerce of neutral flags. The navy of England is the great bulwark of her commerce, and we can not hope to build up our carrying trade unless we give it a similar protection.

Then, in the second place, for the protection of American business interests, and American citizens in all parts of the world wherever they may go, we want to have the American flag on American men-of-war. Every nation, barbarous or civilized, near or remote, should know that behind the American merchant and the American traveler is an American navy.

Lastly, and most important of all, we need protection for our coasts. I am the hearty and cordial friend of land defenses, and we must have them, but they are of slow growth and can not be everywhere. We must have powerful ships, heavy in guns and armor, able to fight at sea, and sufficient, with the support of fast cruisers, to keep a hostile fleet from ever coming within range of our coasts. These powerful ships are the true coast defenses, always ready to be moved in an instant to the point of danger.

Such danger exists. It is all very well for gentlemen to talk about our being in no peril of war; but wars do not come or stay away on theories; they come out of men's passions, rising hotly over disputed questions of fact.

The American people are as sensitive to their honor and their interests as any people on earth. Those interests may be attacked, that honor may be assailed, by any nation at any time. We can not tell when the occasion may come; but as we stand to-day, our great coast cities are undefended and helpless. I trust we may not have war with anyone, but I do not shut my eyes to its possibility. But a little while ago and war with Germany seemed not improbable. If it had come we could not have touched Germany by land nor could Germany have reached us. But Germany could have ravaged our coasts and we should have been helpless.

Take the case of England. She is our neighbor by land as well as by sea. I sincerely trust that there may never be war with England. Neither the English nor the American people desire it, or wish for aught but friendly relations. Nevertheless, despite all this friendly feeling it is best to face facts. England has drawn about us, from Halifax to the West Indies, a line of strong fortifications and of naval stations. It is the same at Vancouver. If you will read the very able report of the gentleman from California [Mr. CUTTING] on the militia bill, you will see what preparations England is making on our northern border, and how readily she could bring in troops and blockade our ports with her ships. I am not an alarmist. I do not believe England wishes to make war on this country, and I am certain the English people have no such wish.

But English politics are violent. England has unscrupulous party men and party chiefs like the rest of the world, and the press of London is hostile with the violent hostility of ignorance towards the United States. It is not difficult to imagine the party to which we owe the invention of "jingoism," in a desperate struggle to retain political power, fomenting for party ends a quarrel which might easily result in war, although both nations were averse to it. Then these threatening preparations on the East and West and North would come in play, and where should we be without a powerful navy to meet the first assault? We should win in the end, but the loss of the first few months would outrun a hundredfold the cost of a larger navy than we have ever dreamed of building.

Gentlemen, moreover do not stop to calculate the enormous quickness with which modern wars are fought. Three months elapsed in this country between the firing on Fort Sumter and the first serious battle of the war because neither side was ready; but the battle which crushed France to the earth, the battle of Sedan, was within forty-nine days after the declaration of war. The battle of Lissa, a decisive battle in the war between Austria and Italy, a naval battle, was fought within thirty days.

No one doubts for a moment what the gentlemen who have preceded me have referred to—the bravery of the American people. We all know that Americans are brave; but bravery can not fight upon the seas without ships. You must have something to meet the enemy when he comes. You can build monitors on this floor in a few minutes, but you can not build them to fight at sea in that time.

In other words, if we want to have peace we must guarantee it, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. FELLOWS] said, by an efficient navy. Now, what have we got to protect our commerce, and meet the perils of possible war? The old Navy is practically gone. We have forty ships, counting the practice cruiser, in process of construction or building. When complete, although the ships are of the best types, it is still an utterly inadequate force for our needs. We have not to-day a single ship aloft that could meet an attack from the navies of any great power that might quarrel with us. We have a few such vessels building, but we must have more of them, and that, too, without delay. If war came we might put armies of millions into the field; but we could not prevent the destruction of a single one of the great cities that line our coasts on the Pacific and on the Atlantic. We are still, despite all that has been done, absolutely helpless before the navies of Europe, if any one of them at any time chooses to make war upon us.

That is not a fit position for this great Republic to occupy. We ought to be in a condition of assured defense. We have no desire for aggression; we have no desire for the acquisition of territory; but we ought to have a sufficient fleet to protect our cities and to prevent any other nation from blockading our ports. We have developed great plants and can now make our guns and armor ourselves. This is an immense step, but if shipbuilding is stopped we shall lose these plants and these mechanics with them, and such a loss would be a national disaster.

Gentlemen talk as if only the interests of the coast were involved. Sir, every bale of cotton, every bushel of our wheat that we sell to the outside world, may be locked up here by the fleets of foreign nations, because we have not the power to hold our own harbors in case trouble comes. The defense of our coast and commerce from even a selfish point of view is not sectional, but national in the highest and best sense.

Mr. Chairman, the policy of the United States in regard to the Navy has been a simple and uniform policy. It has been that of having an efficient navy—ships of the highest type—fleets large enough for defense, not large enough to tempt us to aggression or attack. This was the policy which raised the Navy to the point of glory which it won in the war of 1812. It has been the policy of Federalists, and of Democrats, of Whigs and Republicans alike; it has been the American policy from the beginning. After the exhaustion of the great civil war, that policy was allowed to drop. Since then it has been taken up by Democratic and Republican administrations, by Democratic and Republican Congresses, and has been carried on.

It is not a work to be stopped and laid aside. If you cease building your ships you have the work all to do over again. You ought to add steadily, moderately, to your Navy year by year. It is this policy to which I wish to see this House give an ample support. I think we need much more than one ship, and the bill of the committee appears to me therefore to be utterly inadequate. The amendment proposed will involve only an expenditure of three to four million dollars a year for the building of these ships. England recently in one year appropriated £20,000,000 ($100,000,000) to be spent in two years; and yet she has already the greatest navy in the world. We surely can afford to spend at the rate of from three to four millions of dollars a year to keep our Navy what the honor of our flag and the honor of our nation demand that it should be.

I have never, Mr. Chairman, in discussing naval legislation, brought in the question of party politics, and I never mean to do so. If I were looking solely to political advantage amongst my own people, I should ask nothing better than to have a Democratic House strike down all naval appropriations. But I do not regard this question as a Democratic or as a Republican question. I look upon it as a great American question, as a question of patriotism. I hope this House will vote a sufficient addition to the Navy without regard to party. When I vote on the Army or Navy, or on foreign affairs, I leave my party and my politics behind me.

I do not believe that our politics should go beyond the water's edge. I believe they should stop there, and that is why I advocate the amendment of the gentleman from Maine. Let us have a reasonable addition to the Navy. Let us maintain the policy for which we are all responsible, the American policy that in the past has given us a navy for which we never had occasion to blush. This is a policy which the people of this country, with very few exceptions, consider as of more importance than any other, and on which they are thoroughly agreed. I hope therefore the amendment of the gentleman from Maine will be adopted, and that we shall stand by the Navy as we ought to stand by it, mindful of our interests and never forgetting that it is our first duty to defend our homes and uphold the honor of the flag. [Applause.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS].

Mr. HERBERT. And I yield him ten minutes of my time.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE]. I shall vote for it. I hope it will prevail. But if it is defeated, I shall propose an amendment authorizing half of what is asked—one battleship and six torpedo boats. The Committee on Naval Affairs have unanimously agreed upon one cruiser of the type of the New York. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], after endeavoring to force out the recommendation on a point of order never sustained since the foundation of the Government, has moved to strike out even that. This, then, is a square issue—navy or no navy. Party pledges mean nothing, and each coastwise city must look out for itself in time of danger.

Only six years ago as a naval power we ranked below Turkey, Greece, Chile, Japan, Portugal, and even China. When the vessels now building are completed we shall still be lower than Italy, Germany, and Spain. Yet we have infinitely greater interests at stake. National safety requires that we shall be equal at least to the most insignificant of these powers. Were nine more battleships and thirty torpedo boats added to vessels already authorized we would still be inferior to Great Britain, France, Russia, and Italy. The amendment recommends only two of the nine, and only nine of the thirty torpedo boats. Compare our population, our seacoast, and our exposed interests with those of Italy or France, and the necessity for an increase of our Navy is apparent.

The report of the committee itself is the strongest argument in favor of the rehabilitation of the Navy. Its chairman has had years of service and experience. Twenty-four ships have been authorized while he has been at the head of the table. His integrity, energy, and devotion to the interests of the people have never been questioned. In convincing language he has set forth the necessity for the new navy. Prudent, vigilant, resolute to retrench as far as public safety will permit, his committee has recommended an increase so small that I am astonished that anyone should resist it.

There is no doubt in my mind, Mr. Chairman, but what the country expected far more. Less I know will not satisfy it. Even the gentleman from Indiana ought to understand that the report was made to meet the extremist spirit of retrenchment, without the thought of extravagance. The committee does not even pretend to meet public expectation in the matter. But the gentleman from Alabama, its chairman, has the confidence of the people. His committee have tried to carry out their wishes as far as the situation here would permit. The temper of this House has been a continual menace.

The extravagance of the preceding Congress in general legislation was such that it was feared that this House would rush to the opposite extreme. Sir, extravagance is bad. I have fought against it as hard as anyone on this floor, but I know that over-economy in matters of this sort may be still worse. I will not say which is the worst, the miser or the profligate; but I know that in caring for public industries we ought not to play the part of either. We are not driven to either starvation or overfeeding, but to make a temperate and healthful use of what we have.

Sir, this is no party question. Parties have taken the lead in it as they have predominated, but it is so thoroughly a national question that they have been as one in pushing it on. If one has been disposed to go faster than another, both have agreed that there must be no halt. It is public policy, national safety. We must have the means to protect and the power to save. Must an English fleet anchor off Long Branch and throw a thousand-pound shot into the town of Aurora before the gentleman from Indiana is convinced of this?

Is it necessary for a British squadron to come to off Santa Barbara and pitch a shell over the Sierras and the Rockies into the city of Topeka to prove that this great country has an exposed seacoast? Good God, Mr. Chairman, you might as well refuse to bolt your front door because no tramp had tried it for a month as to assume that we can dwell in continued security because for so long we have not been put to our defense. In protecting our coast we protect the whole country. Ironclads and armored ships are coast defenses. They can be adjusted to every exigency.

Samuel J. Tilden sounded the alarm years ago. He called the attention of the nation to the fact that its ports were at the mercy of foreign assailants. The country responded to the warning. A Democratic Administration took the work in hand. A policy was defined. The people applauded it. It was prosecuted by an able, honest, frugal, and resolute Secretary of the Navy, William C. Whitney. He was succeeded by Benjamin F. Tracy, equally able, frugal, honest, and resolute.

It was said that his precautionary measures in the Chilean imbroglio had made a $3,000,000 deficiency. There was not a word of truth in it. He kept within the appropriation throughout. Not a dollar was wasted. The work for the increase of the Navy has been carried forward on the lines laid down by his predecessor. It is still unfinished. What sort of a figure will the Democratic party cut if it now abandons it altogether? Prudent we will be, economical we will be, but let us draw the line at being niggardly.

By his estimates Secretary Tracy has welcomed our retrenchment policy. It can not be charged that he has been prodigal. He has reduced his estimates $5,300,000 below what his own party actually appropriated for the increase of the Navy last year. The committee has cut down this estimate $3,000,000 more, making in all a reduction of over $8,000,000—a little less than half of what was appropriated last year. If the other heads of Departments had done as well proportionately in the way of retrenchment as Secretary Tracy in his estimates, this House would have an unprecedented record. But if the committees having charge of the appropriations for other Departments do as well as this committee has done the record will be truly marvelous.

Yet the gentleman from Indiana, while rubbing his hands over the retrenchment of the committee, proposes to knock out the only recommendation it has made. I hope he will desist, but if he continues his opposition, I hope, for the credit of this House, that he will be overwhelmingly defeated. It was proper that the committee, after cutting down the close estimate of the Secretary, should recommend the building of at least one of the few ships that he asked for. While the gentleman from Indiana will not concede even this, the country asks for more. I read from the editorial columns of the New York Herald of April 14. Speaking of the proposed amendment, it says:

There is a natural wish for economy not only among the members of Congress, but among the people of this country irrespective of party. No extravagance should be permitted by Congress in any Department of the Government.

But economy does not necessarily mean the mere refraining from spending. Indeed, that course may result in extravagance and waste of the worst kind. Most people now admit that we should have an adequate navy for the defense of our seacoast. To delay in building it may enormously increase its cost without securing its protection when needed.

It would be not extravagance but the truest economy to grant this moderate increase. When finished they would bring our first line of defense up to five fighting ships—a very moderate protection for the amount of property at risk. In any event the battle ships should be provided for. No reasonable expenditure for the new navy will be grudged by the voters of this country. No Congressman need fear that he will be adversely criticised by his constituents for an affirmative vote for these ships. From Oregon to Florida, from Maine to Arizona, the importance of an effective navy is recognized. In authorizing the two additional battle ships Congress will be acting absolutely in harmony with the wishes of the nation.

What the Herald asks for is what the Secretary recommends. The press of the country is reiterating the Herald's demands. Even the Squeedunk Chronicle will not favor a reduction. The committee has refused the battle ships upon the ground that they believe the iron armor can not be furnished as soon as the vessels are launched. The Secretary, however, does not regard this reason as valid. He says that the House committee admits that the delivery of the armor under existing contracts can be completed in 1894. He adds that it is obvious that the new vessels which might be authorized this spring would not be ready for their armor until after the contracts are filled. The iron works have so improved their plants, the Secretary says, that they will be able to turn out 700 tons of armor per month after July 1, and at the end of two years they will have turned out enough for all the battle ships now in process of construction. The Secretary would like to see one or two battle ships authorized, and especially ten torpedo boats and a few small gunboats of from 800 to 1,000 tons each. The torpedo boats would not cost more than $100,000 each, or $1,000,000 in all, and the gunboats would not cost more than $300,000 each. The torpedo boats could be built at various points along the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and some of them could be built on the lakes, if the treaty with Great Britain permitted.

Whatever the facts, time and opportunity ought not to weigh. What other nations have done we can do. All that we have to do now is to determine what we will do.

But the argument made against the battle ships does not apply to torpedo boats. These are essential for coast defense. France to-day has 215; England, 199; China, 69; Austria, with only its Dalmatian coast to protect, 65; Greece, 51; little Denmark, 34; Japan, 28, and Spain, 15, while the United States, with its thousands of miles of seacoast, and its scores of great cities thereon, has only 1.

Gen. Miles has well said that—

The first great desire of the nation is for peace—to forget the horrors of war—and this desire has lulled the people into a feeling of indifference alike unwarranted and unjustifiable. The men who know the real condition of the country hesitate to tell the exact truth about it. The actual knowledge is possessed only by the few who have made a study of the subject, who have had experience in warfare, and who know how great is the progress that has been made in the art of war during the last thirty years. There are some delusions, however, that seem to the military man almost unaccountable. The first is the supposition that there would be plenty of time in which to prepare for war. All history proves that many important wars were decided in a few weeks, some in a few days, and the great majority of them started without any notification whatever. In the last one hundred and ninety years in less than ten cases out of one hundred and twenty have there been any declarations of war preceding actual hostilities.

Another delusion is the one that 60,000,000 of people, with sixty billions of wealth, could depend upon its ingenuity to frighten a great military or naval power away from our frontier or our seacoast. As a matter of fact the ingenuity of man has been taxed for the last thirty years in inventing new engines of war, and American inventors have carried the creations of their genius to England, France, Germany, Russia, and even China, to get them adopted.

The general was arguing in favor of forts and fortifications, but his argument applies equally well to torpedo boats. They are an important factor in the defense of our harbors.

The general shows this in another paragraph:

Another delusion is in the supposition that mere numbers constitute military and naval strength. So many people forget the fact that steam power, electricity, dynamite, and other high explosives, steel guns capable of throwing a ton of iron 10 or 12 miles, smokeless powder, and machine guns are the engines of war now used by every civilized nation, and that it requires years to equip any considerable fort with these appliances.

The torpedo gunboats unquestionably ought to be authorized. The Navy we now have was enough to save us from war with Chile. When our Navy reaches the limit recommended by Secretary Whitney it may save us from war with more powerful nations. That limit should be reached as soon as possible.

The necessity for the torpedo boats is apparent, especially on the Pacific coast. England has a coaling station at Esquimault, in British Columbia. Puget Sound is open to invasion from Esquimault. There is not a gun in position for our defense. Yet the Pacific coast is abundantly able to provide for its own defense, if Congress will but say the word. If we will call for these torpedo boats, some of them can be built in Pacific shipyards. There is further necessity for the construction of torpedo vessels for use on the lakes. Neither the United States nor England can maintain war ships there, beyond the trivial treaty allowance. Yet the British have scores of light gunboats and torpedo vessels that could press through the St. Lawrence and the canals and levy tribute on a score or more of American cities.

Possibly we could send small torpedo crafts from New York to the lakes through the Erie Canal, but we only have one, and that is the Cushing. As it is, our lake cities are practically at the mercy of Great Britain in case of war. To-day Canada is building what she calls armored revenue cutters. They are really fast cruisers. They can readily be armed and turned into commerce-destroyers. They are equipped with the best engines; they have space for three weeks' supply of coal; and the bunkers are arranged so as to protect the machinery from shot. They are provided with rapid-fire guns and bows for ramming. All this is suggestive.

Mr. Chairman, this is not an appeal for subsidy, or for a railroad grant, or for an infant industry, or for any scheme of plunder. It is the great Republic pleading for security. It is the completion of a work urged by Tilden and begun by Cleveland. More than three-fourths of the ships already authorized have been by Democratic Houses. This is the first time since the election of Mr. Cleveland that a Democratic House has been asked for as little as one ship. When the country is behind it, it ought to carry out its own plans. With a majority of two-thirds of the House, the people look to it for at least half the number of vessels recommended by the Secretary. They are sure to resent a refusal to authorize the one recommended by the committee.

Sir, one hundred and seventeen years ago this very hour a British detachment was being prepared for its march to Lexington. The vote on this bill will be taken on the anniversary of the battle. The war was prolonged because the Colonies were unprepared. The enemy was in the house because they were unable to bolt their front door.

That same nation again found us with our front door unbolted in 1814, and walked away with the city of Washington, burning the White House and the National Capitol.

To-day a naval foundry that has cost $20,000,000 might be destroyed by such an invasion. We are able to bolt our door to-day; let us not decide adversely on such an anniversary. [Prolonged applause.]

During the delivery of the foregoing remarks the hammer fell. Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended.

Mr. WATSON. I hope that will be done.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask consent that the gentleman be permitted to finish his remarks.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I shall only want about five minutes longer. There being no objection, Mr. CUMMINGS resumed and concluded his remarks as above.

Mr. HOLMAN. Unless the gentleman from Alabama desires to proceed I would like to yield some time to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BAKER].

Mr. HERBERT. That will be agreeable to me.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, I am free to confess that I feel a great delicacy in attempting to address this House at the present time. The pending question is one which I believe to be fraught with much interest to the American citizen, and my feelings are such towards it that I scarcely know how to approach the subject.

From my earliest infancy to manhood's estate I was taught to believe that that flag—our beautiful Stars and Stripes—was an emblem of peace and of happy homes. From early manhood to the present period in my life I have recognized as true the fact that the greatest bulwark of American independence is in the multitude of her peaceful, prosperous, and happy homes.

Such having proven true in the past, and realizing as we do in studying the history of other nations, that their greatest safety is to be found in the contentment and prosperity of their people, should we not as sacredly guard the prosperity and peace of our homes now and in the future as our forefathers did in the early history of this country? We are told by those who would increase the armed force, that there is danger, that we may anticipate some great catastrophe to our cities along the seacoast unless we continue to increase our Navy. From the time that I entered this House until the present moment, I have heard prophecies on every hand of the great evils that would befall us if we did not adopt certain measures.

If Balaam were to pass this way, we could furnish him at least two hundred prophets.

Mr. Chairman, let us with the eye of wisdom and experience look to the past, and what do we find? What have we done? Let us compare this nation and her developments with other nations. Time will not permit me to draw the parallel. But may we not truthfully say that we are without a parallel in the developments that go to make us the most prosperous nation of ancient or modern times. I warn you rob not the American homes to build a navy.

What have other nations done? Go with me to the period of Peter the Great. We find him at the head of a barbarous nation. He studies the arts of war through a navy. When he had learned to build a ship we find him at work as a common ship carpenter, and after he has constructed a navy then we may see him going forth to battle and to conquer the greatest hero of the day, Charles XII of Sweden. The next year we find him building a city of thirty thousand houses on a frightful morass, destitute of stones and timber, cursed with the most harassing climate. You say, "What a hero!" "What a marvel!" Ah, my friends, you would say, "A nation awakened from barbarism, a frontier extended, a navy created, Charles XII vanquished, thirty thousand houses built in one year."

Let us turn to the other side of the picture now for a moment and this is what we see. The dominions of a tyrant extended. The building of thirty thousand houses at the cost of one hundred thousand lives. The banishment of Charles XII at the cost of a half million more. And besides all this twenty million people suffered worse than death by being made serfs. This tells in brief the history of Peter the Great of Russia, the greatest naval hero of his day. You may admire such a character, but give me a man that can stand alone. Give me a Howard or a Columbus; a man who would die for the welfare of others; not one who would make a great name for himself by the sacrifice of human lives; not one who could coolly calculate and plan the destruction of men with heart and soul in order to place a laurel wreath upon his own brow, and by so doing plant a whole country in cypress. And if such be wrong how much greater crime to society will a Christian nation be guilty of, by creating an armed power to enslave and sacrifice the lives of others in a time of profound peace.

May we not gradually advance to a higher civilization? Does not the enlightenment, education, and Christianity of the nineteenth century demand that difficulties between nations should be settled by arbitration and not by war? As I was taught to revere that flag, and as I claim that no man can go beyond me in love for it and for my country, I can see, as we are developing the military power of our country, that we are increasing a power which is inimical to civil liberty and to the well being of republican institutions. Such being the case, I feel it to be my duty to take my stand to-day and to say: Stay your hand in the construction of these monsters of the deep and let humanity speak.

Shall we advance forward and upward, or go backward to the dark ages of the past? You cannot point to a nation upon the face of the globe to-day which has a large army and navy where you do not find the arm of oppression. For they in themselves are an arm of power used to enslave the people.

I must confess that I feel a degree of fear in my own mind when I see at this time a disposition upon the part of many of the Representatives on this floor to increase the force of the military power of this Republic. Let us in the future try to build up happy homes. Let us have laws more just, that we may have States more prosperous. Let us cultivate virtue at home. Let us teach the world that there is a way which is wiser and better, more humane and godlike than to create armaments with which to destroy each other.

While listening to the discussion of this question on the floor of this House, my mind has reverted to the pages of history. I have seen George Washington on the one hand, with his love of home, his love of country, his love for humanity, and armed with the blessings of Almighty God, going forth to establish the freest, the purest, the best government on earth. I see what he was able to accomplish in a short period of time. Then my mind reverts back upon the other hand, to Napoleon Bonaparte, of France. What is his history? Every step he took in his march forward was upon the skull of a human being. And what are the monuments reared to these men to-day? We find Washington's name is embalmed in the hearts of his countrymen. But if you would rear a monument to Napoleon, it must be reared upon the skulls of 2,000,000 human beings who were sacrificed to gratify his ambition.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Was not George Washington first in war? Mr. BAKER. He was, most assuredly; but he was also first in peace. Shall we cultivate to-day the arts of peace or the arts of war? Has not the experience of the past demonstrated that just as you increase the army and navy of a country you deprive a people to that extent of their liberties? You can not point to a nation to-day which has a large army and which has a free people. It is impossible. Light and darkness never go hand in hand. The omnipotent God will bless the man or the nation that will settle difficulties upon the principles of justice and equity to mankind, but He will curse the nations which depend upon the instruments of destruction to maintain their power.

Where are we drifting? Where would you lead this nation? Shall this be a land of freemen or a land of serfs? Shall we not strive to make it the land of happy homes, of peace, and prosperity? And the answer which comes from the heart of every true man in this House is yes. We are told that England has a powerful navy. That is true. But what has she done? Let me tell you. She has enslaved Egypt, she has enslaved Turkey, she has enslaved the Argentine Republic, she has enslaved India. She has a great army and a great navy, which are the police force of the capitalists of that country by which they are enslaving the nations of the earth. What shall we do? Shall we not cultivate the arts of peace? I tell you that when it comes to defending homes one American citizen is equal to five Englishmen.

England to-day has not as large a navy, when you take into consideration her commerce and the territory she has to protect, as the United States will have when she has her navy completed as it is now ordered. I, myself, have no sympathy with the idea that in order to protect ourselves and our free institutions in this age of the world we must increase the Army and Navy. I am willing to vote millions to build up the true interests of my country, but not one dollar to enslave its people.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, for my own part I would be glad to have the committee rise. The other gentlemen who are to speak seem indisposed to go on this evening. My colleague [Mr. ELLIOTT] is not feeling well, and the same is true of another gentleman. I will ask the Chair how much time is left for debate?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] has one hour and seventeen minutes remaining. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has twenty-three minutes, and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] has thirty-two minutes.

Mr. HERBERT. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHIVELY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the naval appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows: To Mr. ENOCHS, indefinitely, on account of important business. To Mr. BANKHEAD, for ten days, on account of important business.

POSTAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported the bill (H. R. 8224) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1893; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. McMILLIN and Mr. DINGLEY reserved all points of order. ADMISSION TO AMERICAN REGISTRY OF FOREIGN-BUILT SHIPS.

Mr. ATKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to file the views of the minority on the bill for the free admission to American registry of ships built in foreign countries.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill upon which the minority report is submitted.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5441) for the free admission to American registry of ships built in foreign countries.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the minority report will be printed.

There was no objection.

And then, on motion of Mr. McMILLIN (at 4 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until Monday, April 18, 1892, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. STONE of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims: The bill (H. R. 2324) for the relief of the estate of P. F. Warterfield, deceased. (Report No. 1131.)

By Mr. WINN, from the Committee on War Claims:

A bill (H. R. 2804) for the relief of the legal representatives of John Baptiste Ashe. (Report No. 1132.)

A bill (H. R. 2548) for the relief of the legal representatives of William Johnnot, Joseph Torrey, and Thomas Blackwell. (Report No. 1133.)

By Mr. PATTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs: The bill (H. R. 2302) to relieve John W. Robinson of the charge of desertion. (Report No. 1134.)

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were severally discharged from the consideration of the following bills; which were respectively re-referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4869) to increase the pension of T. J. Ferguson—the Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 4673) granting a pension to Mary Grogan—the Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 8171) granting a pension to P. A. Cartwright—the Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 1887) for the relief of Peyton Gill—the Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 7572) to pension Mrs. C. R. Hamilton—the Committee on Pensions discharged and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

BILLS, MEMORIALS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, and a resolution of the following titles were introduced, severally read twice, and referred as follows:

By Mr. PEEL: A bill (H. R. 8190) to ratify agreement with Kickapoo Indians, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8191) to disallow attorney fees in pension cases—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SCOTT: A resolution asking for information from the Department of Justice regarding the grinding exactions of the gigantic sugar trust and its prosecution for violating the anti-trust law enacted July 2, 1890—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. ALLEN: A bill (H. R. 8198) for the relief of Isabella Rowsey, of Alcorn County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8199) for the relief of Thomas P. Young, of Alcorn County, Miss.—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. AMERMAN: A bill (H. R. 8200) for the relief of George McAlpin, to repay to him moneys unlawfully collected from him by the United States—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BYRNS: A bill (H. R. 8201) granting a pension to Louisa Kellman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8202) granting a pension to Mina Pape—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CARUTH: A bill (H. R. 8203) granting a pension to Prilla Prime—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ENLOE: A bill (H. R. 8204) for the relief of James Anderson, of Hardin County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. FELLOWS: A bill (H. R. 8205) granting a pension to Rose Vincent Mullin, a nurse in the late war—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FORMAN: A bill (H. R. 8206) to refer the claim of Adolph Mueller to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HATCH: A bill (H. R. 8207) for the relief of James Griggs—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HERMANN: A bill (H. R. 8208) granting an increase of pension to Moses Parrott, for disabilities incurred in the Mexican war—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HEMPHILL: A bill (H. R. 8209) granting a pension to Mary A. Lyles, widow of James V. Lyles—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LESTER of Georgia: A bill (H. R. 8210) for the relief of William Rose, of Savannah, Ga.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8211) for the relief of Jacob Rosenband, etc.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. McCLELLAN: A bill (H. R. 8212) to increase the pension of Margaret Lamont—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PAYNTER (by request): A bill (H. R. 8213) for the relief of Frank Mott—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RIFE: A bill (H. R. 8214) to pension Robert H. Fry—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STONE of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 8215) for the relief of Lysander H. Jennings, of Greene County, Mo.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8216) for the relief of David H. Hildebrand, of Shelby County, Tenn., as found due by the Court of Claims under the act of March 3, 1883—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. TERRY (by request): A bill (H. R. 8217) for the relief of Charlotte Moore—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TOWNSEND: A bill (H. R. 8218) for the relief of Charles Schabelka, of Leadville, Colo.—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WHEELER of Alabama: A bill (H. R. 8219) for the relief of A. Eckberger—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8220) for the relief of A. A. Williamson—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 8221) granting a pension to George W. Boyd—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WOLVERTON: A bill (H. R. 8222) to place upon the pension roll of the United States the name of William H. Lord, late member of Company C, One hundred and seventy-ninth Regiment of New York Volunteers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ENLOE: A bill (H. R. 8223) for the relief of P. B. Robinson, administrator of William R. Collier, of Madison County, Tenn., as found due by the Court of Claims under the act of March 3, 1883—to the Committee on War Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ALEXANDER: Petition of citizens of Richmond County, N. C., against the Brosius lard bill and for a general pure-food law—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, three petitions of citizens of North Carolina, of Alfordville, members of Lebanon Church of Robeson, and members of Ashpole Presbyterian Church, against opening the Columbian Exposition on Sunday and against selling liquors on the exposition grounds—to the Select Committee on the Columbian Exposition.

By Mr. BEEMAN: Petition of 525 citizens of Yazoo County, Miss., against the Brosius lard bill, H. R. 395—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BELKNAP: Petition of William Denman and 93 others, of Grand Rapids, Mich., in regard to the Columbian Exposition—to the Select Committee on the Columbian Exposition.

Also, petition of citizens of Grand Rapids, Mich., against the passage of House bill 4843—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. BOWMAN: Petition of Mrs. Alice Keler and 11 members of the Seventh Day Adventist Church, and 17 other citizens, of Audubon, Iowa, protesting against committing the United States Government to a union of religion and state in the passage of any bill or resolution to close the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday, or in any other way committing the Government to a course of religious legislation—to the Select Committee on the Columbian Exposition.

Also, resolution adopted by the Davenport (Iowa) Businessmen's Association, favoring ample appropriation for the United States Weather Bureau—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. BRANCH: Papers in the claim of S. Barrett, of Pamlico County, N. C., for relief—to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented the following petitions of Oceanum, Wright Settlement, South Shore, Villanova, Lenox, Sauquoit, Beaver Falls, North Scriba, Glen, Denmark, Auriesville, and Bethlehem Granges, Patrons of Husbandry, of New York, and the petitions of citizens of South Greece, North Galway, Pharsalia, Glen, Harrisburg, Carajaharie, Freetown, and Amsterdam, N. Y.

Petitions praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent gambling in farm products—referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Petitions praying for the passage of House bill 395, defining lard and imposing a tax thereon—ordered to lie on the table.

Petitions praying for the passage of a bill to prevent the adulteration of food and drugs—ordered to lie on the table.

Petitions praying for the free delivery of mails in rural districts—referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Petitions praying for the passage of a bill making certain issues of money full legal tender in payment of all debts—to the Committee on Finance.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 15th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 18) for the relief of Edward S. Armstrong;

An act (S. 440) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between the city of Chamberlain, in Brule County, and Lyman County, in the State of South Dakota;

An act (S. 1643) authorizing the Velasco Terminal Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Brazos River, in the State of Texas; and

An act (S. 1645) making Velasco a support of entry.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WILSON. By direction of the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 7020) to create a third division of the district of Kansas for judicial purposes, and to fix the time for holding court therein.

Mr. PERKINS. The bill is brief, and if there be no objection I should like to ask for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MORGAN. I object to its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 771) requiring transcripts of judgments obtained in the United States courts to be filed with county officers having charge of judgment records in certain cases, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5816) to regulate the manner in which property shall be sold under orders and decrees of any United States court, reported it with amendments.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 195) providing that notice of the sale of real estate sold under the order, judgment, or decree of a United States court shall be published in the county and State where the property is located, and that the property after notice be there sold, and for other purposes, to report it adversely, the provisions of the bill having been incorporated in the bill just reported. I move that this bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAREY, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2801) for the erection of a public building in the city of Jamestown, N. Y., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1842) to fix the fees of jurors and witnesses in United States courts in the State of Wyoming, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1611) to provide for the purchase of additional land in the square now occupied by the custom-house in the city of Baltimore, Md., and for the preparation of plans and specifications for a new custom-house building, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1760) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Fort Madison, Iowa, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. VEST. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred a resolution in regard to constructing a shelter on the eastern approach to the Capitol for the inauguration ceremonies, to report it back with the recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed, and accompanied by a written report. I ask that the resolution go upon the Calendar, and that the report be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

Mr. WOLCOTT, from the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2248) to appropriate $18,484.57 for the completion and dedication of the monument commemorating the surrender of Burgoyne at Saratoga, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. 2915) to amend section 4415, Title LII, Revised Statutes of the United States, "Regulation of steam vessels;" which was read twice by its title.

Mr. FRYE. I report the bill under the suggestion of a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury which accompanies the bill, and the reasons there are given for it. Let the communication of the Secretary of the Treasury go with the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar, and the accompanying paper will be printed.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF LABOR.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report favorably the concurrent resolution which I send to the desk.

The concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. MANDERSON March 9, 1892, was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 35,000 copies, in cloth binding, of the annual report of the Commissioner of Labor relating to cost of production, earnings, efficiency of labor, and cost of living, 16,000 copies for use of members of the House of Representatives, and 8,000 copies for use of members of the Senate, and 11,000 copies for the use of the Department of Labor.

Mr. HAWLEY. The resolution is in the usual form. The number provided for is that ordered by the bill on printing which has passed the Senate. By an accident, for which the Committee on Printing is not responsible, the resolution has been for some time delayed. I ask that the Senate act upon it now.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

CHEROKEE INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. HAWLEY. From the Committee on Printing I report a resolution to print 500 copies of certain Senate executive documents, being a message from the President and a letter from the Secretary of the Interior relating to the agreement with the Cherokee Indians. The resolution was offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. It is a matter of current business, and if there be no objection I ask that it be acted on now.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 500 copies of Senate Executive Document 56, first session Fifty-second Congress, being a message of the President submitting an agreement with the Cherokee Indians for the cession of certain lands, and Senate Executive Document 63, being a letter of the Secretary of the Interior relative to the title by which the Cherokee Nation hold the Cherokee Outlet, said copies to be delivered to the Senate document room.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] asks me if this printing includes the bill which was sent here by the Department. I presume it does.

Mr. DAWES. I think it is a part of the document.

Mr. COCKRELL. The two documents give all the information on the subject. There are quite a number of calls for it, and it ought to be printed.

The resolution was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WILSON introduced a bill (S. 2916) for the relief of David H. Thompson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PADDOCK introduced a bill (S. 2917) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Marcus Franklin; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ALLEN introduced a bill (S. 2918) to provide for the survey of public lands in the State of Washington; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2919) to extend to Alaska the benefit of the laws encouraging in the several States and Territories instruction in agriculture and the mechanic arts; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. SANDERS introduced a bill (S. 2920) to establish a sub-port of entry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. VEST introduced a bill (S. 2921) to prohibit the making any contract by the Postmaster-General with any steamship company or common carrier that makes unjust discrimination against any port of the United States, as to imports, for carrying the foreign mails; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. VEST. In connection with the bill, before asking its reference to the Committee on Commerce, I desire to submit certain resolutions of the Merchants' Exchange of the city of St. Louis. These resolutions call attention to the fact, as alleged, about the existence of which I know nothing personally, that the United States and Brazilian Steamship Company, which is one of the subsidized lines under the act of Congress providing for special contracts in regard to carrying foreign mails, has refused to deliver coffee imported into this country from Brazil at the port of Newport News. It is stated in this series of resolutions, and it has been largely circulated in the public prints, that the president and principal owner of that company has publicly announced that the line will not hereafter deliver any imported coffee at that port on account of objections made to such delivery by merchants in the city of New York.

As a matter of course the Western and Southern country is very largely and, I might say, vitally interested in any such discrimination as this, because it directly affects the retail dealers and even the wholesale dealers of the Western cities and towns. I present these resolutions in connection with the bill and ask their reference with the bill to the Committee on Commerce, from which committee originated the original measure.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill and accompanying memorial will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DANIEL. I beg leave to state in connection with the resolutions which have been submitted by the Senator from Missouri that I have resolutions to the same purport from a number of boards of trade in different cities of this country which I shall present perhaps to-morrow or the next day, and in connection with which I shall desire to submit a few remarks.

I wish now, as the bill and resolutions have been offered, to call the attention of the committee to whom they have been referred to the fact that a very injurious discrimination is being made against the commerce of our seaboard, which affects not only the Southern country but the West and Northwest in a very vital manner, and to express the hope that the committee may find some remedy for this egregious invasion of the equal rights of the people affected by this wrong.

Mr. COCKRELL. As bearing directly upon this subject I desire to present resolutions of the Associated Wholesale Grocers of St. Louis, Mo., referring to this matter of discrimination and protesting against it, and asking such legislation as will prevent this unjust and partial proscription of trade in the West and South.

I also present a memorial of the Merchants' Exchange of St. Louis, remonstrating against this discrimination against trade at Newport News. I ask that the memorials may be received in connection with the bill just introduced, and I move their reference to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL introduced a bill (S. 2922) to aid and encourage military training and instruction by donation of public lands; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DAVIS introduced a bill (S. 2923) amending the law on the subject of the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 2924) to provide a more complete judiciary for the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2925) for the relief of Henry F. Hicks, postmaster at Cambridge, Cowley County, Kans.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2926) for the relief of Mathew Cowley; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BARBOUR introduced a bill (S. 2927) for the relief of Louisa S. Guthrie, widow and executrix of John J. Guthrie, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 2928) for the relief of the heirs of Catherine E. Nelson, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. WILSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ALLEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted ten amendments intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ALLEN. I submit an amendment to be proposed to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, proposing to appropriate $1,500 for the establishment and support of a branch hydrographic office at Port Townsend, Wash., including salary, stationery, office expenses, rental, if any, and collection of information. I am not certain whether the amendment ought to be referred to the Committee on Commerce or the Committee on Naval Affairs. I ask for instruction.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be referred to the Committee on Commerce, if there be no objection?

Mr. DANIEL. I beg leave to offer an amendment intended to be proposed to the naval appropriation bill appropriating $300,000 for the naval rendezvous and review in 1893, and I move that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HALE subsequently said: What disposition was made of the amendment to the naval appropriation bill submitted by the Senator from Virginia in regard to the naval review?

Mr. DANIEL. Perhaps it ought to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will have it referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, that committee will undoubtedly report it as an amendment to the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. DANIEL. It was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was so referred.

Mr. HALE. Very well.

Mr. PETTIGREW and Mr. POWER submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

BOSTON HARBOR IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to inform the Senate at his earliest convenience, what would be the cost of deepening the main channel of Boston Harbor to a uniform depth of 30 feet, and a uniform width of 1,000 feet; and also give to the Senate any facts in his possession, or that of the Chief of Engineers, showing the desirability of such improvement.

GOOSE LAKE, OREGON.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate copies of any papers on file in the Department of Justice relating to the subject of the draining, or an attempt to drain Goose Lake, lying in the States of Oregon and California, by tapping the waters thereof by ditching, or by any other means.

ELECTRICITY IN FARMING OPERATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. PEPPER on the 14th instant, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That the Secretary of State be requested to obtain through our consuls, or otherwise, such information as he can concerning the use of electricity as a power in the propulsion of farm machinery and implements and in the propagation and growth of plants in foreign countries, and report the same to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I desire to state in reference to the resolution that there is now a good deal of interest being taken by farmers in different portions of the country, and more especially in the prairie region, as to the use of electrical power in farm machinery. I am receiving a large number of letters from persons engaged in like investigations. I have recently been presented with an illustration of the application of electrical power in compressing hay that is now in practical operation in Italy. I have information likewise in regard to the gardeners in and about the city of Paris that they are using electrical influences in the propagation of plant life. We are also undertaking the same thing here, and I have reliable information that already a plow has been driven through the soil of Kansas by electrical power.

My object in introducing the resolution is to obtain what information we can from foreign sources concerning this same matter. I believe it will not be long until largely horse power and steam power will be superseded in farm work. There is some necessity of that kind now apparent among the Western farmers particularly, where there is so much competition with large ranches and large landed estates. I therefore hope that the Senate will grant the request that I have asked in the resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the resolution read again.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I give notice that to-morrow, or as soon thereafter as possible, I shall endeavor to call the attention of the Senate to what is called the Chinese restriction bill, so that the Senate bill and the House bill may be considered. The reasons for early action are apparent to all Senators. The bill must be passed within twenty days in the form of law if it is to be passed at all, as the treaties expire, it is believed, some time in the month of May.

ANACOSTIA AND POTOMAC RIVER RAILROAD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business? If not, that order is closed and the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order. The first bill on the Calendar will be stated.

The bill (S. 1742) to amend the act giving the approval and sanction of Congress to the route and termini of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad in the District of Columbia was announced as first in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 7, after the word "to," to strike out the following words:

Lay tracks and run cars thereon from the intersection of its tracks on Sixth street with B street north; along Sixth street to F street north; along F street to Eleventh street west; along and with the line of Eleventh street to B street north; along B street north to its tracks on said B street near Center Market;

and to insert in lieu thereof:

Make the necessary connections and switches and run cars as follows: From the intersection of its tracks at Ninth street with B street NW., north on Ninth street to G street NW., over the tracks of the Metropolitan Railway Company; thence west on G street NW. to Eleventh street NW., over the tracks of the Eckington and Soldiers Home Railway Company; thence south on Eleventh street to E street NW. and east on E street to Ninth street, on the tracks of the Capitol, North O Street and South Washington Railway Company; thence south on Ninth street to B street on the tracks of the Metropolitan Railway Company.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 1, after the first word "that," to strike out "should" and insert "where;" in line 2, after the word "authorized," to strike out "coincide" and insert "coincides;" and in line 4, after the word "used," to strike out "when, on account of the width of the street or for other sufficient reason, it shall be deemed necessary by the Commissioners of the District;" so as to read:

That where any part of the track extension herein authorized coincides with portions of any other duly incorporated street railway in the District of Columbia, but one set of tracks shall be used.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 7, after the word "rights," to strike out "may" and insert "shall;" so as to read:

And the relative conditions of use and of chartered rights shall be adjusted upon terms to be mutually agreed upon between the companies, or, in case of disagreement, by the supreme court of the District of Columbia, on petition filed therein by either party and on such notice to the other party as the court may order.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN. This bill is for the purpose of extending the tracks of the Anacostia Railroad, the railroad which begins over at Anacostia and crosses the Navy-Yard bridge and extends down as far as the market. The people in Anacostia are very desirous of having this road extended farther down into the business portion of the city, and an arrangement has been made by which this company is allowed to use the tracks of the Metropolitan and the Eckington roads, so as to bring them into the center of the city and come back again to the market and connect the road without building any further tracks. That arrangement has been made, and it has been agreed to by all the companies concerned. It simply brings the people who use the road down farther into the center of the city, and does not require any more tracks to be built.

Mr. VEST. I ask the chairman of the committee what is the motive power to be used?

Mr. McMILLAN. Horse cars. It is an old horse-car road. It is a road that does not do a great amount of business.

Mr. VEST. When was the bill reported?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. On the 7th of March.

Mr. McMILLAN. The bill simply extends the line into the heart of the city, using the tracks of other companies.

Mr. VEST. It provides, then, for branches?

Mr. McMILLAN. No, nothing of the kind, but simply that they may use the tracks of the old company and come back to the market and go on their own tracks. It does not extend their own road at all.

Mr. PADDOCK. The object is to form a loop?

Mr. McMILLAN. It is simply to accommodate the people who use the road, so as to bring them down to the heart of the city.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGREEMENT WITH THE KICKAPOO INDIANS.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, the first bill on the Calendar has been taken up two or three times and then laid aside. I ask that it may be now taken up and disposed of.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1797) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Kickapoo Indians in Oklahoma Territory.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This bill has heretofore been read at length and all the amendments of the committee agreed to. The question is: Shall the bill be reported to the Senate and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole concurred in?

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

DAVID DEALY AND MARY YOUNKIN.

The bill (S. 1504) for the relief of David Dealy and Moses Younkin was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments, in section 1, line 5, after the word "laws," to insert "if he is duly qualified;" in line 8, after the word "allow," to insert "Mary Younkin, widow of:" in line 9, after the word "laws," to insert "if the said Moses Younkin, when living, was duly qualified;" and in line 15, before the word "Younkin," to strike out "Moses" and insert "Mary;" so as to make the section read:

That the Commissioner of the General Land Office be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to allow David Dealy to enter, under the homestead laws, if he is duly qualified, the north half of the northwest quarter and lots 3 and 4 of section 16, in township 38 north, of range 2 east, of the Willamette meridian, and to allow Mary Younkin, widow of Moses Younkin, to enter under the homestead laws, if the said Moses Younkin when living was duly qualified, the north half of the northeast quarter and lots 5 and 6 of section 16, in township 38 north, of range 2 east, of Willamette meridian, both of said tracts lying in Whatcom County, in the State of Washington, and to issue patents to the said David Dealy and Mary Younkin for the respective tracts hereby authorized to be entered by them upon their making such proof as is required by existing laws and executive regulations of compliance with the requirements of the homestead laws: Provided, That the State of Washington by the proper State officer or officers thereto duly authorized by the laws of said State, or if no such officer or officers be so authorized then by a legislative act, shall signify assent to the entries hereby authorized in such manner as shall bar the said State from asserting in future any right to the described land under the grant of lands to said State for school purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 6, after the word "surveyed," to insert "nonmineral;" so as to make the section read:

Sec. 2. That when the said State of Washington shall have signified her assent to the entries authorized by this act the proper officers of said State shall be entitled to select, on behalf of said State, other land of area equal to that to be covered by said entries, such land to be selected from any surveyed non-mineral and unoccupied public lands of the United States lying within the State of Washington, and to be held by said State as school land, as other lands granted or selected for school purposes are held under existing laws.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read "A bill for the relief of David Dealy and Mary Younkin."

AMENDMENTS TO ARTICLES OF WAR.

The bill (S. 2470) to amend the Articles of War, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5978) to extend the time for making assessments for real estate, etc.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 113) to establish a military post near Little Rock, Ark., with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution providing for the printing of the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the Hon. John R. Gamble, late a Representative from the State of South Dakota.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 3202) to pension Nancy E. Renfro;

A bill (H. R. 4488) granting a pension to James A. Davis;

A bill (H. R. 5133) to authorize the Marinette and Western Railroad Company to construct a railroad through the Menominee Reservation, in the State of Wisconsin; and

A bill (H. R. 7519) to authorize the appointment of clerks of the United States circuit and district courts of Mississippi City, in the State of Mississippi.

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

The bill (S. 1843) to provide for the punishment of offenses committed in the Yellowstone National Park was announced as next in order.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, let that bill go over. I wish to examine it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

PUBLIC LAND SALES IN CALIFORNIA.

The bill (S. 1485) granting to the State of California 5 per cent of the net proceeds of the cash sales of public lands in said State was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to know what is the estimate of the amount involved by the bill?

Mr. PADDOCK. I think it is something more than a half million dollars; indeed it is probably over $700,000.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the report be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

Mr. PADDOCK. There is no written report accompanying this bill at this session. The bill passed the Senate in the last Congress and was reported favorably by the committee of the House and placed on the Calendar, but not reached for want of time.

The object of the bill is simply to place California on the same footing as all the other States in respect to the payment of 5 per cent of the net proceeds of the sales of public lands. I have here now the report of the House committee which was incorporated in the report of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH], the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate, presented at the last Congress. If the Senator so desires, that report can be read. The only thing in the present situation is that this provision which has been made for all the other States has not been made for California, and as a matter of decency it should be made at once.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. DOLPH January 8, 1890:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 269) granting the State of California 5 per cent of the net proceeds of the cash sales of the public lands in said State, having duly considered the same, respectfully report:

A bill similar in its provisions was reported favorably by this committee and passed the Senate at the last Congress, and was favorably recommended for passage by the House Committee on Public Lands, but failed to be reached on the Calendar in the House.

House Reports Nos. 179 and 70, Fiftieth Congress, first session, were made on said similar bill and are now submitted herewith as a part of this report. The committee recommend that the bill do pass.

[House Report No. 179, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 418) granting to the State of California 5 per cent of the net proceeds of the cash sales of public lands in said State, report as follows:

The bill is identical with House bill No. 1235. The committee has reported the latter bill and has recommended its passage.

For the reasons stated in the report thereon (Report No. 70), also recommend the passage of the present said Senate bill.

[House Report No. 70, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1235) granting to the State of California 5 per cent of the net proceeds of the cash sales of public lands in said State, make the following report:

A similar bill was reported from this committee in the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses, and also reported in the Senate in the Forty-seventh, Forty-eighth, and Forty-ninth Congresses, and passed the Senate in the latter Congress, but was not reached on the Calendar in the House.

This bill is in accord with settled legislative precedents followed and adhered to by Congress in the case of every other public-land State heretofore admitted into the Union. It makes no grant other than or different from that made by Congress to every other public-land State in the Union, but simply places California upon an equal footing and the same plane with all other public-land States in regard to existing laws relating to the 5 per cent of the net proceeds of the cash sales of the public lands in said States respectively.

California, unlike the other new or public-land States, entered the Union without any enabling act; but the third section of the act under which she was admitted into the Union shows that the United States attached all the conditions to her admission, so far as those conditions could be performed by California, as were attached to the admission of all the other public-land States. But the United States have, up to this late date, failed, and, in the opinion of very many of her people, unjustly delayed to give to California, in consideration of those conditions, that equivalent which has been heretofore given to all the other public-land States named in the preamble of this bill.

While all the other public-land States have already received this 5 per cent grant as an equivalent or as an indemnity for considerations by them surrendered to the United States, California is the only public-land State which, having surrendered like considerations to the United States, has not as yet received this 5 per cent grant as a similar equivalent or indemnity for the surrender of similar considerations.

Section 3 of the act of her admission, approved September 9, 1850, is as follows:

"SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the said State of California is admitted into the Union upon the express condition that the people of said State, through their Legislature or otherwise, shall never interfere with the primary disposal of the public lands within its limits, and shall pass no law and do no act whereby the title of the United States to and right to dispose of the same shall be impaired or questioned; and that they shall never lay any tax or assessment of any description whatsoever upon the public domain of the United States; and in no case shall nonresident proprietors who are citizens of the United States be taxed higher than residents; and that all the navigable waters within the said State shall be common highways, and forever free, as well to the inhabitants of said State as to the citizens of the United States, without any tax, impost, or duty therefor."

A condition common to all the public-land States upon their admission to the Union, and in consideration of which the United States granted to them 5 per cent of the net proceeds of the cash sales of the public lands within their limits, was that they should never impose any tax upon the public lands of the United States within their respective limits, and that condition, together with other conditions and similar to those imposed upon the other public-land States, is thus found incorporated in the very act admitting California into the Union; and California, by accepting such conditions is likewise irrevocably bound to observe them all just the same as the other public-land States are bound to do.

Therefore the United States have already received from California, and that, too, in advance, the identical considerations for this grant as a full equivalent or as the indemnity now proposed to be made to her under the terms of this bill, and which is the consideration the United States received from every one of the other public-land States for making similar grants to them, and that, too, without a single exception as to any public-land State except that of California, which in this regard stands solitary and alone.

California, in contemplation of the objects of the Constitution of the United States—that all the States of this Union shall in all respects be as nearly equal as possible, and that all the new public-land States shall in all respects be as nearly equal to each other as possible—was therefore admitted into and is now in the Union, not on a footing of difference, but on one of perfect equality with each and all of the other public-land States so far as this 5 per cent grant or claim is concerned.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, if California is the only State to be affected, I am somewhat surprised that some provision has not been made before. The titles in California are somewhat peculiar. California came into the Union as an organized community, and most of the titles, I suppose, had been granted under Mexican or Spanish authority.

Mr. PADDOCK. This does not touch the Mexican grants, but the public lands within surveys.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask the Senator whether, under this bill as it is now framed, the 5 per cent on lands granted to railroad companies will be included?

Mr. PADDOCK. Not at all. These acts are all alike in respect of these accounts. They are all treated in the same way in administration. The Government has never accounted at all for the 5 per cent of the proceeds of land grants. They are disposed of by the railroad companies themselves. On these grants themselves, as such, there is no allowance.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the Senator understand that this places California simply upon the same basis as the other States?

Mr. PADDOCK. Exactly on the same basis as all the other States. An exception was made in the case of California from the fact that she had no preceding Territorial government and had no enabling act, but the same requirements that are found in all the enabling acts for the admission of States into the Union are found in the law admitting California when she was admitted, and California has complied with all those acts in all respects just like all the other States.

Mr. COCKRELL. If that be so, permit me to ask why it is that California has not been paid as the other States have been?

Mr. FELTON. For the reason, I will say to the Senator from Missouri, that California has suffered in a great many ways, not that alone. It has been so with her Indian wars; it has been so with other appropriations. It is simply because the matter has not been considered.

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President, in the earlier acts, prior to 1857, the money coming from the net proceeds of the sales of these lands under the 5 per cent plan was required to be used by the States for internal improvements, the building of roads and canals, but it was not practicable to make use of money in California on such account.

Mr. COCKRELL. On account of what?

Mr. PADDOCK. On account of making canals, etc., for the shipment of produce, etc. In 1857 the rule changed with the admission of the State of Kansas into the Union, and the proceeds resulting from the 5 per cent to that State went to the school fund. Since then that rule has obtained; but by reason of the peculiar situation in California in respect of the kind of improvements which had been appropriated for before, and because California had had no Territorial government, and no enabling act before it came into the Union in which to provide for it, the matter had not received attention.

But after the passage of the act of 1857 for Kansas it came to be understood that there ought to be the same provision made for California for the benefit of its school fund. The requirements, of course, on the part of the State have all been responded to by the State of California. That State has, through her Legislature, never interfered with the primary disposal of the public lands within her limits; has passed no law and done no act whereby the title of the United States to and the right to dispose of the same has been impaired or questioned. They have laid no tax or assessment of any description whatever upon the public domain of the United States, and in no case have nonresident proprietors who are citizens of the United States been taxed higher than residents. I paraphrase this section of the act under which California was admitted in order to present, by a change to the past tense, the idea that I have suggested. That was the requirement of the act, and all those requirements which are common to all the States, and on account of which they have received the 5 per cent, have been complied with fully and absolutely in the case of California. Therefore, there is no reason under heaven why that State should not receive the same compensation for the surrender of these rights that the other States have received when they have made similar surrenders under their acts for the protection of citizens of the United States in common with all others. There is no reason under the sun why it should not be placed on the same footing with them.

A similar bill passed the Senate during the last Congress. It has been two or three times reported favorably in both Houses, and because the act has not finally been passed is no reason why it should not be done now. An act of long-deferred justice is the very act which should be preferred above all others. If it is right that it should be done, it does not make it any the less our duty to do it now that it has been long delayed. All this ought to be a reason for doing this act of justice at once.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, there has been no delay and no injustice on the part of Congress towards California—not one particle—in this matter, and I beg to say to the Senator that I think he is very greatly mistaken on that point. The United States has done everything it agreed to do with California when she came into the Union. There was no promise in the act admitting California that she should have 5 per cent of the net proceeds of the sales of public lands. If there had been, they would not need the passage of this bill.

Mr. PADDOCK. If the Senator will allow me, I wish to say to him right here, that there was no enabling act in the case of California, as there had been in the case of other States, in which that provision had always been uniformly placed.

Mr. COCKRELL. But there was an enabling act authorizing California to be admitted into the Union.

Mr. PADDOCK. Yes; there was an act passed admitting it.

Mr. COCKRELL. There was no provision put in there, and consequently the State had no right on earth to any such thing, except a mere equity. If she had it in the act of admission, as the other States had, the Government officers would have paid it. That is what strikes me in the case.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to say in answer to that—

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not worth while to consume further time this morning with this bill. I ask that the bill may be laid over until to-morrow, so that we can look into the act of admission and see whether California did not receive some other equivalent for that equal to the 5 per cent at the time she was admitted.

Mr. PADDOCK. I first want to state my theory why it was not put into the act of admission, and that is that there was no preceding territorial form of government. California was admitted straight. In all other cases of public-land States there had been precedent territorial governments. Now, that very fact is in favor of California, because always where there have been preceding territorial governments there have been great expenses to which the Government of the United States has been subjected for such territorial governments. In this case California saved to the United States Treasury every dollar of such expense and was ready, without such inchoate form of Statehood, to make its application for admission. It was the most economically admitted of any of all the public-land States. That is the difference, and there is no reason why there should be any question about this at all.

If the bill is to be passed over, I hope it may be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that it retain its place on the Calendar so that it may be called up to-morrow.

Mr. PADDOCK. My recollection is that the Senator from Missouri was on the Committee on Public Lands when the bill was reported.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to examine the subject, but I want to repel the idea that it was the neglect of the United States that this thing has not been done. I do not consider that it is that at all. My impression is that the bill is correct, but I want to look at the enabling act to see about it.

Mr. PADDOCK. Another thing. At the time California was admitted it was richer than any of the other States in respect of coin money, and it was not thought to be necessary to have such a provision. They made no such importunate and determined demand as the others at the time of their admission.

Mr. FELTON. Just one word. I desire to say that, whatever may have been the reason, the fact remains that all of the other States, under similar conditions which were prescribed and have been complied with, received the 5 per cent, while California remains without her 5 per cent.

The Senator from Missouri speaks of the simple question of equity. If I understand the meaning of the word "equity," it is even and exact justice that should be meted out to all. California has not received her proportion of the appropriation of the 5 per cent which has been given to other States similarly situated.

Mr. PADDOCK. I wish the Senator from Missouri would examine the state of the law, if he can, to-day, and let us consider this bill during the day.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will read for the information of the Senator the act for the admission of the State of California into the Union.

Whereas the people of California have presented a constitution and asked admission into the Union, which constitution was submitted to Congress by the President of the United States, by message dated February 13, 1850, and which, on due examination, is found to be republican in its form of government:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the State of California shall be one, and is hereby declared to be one, of the United States of America, and admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That until the Representatives in Congress shall be apportioned according to an actual enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States the State of California shall be entitled to two Representatives in Congress.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the said State of California is admitted into the Union upon the express condition that the people of said State, through their Legislature or otherwise, shall never interfere with the primary disposal of the public lands within its limits, and shall pass no law and do no act whereby the title of the United States to and right to dispose of the same shall be impaired or questioned; and that they shall never lay any tax or assessment of any description whatsoever upon the public domain of the United States, and in no case shall nonresident proprietors who are citizens of the United States be taxed higher than residents; and that all the navigable waters within the said State shall be common highways, and forever free, as well to the inhabitants of said State as to the citizens of the United States, without any tax, impost, or duty therefor: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as recognizing or rejecting the propositions tendered by the people of California as articles of compact in the ordinance adopted by the convention which formed the constitution of that State.

Approved September 9, 1850.

Mr. PADDOCK. That is the usual provision in all such cases.

Mr. COCKRELL. This simply admitted the State and did not refer to these compacts. I should think upon principles of equity and fair dealing, having been admitted upon an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever, that as a public-land State it ought to be placed upon an equality with the other public-land States, and there being no provision here, and I do not know of any legislation which could prevent it, I withdraw my objection to the bill, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The objection to the consideration of the bill being withdrawn, the question is, Shall the bill be reported to the Senate?

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the preamble.

Mr. PADDOCK. I am disposed to move to strike out the preamble. If that meets the concurrence of the Senator from Missouri, I think it had better be stricken out.

Mr. COCKRELL. The preamble amounts to nothing. It only encumbers the record.

Mr. PADDOCK. I move to strike out the preamble. The motion was agreed to.

ANACOSTIA AND POTOMAC RIVER RAILROAD.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate this morning passed the bill (S. 1742) to amend the act giving the approval and sanction of Congress to the route and termini of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad in the District of Columbia, with the view of substituting for the Senate bill a House bill on the same subject, which is on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection the vote by which the bill referred to by the Senator from Michigan was passed will be reconsidered, and the bill will be indefinitely postponed. The Chair hears no objection, and it will be so ordered.

Mr. McMILLAN. I now move to take up Order of Business 463, being House bill 2786.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2786) to amend the act giving the approval and sanction of Congress to the route and termini of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad in the District of Columbia.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of that bill if the object is the same and the language is the same as the one we have already passed?

Mr. McMILLAN. The language is almost the same, but there is one section about the exchange of tickets, to which there is no objection. All the roads exchange tickets.

Mr. COCKRELL. It provides for running the cars on the same line?

Mr. McMILLAN. On the same line exactly.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENTRY OF BUILDING-STONE LANDS.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to call up from the Calendar Order of Business 296, being Senate bill 1273, which was passed over the other day without prejudice.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1273) to authorize the entry of lands chiefly valuable for building stone, under the placer-mining laws.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to offer an amendment to the bill. There is a law relating to four of the States for the entry of stone and timber lands, and it is feared on the part of Senators from those States that perhaps this bill, if it becomes a law as it is, may effect the repeal of that in some way. Under that law only surveyed lands can be entered, while the stone lands that are worth anything in my State are unsurveyed, and they have been taken under the placer-mining laws, and some of them have been patented; but during the last three years the Department has decided that the placer-mining law does not apply to land which is suitable only for building stone. So I offer this amendment in order not to effect the repeal of the law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 8 it is proposed to add:

Provided further, That this act shall not be construed to repeal or in any way modify or affect the act of June 3, 1878, in relation to the sale of timber and stone land in the States of California, Nevada, Oregon, and Washington

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask one question. Under this bill, if it becomes a law, how much land can any one person take up?

Mr. PETTIGREW. About 20 acres.

Mr. COCKRELL. Only one claim?

Mr. PETTIGREW. A person can take more than one claim, but under existing law no person can take, as I understand, to exceed 320 acres. He can take just as much as he could take under the gold-mining law. For instance, under the mineral law a person has to do $100 worth of work a year on a tract of about 20 acres and do it for five years, and then pay $5 an acre, the same as is done with the precious metals.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and thirty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

CIRCUIT COURTS OF APPEAL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 1615) to facilitate the disposition of causes in the Court of Claims, the pending question being on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

Mr. HOAR. According to the understanding last week, I desire to call up, as a privileged question, the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (S. 2729) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals, and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes." I desire to move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table, but I do not propose to make that motion if anybody wishes to be heard upon it.

Mr. PALMER. Has the motion to reconsider been entered?

Mr. HOAR. It is merely pending. I will move to lay that motion on the table, but I do not wish to do that if the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] desires to address the Senate upon it.

Mr. PALMER. I should like to state to the Senator from Massachusetts that the Senator from Florida, before he left, asked me to call attention to this subject and to invite the attention of the Senate again to one particular clause in the bill.

Mr. HOAR. It is not my purpose to make this motion until the debate on the motion to reconsider is over, if there be any, of course.

Mr. PALMER. I am not sufficiently acquainted with the rules to say what arguments could be addressed to the motion to reconsider. The object of the Senator from Florida who made the motion—

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Florida who made the motion is now in his seat.

Mr. PALMER. Ah!

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, this is a bill to amend what is known as the judiciary act of 1891, which principally limits the taking of cases by way of exception from the district courts. When that bill passed on Thursday last the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] moved to reconsider, which is a privileged motion. I have given notice that I should call that up at 2 o'clock to-day. I propose to call it up, and it is now before the Senate. When such remarks have been made upon it as any Senator desires to make, I shall ask that the vote be taken upon it, by moving to lay it upon the table, which is the usual way of treating motions to reconsider. But I will not make that motion if the Senator from Illinois or any other Senator desires to speak.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, my object in asking for a reconsideration of the vote by which this bill was passed was to enable the objections made by my colleague [Mr. PASCO] to be properly considered by the Senate. This bill, changing the word "may" into "shall," deprives a large number of persons of the absolute right of appeal, and it gives the appeal according to the sentence actually pronounced. The objection which was made by my colleague is certainly a very correct one, and that is that it gives to the presiding judge the opportunity of denying the right of appeal by fixing the sentence at some amount less than the amount actually provided as the penalty in the law, the amount of the punishment, either fine or imprisonment, the appeal may be taken.

This is done, it is true, in conformity with the recommendation of the Supreme Court of the United States where a man is sentenced to pay a fine or to suffer a certain period of imprisonment and the judge has the right to say, "I will affix the penalty so that this man shall not have the right of appeal;" it is unquestionably giving a power, and an arbitrary power, to the judge which he ought not to have; and considering the character of some of the judges which we have had—I will not say that we have now, but have had—in some portions of this country, it is a discretion which ought not to be reposed in them.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Florida read that part of the bill the motion applies to?

Mr. CALL. The bill provides as follows:

That so much of the fifth section of the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals, and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," as provides that appeals or writs of error may be taken from the district or circuit courts direct to the Supreme Court in cases of conviction of a capital or other infamous crime, is hereby repealed, so far as affects cases other than capital and excepting cases where the defendant may be—

And the change made by the amendment to which my colleague objected was the substitution of word "shall" for "may." Shall be sentenced to a fine of $5,000 or upwards, or to imprisonment for more than one year.

It thus changes the right of appeal from a class of cases in which the liability to the punishment is created by law to those cases in which the judge shall actually impose this sentence.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that the Senate the other day before the passage of the bill amended it so as to give the right of appeal in any class of cases where the question that would arise was one of the validity or construction of an act of Congress.

Mr. CALL. I did not so understand it.

Mr. MORGAN (to Mr. HOAR). I am correct in that?

Mr. HOAR. Yes.

Mr. CALL. Giving the absolute right of appeal?

Mr. MORGAN. It gives the absolute right of appeal in all cases where the question in the case is as to the validity or construction of an act of Congress. It seems to me that that being so, the class of cases which the Senator doubtless has in his mind would reach the Supreme Court of the United States if the party convicted objected either to the validity of the act of Congress or as to its proper construction by the court.

Mr. CALL. I promised my colleague to present this view of his to the Senate, and I considered that his objection was entirely well founded.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Secretary, if he has the bill before him, to read the amendment which the Senate adopted.

Mr. CALL. I understand that whenever the judgment of the court is in anywise dependent upon the construction of an act of Congress the appeal would lie. It seems to me that that obviates to a very great extent the objection my colleague had to the bill so far as I can see it, and if there is no objection on the part of any other Senator, I shall have nothing further to say.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The clause of the bill referred to by the Senator from Alabama will be read.

Mr. MORGAN. As amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The clause will be read as amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That so much of the fifth section of the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals, and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," as provides that appeals or writs of error may be taken from the district or circuit courts direct to the Supreme Court in cases of conviction of a capital or other infamous crime, is hereby repealed, so far as affects cases other than capital and excepting cases where the defendant shall be sentenced to a fine of $5,000 or upwards, or to imprisonment for more than one year, saving and excepting writs of error already sued out; and in such cases the circuit court of appeals shall exercise appellate jurisdiction, in the manner and within the time prescribed in the sixth section of said act, and their judgments shall be final, except as provided in said section.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator from Florida will allow me a moment I will state that I offered an amendment to the bill which was adopted. It may not have been at that very point in the text, but it had reference to the same proposition if I remember correctly. It might have been offered to the other bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chief Clerk will read the amendment inserted on motion of the Senator from Alabama to the bill (S. 1615) to facilitate the disposition of causes in the Court of Claims, etc.

Mr. MORGAN. Ah!

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 9, section 3, after the word "involved," insert the words "relates to the validity or construction of an act of Congress or;" so as to read:

Or where the question involved relates to the validity or construction of an act of Congress or is of such special importance as to require the decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. MORGAN. That is the amendment I offered. It was not to this bill to which the motion applies now for a reconsideration, but to the other bill. It ought to apply to the pending bill.

Mr. CALL. If it does not apply to the pending bill the objection which was made by my colleague remains in full force.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. BERRY. If the Senator will permit me a moment, I will state that the objection made by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO], who is absent to-day, was that under the present law an appeal would lie in all cases where the punishment might under the statute be a certain penalty; for instance, where the fine was $5,000; but by the amendment proposed and adopted by the Senator from Massachusetts he cuts off appeals except where the penalty which may be actually inflicted amounts to that sum, and it would permit the judge trying the case to prevent the party from having the right of appeal by imposing a penalty of $4,999. That was the objection raised by the Senator from Florida to the bill.

Mr. MORGAN. I thought I had met that objection by the amendment which I find I introduced to the other bill. The amendment is equally applicable to both bills. I think the amendment I introduced in the other bill would meet this objection.

Mr. HOAR. I shall have no objection, if it will remove the difficulty of Senators, to have the amendment inserted in the pending bill also.

Mr. MORGAN. It would remove my difficulty.

Mr. HOAR. My object is not to construe the bill so as to carry out solely my own convictions, but to get a bill if possible that will be generally satisfactory to Senators on both sides.

Mr. MORGAN. I will state for the information of the Senator from Massachusetts that I had the painful duty once of making the point in the Supreme Court of the United States upon one of our district judges in a case where he reduced the amount of recovery in a civil action in order to cut off the right of appeal. It was obvious that there was no other purpose for it in the world than that. It was an action upon coupons cut from bonds.

Mr. HOAR. We never can help that.

Mr. MORGAN. There were $5,300 of coupons issued upon a note. The jury had been charged, and had retired to their deliberations. They were called back into court. The attorney for the plaintiff did not enter any retraxit, but he moved to amend his declaration by striking out $400 of the coupons. The court allowed the amendment, and thereupon decided the cause. He decided if the jury believed the evidence they must find for the plaintiff and cut off all possible chance of exception and appeal, and saddle the judgment down upon men who believed that if they could have taken the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States they would have been released. It was a suit against a county. With that little experience in my mind, I do not want this power left in the hands of any judge.

Mr. BERRY. If the word "shall" were stricken out and the word "may" left in the bill it would be all right.

Mr. HOAR. That would leave the law just as it now is.

Mr. BERRY. Precisely; and that is exactly what the Senator from Florida desired that it should be.

Mr. HOAR. I give my opinion for one, whatever it is worth as a lawyer, that the substitution of the word "may" for the word "shall" would not change the legal effect of the bill one particle except in some one case of somebody.

Mr. MORGAN. If that is true, why not put the word in?

Mr. BERRY. Why not leave it in the bill?

Mr. HOAR. But you do not want to leave the bill open and debatable; you want to make your meaning certain. If the Senator from Florida will pardon me one moment, it is to be remembered that from the beginning of the Republic till now no right of any person has existed to carry up these cases, capital or otherwise. They have wholly ended in the circuit courts of the United States, and ended, until the establishment of the circuit courts of appeal a little while ago, with a court held by but one judge, calling in the district judge sometimes, and then going up sometimes on a certificate of division.

This is an enormously new and large right which was given by the act of last year, and it seems to me that no Senator who does not want to break down the Supreme Court of the United States and bring its authority and strength into weakness and contempt would claim for a moment that that court ought to sit in every case of petty larceny and every case of the sale of liquor without a license, and all the cases under the sudden amendment which was put in last year (which the Senator himself who moved it afterwards thought was a mistake) would leave it. That is the way it is left now.

The Senator says if we fix a limit of the fine or a limit of the sentence which shall be the condition of the right to take the case to the Supreme Court judges will avoid that by putting it a little under the limit. Of course that can not be helped. That infirmity, if you have occasionally a judge capable of such a thing, is inherent in the case itself, if you make the right $1,000 or $100, or $1. Now, if we could have by statute a definition of a class of cases that are of grave importance to the defendant, that should go straight up, we should all rejoice; but it is utterly impossible in the nature of the subject to do this in any other way. You have either got to have all criminal cases go up, which I do not think any considerable number of lawyers in this country would desire, or you have got to make somewhere a line in regard to the amount of the fine and the amount of the imprisonment. The line of $5,000 is the old line of the jurisdiction in civil cases. The line of one year—I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Arkansas to this proposition—the line of one year is the line of infamous punishment. It is not an infamous crime unless it may be punished by an infamous punishment, and it is not an infamous punishment unless the sentence is over one year. The courts of the United States can not sentence to hard labor unless they sentence for more than one year under the statute. They can not therefore in fact inflict an infamous punishment; and the reduction which the Senator from Arkansas is afraid the judges will make is a reduction from an infamous punishment to a punishment that is not infamous. That is the answer to his proposition, therefore, that the defendant is not infamously punished.

The difficulty with the present law, which I believe no single Senator who voted for it thought of or anticipated on either side of the Chamber, whether a lawyer or not a lawyer, is this: We said that infamous crimes should go up directly. The Supreme Court have held that a crime is an infamous crime whether it be in fact punished by an infamous punishment or not, if there is a right or a discretion on the part of the court to punish anybody who has committed an offense by imprisonment for more than a year at hard labor. Therefore, under the present law if a man is sentenced to a fine of 1 cent without costs for the offense of selling liquor without a United States license, he may carry that case direct from the district court to the Supreme Court of the United States, because in the discretion of the court below he might have been sentenced to an imprisonment of two years at hard labor.

I want to call the attention of Senators again to this point. The committee have taken the only practical and reasonable way, with the actual punishment and not the possibility of punishing people for a crime defined in the same section of the statute as the true measure; and when the court, to avoid exceptions, reduces the punishment to under twelve months, they reduce it from a punishment which is infamous to a punishment which is not infamous. I think that is a reasonable and sound provision, and you can not better it. But I am perfectly willing, as I understand that will meet the objection of my friend from Florida, to put in also the limitation which was put in on the motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] to the Court of Claims bill. If it will meet the views of Senators on the other side, I am willing to add, "or where the decision affects the construction or validity of an act of Congress."

Mr. CALL. So far as I am concerned, it seems to me that the amendment which the Senator from Alabama proposes, opens the door of appeal quite as wide as the words "may be."

Mr. HOAR. It opens it. Still there is a class of cases scientifically defined—

Mr. CALL. I can not conceive of a case where a statute of the United States will not be drawn in question in that court.

Mr. MORGAN. That might be very true in the earlier court, but in the experience or practice of the court very soon questions would be decided, and the rule, of course, would apply to cases as they arose. The number of appeals would be very much decreased after that.

Mr. CALL. I understand every criminal case stands upon its own foundation, and as long as time will last the law for that criminal case made by the same court may be changed.

Mr. MORGAN. But a man has to enter into bonds for costs and the like, and when the decision has been made by the Supreme Court as to the validity or construction of the statute he is not apt to litigate very much more about it.

Mr. CALL. It is very true that that is a limitation, but that does not affect the right.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will allow me, I propose to amend the clause so as to read:

So far as affects cases other than capital, and excepting cases where the defendant shall be sentenced to a fine of $5,000 or upwards, or to imprisonment for more than one year, or in cases where the question decided includes the validity or construction of an act of Congress.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I will not delay action upon the bill any further than to say—

Mr. HOAR. Let that be done by unanimous consent. Let the bill be reconsidered, the amendment made, and the bill be passed. Then, if there be no objection, the Senator from Florida can proceed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The agreement will be considered as entered into, if there be no objection.

Mr. CALL. I only wish to make one remark in vindication of my colleague's position upon the bill now proposed to be made a law. This proposed law does provide that if a defendant shall be sentenced to a fine of $4,999.99, or to an imprisonment of eleven months and twenty-eight or twenty-nine days, he can not appeal, without the amendment of the Senator from Alabama. That is a degree of punishment which in a great many cases is ruinous to people of limited means. They can never get out of imprisonment unless there is some provision for their discharge without paying that fine. It may be a matter of perjury, it may be a matter connected with elections, it may be something in which the person however violating the law may not have any deliberate purpose of guilt.

The Senator from Massachusetts thinks that the change of the words "may be" into the words "shall be" does not make any difference. Let us see:

Excepting cases where the defendant may be sentenced to a fine of $5,000, or upwards.

That certainly refers to the liability.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me one moment just there, before he proceeds to comment upon my position, I will state that the words "may be sentenced" undoubtedly may mean may be sentenced under the law, the law would warrant such a sentence; or it may mean, as it would be frequently used, that the defendant may have been sentenced, which is a common use of the word "may." The man says if I may do so and so such and such a thing would happen. Now, the court have got to decide between those two interpretations. The former interpretation would be holding that Congress had passed an important and grave bill, and in the debate had assigned a desire to limit the right of appeal as the reason for passing the bill, when in fact they had left the law just as it was without any change whatever, because that is the law now, that if a man is liable to such a sentence he can go right up whether he gets the sentence or not.

Therefore it seems to me beyond any reasonable question that the courts would say that the words "may be" mean just as "shall be" or "may have been," and they could not come to any other conclusion, because it would make an absurdity of the act if it had that meaning.

Mr. BERRY. If the Senator will permit me, if that be true, I can not understand why the Senator desires that the word "may" shall be stricken out and "shall" inserted. What the facts are we all know, since the law was passed authorizing appeals. There are certain judges whose rulings have been less arbitrary, who have paid more regard to the rights of the citizens and have been more cautious and more particular in the trial of causes than they were before. Under the present law, wherever it falls within the largest penalty that may be affixed or the maximum punishment in a certain class of cases, the appeal lies as a matter of right.

Now, you propose to say that wherever the punishment shall be so and so, then the appeal shall lie; otherwise it shall not lie. I say, and I repeat that which I said awhile ago, it leaves it within the power of the judge by reducing the penalty which he puts upon the man just below the maximum amount to deprive him of the right of appeal altogether, while the punishment would be just as severe, lacking a dollar, perhaps, or a cent, or a day's imprisonment as that which the man would be entitled to. It ought not to be left to the discretion of the judge.

Mr. HOAR. In one case it is infamous punishment, and in the other it is not. In the one case a man is sentenced to hard labor, and in the other he is not. In the one case he has a right to go to the court of appeals. It is only the question to which at all practically he takes an exception.

Mr. BERRY. I beg the Senator's pardon. Under the bill as reported and under the present law it would read, "and excepting cases where the defendant may be sentenced to a fine of $5,000 or upwards, or to imprisonment for more than one year." Although the punishment was not so great as that, under the statute by which he is convicted it might be placed that way and then the appeal would lie; but if you strike out "may" and insert "shall" then, unless the judge affixes the penalty to the amount here stated, $5,000, he would be deprived of the appeal. Therefore I insist that it ought not to rest within the discretion of the judge.

Mr. PALMER. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas a question. Is it the Senator's view that the word "shall" would alter the construction of the statute at all?

Mr. BERRY. I can not understand why the Senator from Massachusetts wants to strike out the word "may" and insert "shall," unless he thinks that it does.

Mr. PALMER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts want to strike out "may" and insert "shall"?

Mr. BERRY. Yes, he wants to strike out "may." It was done on Thursday last, and the word "shall" was inserted in its place.

Mr. PALMER. I supposed they were equivalent in the sentence.

Mr. BERRY. The word "may," as used in the present law, provides that an appeal will lie where the punishment may be so and so. If the word "may" is stricken out and "shall" inserted, then the appeal will only lie when the judge imposes that larger penalty; it being in his discretion to impose a larger or a smaller one.

Mr. PALMER. I should much prefer the word "shall" to "may," if it is meant to be a limitation after all.

Mr. BERRY. I do not want to leave the appeal limited to where the punishment is so great. The law we passed a year ago afforded great relief to certain citizens in the section of the country from which I come, and it has been a great restraint upon some of the judges, and I want that restraint to continue. Where the punishment amounts to one year's imprisonment or a fine of $5,000, where it may be fixed as the present law is, I want the defendant to have the right of appeal to a higher court, and not leave it in the discretion of the judge whether an appeal shall or shall not lie.

Mr. PALMER. I really may have been looking at this proposed statute incorrectly. So far as affects cases other than appeal, and excepting cases where the defendant may be sentenced to a fine of $5,000 or upwards or to imprisonment for more than one year, I had supposed that that would apply to any case where the penalty was discretionary. I am aware the judge might impose a sentence of $5,000 or more or that he might impose a sentence of $5,000 or less, but am I to understand that it shall only apply to cases where the penalty was necessarily more than $5,000 and necessarily an imprisonment of more than one year? I ask the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts. I repeat, I had supposed that this applies to cases where the penalty was discretionary, where it might be more or less than $5,000 or where the imprisonment might be more or less than one year, and that the right of appeal would attach only in a case where a fine was imposed of more than $5,000 or imprisonment for more than one year.

Mr. HOAR. If I correctly understand the Senator he is correct.

Mr. PALMER. Then the object of the word "shall" was to produce that change?

Mr. HOAR. It was to prevent any argument that it applied to all cases where the sentence was discretionary, whether the discretion was actually exercised to make it an infamous punishment or not.

Mr. PALMER. May I then be permitted to ask the Senator whether it would apply to a case where the court was at liberty to impose a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $10,000.

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. PALMER. It would apply to that kind of a case?

Mr. HOAR. As I understand.

Mr. BERRY. An appeal would not be allowed in that case.

Mr. HOAR. Let me put a case which will illustrate it as well as any. If I am not mistaken in the length of time, the law for selling liquor without a United States license authorizes the imposition of a term of imprisonment not exceeding two years. The usual imprisonment in point of fact is about six months. An old Irish woman found with her jug under her bed would be fined, I suppose, $5, and that would be the whole of it.

Under the law of last winter all such cases would go direct to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the Senator from Arkansas wants it done. He is very frank in stating it.

I do not think it is a good plan to have those cases go there. They can go to the circuit court of appeals. In the first place, it enables dishonest counsel to plunder and worry clients. In the next place, there is nothing in the question which requires them to come in and wait three or four years. Again, the other provision for the court of appeals is ample. What makes them go to the Supreme Court at all is that the court have held that a sentence to hard labor is an infamous punishment, and that an infamous crime is a crime which is punishable by an infamous punishment in the discretion of the court, whether it in fact be so punished or not. Therefore they have held that every case where the law gives this power to the court comes under it. Now, we say let the thing be determined by the fact whether the punishment is in truth infamous or not, and not by the fact whether it might be made so if the court chose to make it.

Mr. BERRY. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts, if he will kindly permit me, what would be the result if under this provision a man was sentenced to be imprisoned for eleven months, we will put it? The language is "for more than one year." Then there would be no appeal under the act as amended by the pending measure.

Mr. HOAR. Then he would have to go to the court of appeals. He can not be sentenced to hard labor in that case; he can not be sentenced to the ordinary penitentiary; it must be only a sentence in jail, which is not an infamous punishment.

Mr. PALMER. I have not been satisfied with the statutes that make crime infamous or not on account of what the judge may do. Crime is either infamous or not according to what the accused did. I approve of so much of this proposed law as distinguishes crimes that are infamous in themselves, infamous from the character of the punishment necessarily inflicted, rather than what may accidentally be imposed by a judge.

But there is another point to which I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts, and that is as to the very large amount of the minimum fine authorized to be imposed. Five thousand dollars is the minimum. The Senator from Massachusetts does not know the character of some parts of the country in which we live, and I hope he has none such in Massachusetts. There are portions of the State of Illinois in which $5,000 would be esteemed a very handsome fortune, and to make the minimum fine $5,000 would be to practically determine that class; my constituents would have to rally a good many friends, and an appeal in some cases would be impossible.

Mr. HOAR. To the Supreme Court?

Mr. PALMER. Yes, sir; to the Supreme Court. I do not remember, I will state to the Senator from Massachusetts, of an instance in Illinois where a fine of $5,000 has been imposed by the United States circuit or district court. On the contrary, $1,000 would be a very large fine to be imposed. I have been about the courts a good deal and I remember but one instance in which a fine of $1,000 was imposed. It occurs to me that the minimum ought to be very much less.

Mr. HOAR. What would the Senator suggest?

Mr. PALMER. My suggestion would be $1,000.

Mr. HOAR. I am perfectly willing to make it $1,000. I do not think that it is very important. Let that be a part of the unanimous consent, if the Chair has no objection.

Mr. CALL. Now, Mr. President—

Mr. BERRY. What was the proposition? I did not hear it.

Mr. HOAR. The Senate a little while ago agreed that the bill should be reconsidered, and the amendment which was suggested by the Senator from Alabama inserted and the bill passed. I have no objection to having the provision for a fine of $5,000 reduced to $1,000, if that will make it more acceptable.

Mr. BERRY. Then an appeal would lie where the penalty was $1,000 or more?

Mr. HOAR. Yes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, at the beginning of line 13, before the word "thousand" strike out "five" and insert "one;" so as to read:

Where the defendant shall be sentenced to a fine of $1,000 or upwards.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be agreed to if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I think the amendments which have been made answer to a very large extent, but not entirely, the purpose my colleague had in view. His idea was to give a man a right of appeal in all cases where any action of the party might affect his reputation injuriously or impute to him infamous conduct. The two amendments which have been made enlarge the right of appeal practically to that extent. The Senator from Massachusetts, I think, with that accurate discrimination and analysis which belong to him, has correctly stated to a very considerable extent the probable construction which would be placed by the court upon the words "may be" as contradistinguished from "shall be" in the statement that the court would probably construe the words "may be" by the purpose of the act, to wit, the limitation upon the right of appeal, and that therefore the change of the words "shall be" from "may be" would have practically little or no effect. For these reasons I think the amendments made by the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Massachusetts and the reduction of the amount specified here will answer the purpose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there are no further amendments the question is on ordering the bill to a third reading.

Mr. HOAR. The unanimous consent was that the bill should be reconsidered and this amendment made and the bill passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Then the pending question is on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. HOAR. The question is on the title. Shall the title stand as reported?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the passage of the bill, the Chair understands.

Mr. HOAR. The bill stands as passed. It was passed on Thursday, and a motion to reconsider was entered. By unanimous consent it has been reconsidered, the amendments made, and the bill passed. That has been done. So the only question is on the title.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The title of the bill will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill to amend an act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals, and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill stands passed under the unanimous agreement. The Chair lays before the Senate bills from the House of Representatives for reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 3202) to pension Nancy E. Renfro; and

A bill (H. R. 4488) granting a pension to James A. Davis.

The bill (H. R. 5133) to authorize the Marinette and Western Railroad Company to construct a railroad through the Menominee Reservation, in the State of Wisconsin, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill (H. R. 7519) to authorize the appointment of clerks of the United States circuit and district courts of Mississippi City in the State of Mississippi, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE GAMBLE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed the eulogies delivered in Congress upon Hon. John R. Gamble, late a Representative from the State of South Dakota, 8,000 copies, of which number 2,000 shall be delivered to the Senators and Representatives of the State of South Dakota, which shall include 50 copies to be bound in full morocco, to be delivered to the family of the deceased; and of those remaining, 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, and 4,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives; and the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to have engraved and printed a portrait of the said John R. Gamble to accompany said eulogies.

THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. GEORGE. I believe that the resolution relative to the appointment of a committee to inquire into the cause of the low price of cotton and the depressed condition of agriculture in the States raising cotton was made the special order for 2 o'clock to-day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business is Senate bill 1615. It takes precedence under the rule of the special order.

Mr. GEORGE. But the special order is now in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business is in order.

Mr. GEORGE. I thought we were through with the unfinished business.

Mr. HOAR. The unfinished business, I understand, is the bill in regard to the Court of Claims.

Mr. GEORGE. Is that pending now?

Mr. HOAR. That is pending, and the question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

Mr. GEORGE. I find I was mistaken. I supposed that we had gotten through with the unfinished business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business will be proceeded with.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1615) to facilitate the disposition of causes in the Court of Claims, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. DANIEL, which was, in section 1, line 4, after the words "Court of Claims," to insert "who shall be members of different political parties;" so as to read:

That there shall be appointed in the manner provided by law two additional judges for the Court of Claims, who shall be members of different political parties, etc.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia is intended to require that the judges who shall be appointed to this court shall be pure men, nonpartisan men. I suppose there will be no kind of controversy upon the point that a judge who is a partisan is not a pure man, is not an honorable man; that when he enters upon the high duties of that position he is required, whatever may be his devotion to principle which he may very well have, to disconnect himself entirely from considerations in the performance of his public duty. It is a great infirmity of the human mind that men can not do that, that even unconsciously to themselves they will be influenced by their associations and by their prejudices. The great object is to provide such surroundings in the appointment of men to this high office that they will be least liable to be influenced in the exercise of their duties by these considerations. Some progress is made by requiring that these men shall not be appointed so that one political party may control the exercise of judicial power.

It is idle to talk in this country, where you appoint all men, or a majority of them, to the exercise of any political function, and give to them the power over the lives and the property and the liberty of people, that they will not exercise it for those ends which address themselves to their minds as most important to the country and to themselves.

It is objected to this proposition that a court shall be nonpartisan; that the men who exercise these functions shall be beyond even suspicion; that it can not be done under the Constitution of the United States; that you can not limit the President's power of appointment. It seems to me that the Constitution is entirely plain in that respect. It provides that the President shall have power to appoint

All other officers of the United States whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they think proper in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments.

Inferior officers in this category, in this clause, are those contradistinguished from enumerated officers. There is no question about that, and Congress has the express power to vest the appointment of those officers otherwise.

Inasmuch as the President has no constitutional right to appoint them, in creating this office there can be no doubt that the Congress may impose conditions as to the character of men; they shall be honest men, they shall be men learned in the law; they shall be men possessing special qualifications. In creating the office that is necessarily assumed as a part of our power. This is a legislative tribunal. The court may be changed to-morrow by Congress and the power to appoint these inferior officers in the technical language of the Constitution, can be vested by Congress otherwise than in the President of the United States. So it seems to me there is no force in the proposition that by the Constitution the President has the absolute or unlimited or unrestrained power of appointment which can not be affected by any legislation on the part of Congress.

But if we look at this country and consider now that every tribunal in the United States has been organized upon a party basis and with men conspicuous for their party relations and their party convictions, when we consider the fact that a great section of this country is entirely ignored and that the appointment to judicial office, notwithstanding the ability and the learning and the pure character of great numbers of men qualified for those positions in that country, has been almost entirely ignored, as if a ban of proscription had been placed upon them—when we consider that, it seems to me, whether we are of the one party or the other, we shall all recognize the fact that the safety of this Republic and the continued prosperity of this people depend upon the imposing of such qualifications and such limitations as may be possible upon this practice of organizing judicial tribunals with men distinguished for their partisan convictions and their party associations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The question recurs upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

Mr. HOAR. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, before voting upon this question I desire to say a few words.

I shall vote against putting this provision into this bill because I do not think that it is wise in providing benches of judges to declare that they shall be divided among the various political parties. I do not believe that a provision of that kind should be inserted in the statute books.

But, Mr. President, I wish to say further that I am in favor of a division by the appointing power of judges among the political parties. I do not believe in a partisan bench. I have always been in favor in my own State of having both political parties represented upon our supreme court, and that is now the settled policy of New Hampshire. Of our bench of seven judges, three are Democrats and four are Republicans. If there were to be a political revolution in the State to-morrow, instead of upturning the bench of judges one Republican would resign and a Democrat would take his place. I believe that that system is conducive to the correct administration of the law and altogether more satisfactory to our people and for the best interests of the State of New Hampshire I have always advocated it. I believe it is the true policy and I shall always continue in favor of that policy.

Now, Mr. President, I have the same view with reference to the Court of Claims. I believe it should not be a partisan tribunal, and I think one at least of these two judges who are to be appointed, if this law shall be enacted, should be appointed from the minority party, and that the bench of that court should not remain wholly composed of members of one political party. I believe that should be the action of the Executive in making appointments under this law in case the bill should pass both Houses of Congress.

I did not feel willing to vote in the negative without making this statement for the satisfaction, if it be any satisfaction, of the Senator from Virginia, who has moved this amendment. I believe that a partisan court, except under peculiar circumstances, is injurious to a State, injurious to a country, and does not conduce to the wisest and best administration of the laws. These are no new sentiments with me, although this is the first opportunity which I have had of expressing them upon the floor of the Senate.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I am gratified to hear the expression of sentiment from the Senator from New Hampshire, and I know those sentiments to be sincere and in accordance with the public policy which has prevailed not only in his State but in other States of this country, notably the State of Massachusetts, which has always, or at least for a long time, observed the policy of selecting judges from different political parties.

I am very much encouraged in the advocacy of this amendment to the bill by what has been said, and I am satisfied, whatever criticisms may be made upon the form of the amendment, that it represents a thought which is in the breasts of a majority of this body. I think that the language of this amendment may be so changed as perhaps to get the votes of some gentlemen who would not vote for it as it stands. I believe the language of the amendment as now framed is "who shall belong to different political parties." That language would seem to import that the appointee had to belong to some political party. Now, I would ask leave, Mr. President, to withdraw that amendment in that shape, and to substitute instead of it the words "both of whom shall not belong to the same political party."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the amendment submitted by him to the bill pending before the Senate may be withdrawn. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, in advocacy of the amendment as it now stands, let me say that this would leave the field entirely open, without the suggestion from Congress to the President to select any persons as judges, provided they were not all members of the same political organization; they might be members of none; that is to say, utter nonpartisans in political affairs.

As to the constitutionality of the amendment, it seems to me that Congress would stultify itself, and both branches of Congress would place themselves in a very peculiar position if, after legislating along this line for a series of years, over a decade, they were now to object to the legal embodiment of a thought which they confessedly declare to be in their own breasts, and to be in entire consistency with their convictions, because of some alleged notions of its unconstitutionality.

If that amendment as it is now proposed is unconstitutional, the affairs of this country have been unconstitutionally administered for ten years in the Interstate Commerce Commission, in the Civil Service Commission, and by all the other commissions in the creation of which Congress has given suggestions to the President that he should not appoint all the members from the same political party. All these arguments have been gone over time and again in both Houses, and by consonance of both political parties, by the judgment of nearly every one who now occupies a seat either in the Senate or in the other branch of Congress, these commissions were within the legitimate line of legislation, not that that provision makes a mandate which the President is bound to obey, but that it is a suggestion or directory law, so to speak, to him, embodying in an act of legislation a declaration of public policy. That is all.

Now, sir, as to that being public policy, gentlemen here upon this floor declare it to be their conviction that it is, and the country has indorsed such legislation when applied to bodies in which it was not as desirable that all parties should be represented as upon the bench.

I cordially agree in the remarks which were made on Thursday last by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. He spoke in eulogy of the word "partisan" and of the character of the partisan, and I feel that everything that he said upon that subject is in consonance with truth. Men who are partisans are generally men who are earnest in their convictions and who, seeing as they conceive clearly the wisdom and justice of a particular idea, are enthusiastic and constant in its advocacy.

But, Mr. President, when partisans come up from different parts of this country with different education, with different prejudices and prepossessions of mind, the whole country would be bettered, in my judgment, if their local prejudices were tempered by the suggestions of thought which come from other minds which have been cultured in different ways and have had a more varied experience. It is by putting the partisan on one side against the partisan on the other side that wisdom is finally evolved out of that compromise of the operation of forces, and I hope to see the bench of this country, not only of the Court of Claims, but every bench of this country which consists of a body of judges, so composed that it may represent as nearly as may be the thought of the whole country and not the peculiar thought of a mere transient political organization or the sentiments of a momentary period in our history.

I should look upon that amendment as embodied in this bill as the avant-coureur of a judicial reform, and seeing that the President of the United States has himself gone in that direction by appointing judges from the Democratic party, although he is himself a Republican, I do not think that Congress ought to hesitate to indorse that liberality of executive judgment by expressing its approbation thereof in any manner which may be becoming to it as a legislative body.

The idea that this amendment is unconstitutional in the sense that it is a usurpation on our part of the executive prerogative has been refuted time and again for a series of years by the practice of Congress and by the accepted opinions of the country. We all realize that it does not go with the sanction of a mandate which is compulsory upon the President. He understands it, Congress understands it, and the people understand it, and why should we resist what is our own conviction of an appropriate, patriotic, and liberal result by a cheese-paring process which would attack the whole body of our legislation and the whole structure of our laws, if we were to apply to them the same methods?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Virginia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, line 4, after the words "Court of Claims," it is proposed to insert "both of whom shall not belong to the same political party."

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, I simply desire to comment upon one remark of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL.] The Senator admits that Congress has no right to embody the terms of the amendment he proposes in a law, that it would be no law, that the President will not be required to obey it, and that it is a mere suggestion of ours which is not obligatory upon him. I believe I am correct in so understanding the Senator?

One other thing I have to say. The Senator objects to a construction of the Constitution which he contends is a cheese-paring construction of the Constitution. Mr. President, I am very much surprised—

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to inquire if the President approved the act, whether he would not thereby indorse its constitutionality?

Mr. PALMER. I suppose if the President did not approve the law it would be no law; still I apprehend he can do as he pleases about it. I take it for granted that the President is like a Senator with this difference: The Constitution requires that if the President approve a bill, he shall sign it. I hope that the time will not come in this country when a President will approve a bill which is not in consonance with the Constitution as he understands it. I will not undertake to say what is the proper understanding—

Mr. DANIEL. Will the honorable Senator allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. PALMER. Of course. I shall be glad to hear the Senator.

Mr. DANIEL. I think the word "shall" would be construed in this connection exactly as the Senator thought it should be construed about fifteen minutes ago in another bill, that is, as "may."

Mr. PALMER. Then Congress would merely provide that the President "may," if he chooses, appoint or he may not appoint two men from the same party. I take it that he may not without our help.

I was about to say that I am demurring to this characterization of a constitutional objection as being a cheese-paring construction of the Constitution, and I am expressing my surprise that from the Old Dominion we should hear a constitutional objection, which is admitted to be sound, characterized as "cheese-paring." I had supposed that no part of that instrument was so unimportant as that it would be disregarded.

Mr. President, there is a principle far more important than that to me. I maintain that the purity and efficiency of this Government largely depends upon confining each Department of the Government to its own appropriate sphere. If it is the policy of the country that judges shall be appointed from different parties, or from no political party, the President will learn that from other sources than from Congress, because Congress has no right to tell the President, Congress has no right to pass a law which will invade the province of the President. The beginning is not the end. Rigorous adherence on the part of every department of the Government to its own functions and rigid and firm resistance on the part of each department to invasions from the other, is essential to the preservation of the Government.

The President must judge of his own policy, must judge of the proper policy to be pursued by his department. I go beyond that. I recollect that Gen. Jackson, whose day we celebrate, said that each department of the Government must construe the Constitution for itself. I believe that the President ought to construe the Constitution for himself, and that Congress ought to construe it for itself. If it would suit the Senate to pass this and to invite the House of Representatives to participate in the appointing power by limiting the number from whom the President shall choose, so be it.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I find myself unable to agree to the amendment which the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] has proposed, and without spending any time in debate I desire to state briefly why. I do not place it upon the constitutional ground entirely, although there seems to be force in that objection, but I understand the Court of Claims to be a part of the judicial system of the United States, to be in every proper sense one of the courts of the United States, and its judges ought to be of as exalted a judicial character and of as proper judicial qualifications as those of any other court.

Now, sir, I must, reluctantly as I differ with the distinguished Senator, enter my objection to any course of legislation which shall assume that the judges of the courts of the United States are to be appointed or to have appointment refused either because they belong or do not belong to a particular political party. The judiciary of the country has, and justly, with very few exceptions indeed, received universally the confidence of the people of this country as being trustworthy to decide questions submitted to them quite irrespective of party, and it is only when a party spirit has been infused into the bench of judges that the people of this country have ever felt distrust or a disposition to rebel against the judgments of our courts.

It seems to me, therefore, that to introduce into laws providing for judges the idea that the appointing power should take into consideration the partisan character of the persons who should go upon the bench is to infuse a dangerous and an unfortunate element of consideration. It seems to me that if a judge were under this provision appointed because he belonged to one party he would feel that it might be expected of him when a case came before him for judgment that he should follow the wishes of that party to which he had belonged.

I desire to see upon our benches of judges everywhere and all the time men who will have no hesitation in disregarding the wishes of the party to which they have belonged; men who will have no fear of subordinating their partisan wishes to their clear view of what the law is, and the law ought to be understood as being far above and far beyond the partisan wishes of anybody.

For that reason and simply because it seems to me that it would pass a partisan element into the judicial authority of the United States, which all good men ought to seek to exclude from it, I can not support the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Virginia.

Mr. HOAR. I do not wish to prolong the debate, but I wish to say, as a comment on the new form of this amendment, that the Senator from Virginia asks the Senate to enact for the first time in our legislative history that one judge shall be appointed as a Republican and one judge shall be appointed as a Democrat. That is the substance of what his amendment says.

Of course there are persons, as was said the other day, who do not belong to any political party, who, I think, probably might come in under the bill; and there are more than two political parties in the country, but practically, as we all know, that will be understood to be an affirmation by Congress of its desire, taking the Senator's own limitation of its potency, that in appointments to this court there shall be a judge who is appointed as a Democrat and another judge who is appointed as a Republican.

If that principle is carried out, the result so clearly stated by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] will follow. The judge will be there, and be a Democrat. If the law provides that he shall be appointed as a Democrat, he will expect to act as a Democrat, or will be likely to so act. If the law provides that he shall be appointed as a Republican, he will be likely to act as a Republican on the bench.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Virginia. The Chair will state that the former amendment of the Senator from Virginia having been withdrawn by unanimous consent, the Chair is of the opinion that the yeas and nays which were ordered upon that amendment do not apply to the vote upon the present amendment. Unless the yeas and nays are called upon the pending amendment the Chair will submit the question on its adoption.

Mr. HIGGINS. Let the amendment be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 4, after the words "Court of Claims," it is proposed to insert, "both of whom shall not belong to the same political party."

Mr. PEEFFER. I should like to suggest a very slight change in the wording of that amendment. I think it would sound a little better to omit the words "both of," and to put it in this form: "Who shall not belong to the same political party." I move that change, simply to omit the words "both of."

Mr. DANIEL. I will accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia accepts the modification of his amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas. The amendment will be stated as modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 4, after the words "Court of Claims," it is proposed to insert "who shall not belong to the same political party;" so as to read:

That there shall be appointed in the manner provided by law two additional judges for the Court of Claims, who shall not belong to the same political party, who shall hold office for the same term and receive the same compensation as is now provided for the judges of said court.

Mr. DANIEL. I, too, Mr. President, dislike to prolong this debate, and yet I dislike also to be placed in a position which I do not feel fairly represents my attitude upon the subject.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] refers to my remarks as indicating that I realize that this provision is not constitutional, and yet desired it to go into the law as a sort of brutum fulmen. That is far from the fact, and I have been unhappy in expressing myself if any such deduction could be drawn from my language. The word "unconstitutional" is sometimes ambiguous in its meaning. There are laws which are recognized to be mandatory, and laws which are described in the books which consider the interpretation of statutes as directory, and there may also be provisions in laws which are indicative of a public policy, and all these different classifications of legislation are recognized and interpreted as within the fair and just scope of Congressional power.

I admit that it seemed to me to be doubtful at least whether or not Congress had the power to impose upon the President the obligation to appoint in the manner indicated in this bill, but at the same time I contended, whether it be true or not that Congress could impose upon him the constitutional obligation to do so, it was in accordance with precedent and perfectly consistent and right that Congress should embody this provision as a directory clause of this proposed law, it being a suggestion of public policy which Congress, as the representative of the people, saw fit to put upon a statute.

The Senator from Illinois contends that it is never proper for Congress to express its judgment as to executive public policy. Why, Mr. President, there is hardly anything more common in legislation than for the Congress of the United States to express its judgment upon public questions by resolutions, by preambles, by all those methods which accompany the distinct statutory direction which indicates a certain sense or opinion which it desires may be suggestive to the President. It is doubtful, indeed, whether or not this clause might not be supported as constitutional in the sense of being a mandate. I have not contended for that position, because it was not necessary to uphold this legislation, and because my own mind, to say the least, was doubtful whether or not we could enact it in that effective and conclusive manner; but my attention has been called by the distinguished Senator who sits by my side [Mr. CULLOM] to the opinion of the Attorney-General upon the Civil Service Commission, which was given in 1871, and which is found on page 516, volume 13, of the Opinions of the Attorneys-General, in which this whole subject was thoroughly canvassed, and in which the Attorney-General of the United States gave it as his judgment that—

"Though the appointing power alone can designate an individual for an office, either Congress, by direct legislation, or the President, by authority derived from Congress, can prescribe qualifications, and require that the designation shall be made out of a class of persons ascertained by proper tests to have those qualifications."

That doctrine, Mr. President, as I believe, has since been upheld by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. So, for over twenty years, for a generation, the law officers of our Government, the courts of our country, and both branches of Congress have recognized the propriety of just such legislation as that which I have to-day proposed, with the single exception that it is now proposed to be extended to the courts.

I can not at all appreciate the force of the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. He says that if a judge is appointed as a Democrat he will be a Democrat after he is upon the bench, and if appointed as a Republican he will be a Republican after he becomes a judge. Certainly he will; but what of that? Because a man remains a Republican, is that any reason that he should become dishonest if he were not so to start with, and because he remains a Democrat is that any reason he should become dishonest if he were not so at the beginning?

The whole theory of this subject of distributing judicial and other offices rests upon the fact that human nature is the same the wide world over, whether it be designated on the outside by the term "Democrat" or "Republican."

Take the great crowd upon the streets that go up one side and down the other, take the men whom you meet in public life or upon the highways, and do you not have to ask them by what designation they go in order to find out? These distinctions are sometimes not even skin deep, but in other respects there is no reason why you should not appoint a man as a Democrat or as a Republican. Does not the President of the United States select the judges of the Supreme Court because they are Republicans? Does not the Senator from Massachusetts know the fact that the judges of the Supreme Court are selected because they are of the political faith of the Executive? Did not the Senator from Massachusetts himself accept a commission and was he not selected to sit upon the Electoral Commission because he was a Republican? And do we not all know, Mr. President, however ethereally you may talk about men lifting themselves up out of the atmosphere of the world in which they live, that it is impossible in the nature which God has given us that we can utterly do so, however much we may attempt it?

Mr. VILAS. If I may interrupt the Senator without interrupting him—

Mr. DANIEL. It is not an interruption.

Mr. VILAS. I was going to ask him if he thought the constitution of the electoral commission and the result which we got from it furnished a solid foundation for the hope of good results from a judiciary so constituted?

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I am such a partisan upon that subject that I hardly think either the Senator from Wisconsin or myself is sufficiently elevated above partisan considerations to give an opinion that would carry any weight except with those who concurred with us.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, with the Senator's permission I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. DANIEL. With pleasure.

Mr. PERKINS. Do you not in your own State have an appointive judiciary?

Mr. DANIEL. We have an elective judiciary, chosen by the Legislature.

Mr. PERKINS. I would ask if that judiciary is not made up exclusively of members of one political organization?

Mr. DANIEL. Yes, sir; every one of the judges of our supreme court is a Republican, and was elected as such.

Mr. PERKINS. How with those who have been chosen since?

Mr. DANIEL. Everytime the Democrats have gotten a chance they have put out the Republican and put a Democrat in with unerring accuracy. That is the way, Mr. President, that political parties have always done in my State and they will continuously do the same thing until there is by general concurrence an adoption of a different principle.

Mr. PERKINS. I should like to ask the Senator one more question.

Mr. DANIEL. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask if this system at his home, of which he is speaking, receives his indorsement and approval?

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator tell me what that has got to do with this question?

Mr. PERKINS. I thought the Senator would see and would be frank enough to answer.

Mr. DANIEL. I will be frank with the Senator. It has.

Mr. PERKINS. I thought so.

Mr. DANIEL. Because I have been a partisan Democrat and I do not try to deceive the people by making them believe that I am something different, but I should be perfectly willing, and am willing here now in so far as my little influence might ever have anything to do with the subject, to pledge myself hereafter, if the Democrats shall control the seven judges of the Court of Claims, that they will at least, if this act shall be passed, have one Republican representative upon it, and that is all which we ask.

Our theories are sometimes better than our practices, and if our theories were not better than our practices we should be continuously getting worse instead of better. Now, I should be glad to see in my own State—I should be glad to see in every State—a representation upon the bench of all those permanent political parties which represented divergence in ideas. I think it is an education to a Republican judge to have a suggestion occasionally from a Democrat. I know it is an education to a Democrat to have those suggestions of thought which come from Republican teaching, and I have often changed my own opinions upon this measure or upon that or upon this public policy or upon that when I heard fully expounded the views and considerations which actuated those who advocated it, and which, in my narrow Democratic atmosphere, I would not hear if they were not so suggested.

There are none of us who are not capable of improvement, not even the Senator from Massachusetts, the Senator from Kansas, or the Senator from Illinois, and it is because I realize the fact that I want to improve myself and my party and my country that I desire to pursue those methods which will liberalize its thought and afford different opinions and opportunity of competition with each other when they are about to be expressed in the form of judicial interpretation.

Does any one to-day regret in all this country that there are one or two Democrats upon the Supreme Court of the United States? Is there a broad-minded, uplifted patriot amongst the Republicans of this land who is not glad, now that it is done, that there are two or three Democrats upon the Supreme Court of the United States, who, when great judgments are to be delivered, which lay down the law of this land for all of our countrymen, those who differ with the predominant thought may have some opportunity of expression and some opportunity of enlightening their associates who sit by their side? Especially in this inferior court, where claims come up from all parts of the country, would I like to see a representation from all parts of the country.

Nothing so much shocks my sensibility or my conscience as the idea of a judge who will debase his office and will give a partisan judgment, but, Mr. President, men who have any acquaintance with human nature know the fact that, whether it be John Marshall, who sits as Chief Justice of the United States, or Fuller of Illinois, those men who go there carry the projection of their lives with them, the education of their boyhood with them, the experiences of their manhood with them, and that it is as utterly impossible for them to change the order of their being as it would be to add one hair to their heads or a cubit to their statue. We must get at justice, at equity, at right by the pooling of opinion, so to speak, by one opinion setting itself up against another, not by having one little coterie of men who move day after day and week after week and year after year in the narrow circle of a single groove and set of ideas.

Mr. President, I hope this amendment may be adopted. I have at least the satisfaction of knowing that it has the judgment of a majority of Senators of this body at its back, at least in the thought that it embodies. Why they should hesitate to let that thought find utterance, I can not understand, seeing that for twenty years our opinions of the Attorneys-General, the decisions of the courts, and the statutes of Congress abound with precedents broad enough to cover and swallow up every element of objection which they have made against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. BERRY. I think the other day the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] demanded the yeas on the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not understand that any Senator demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. BERRY. I will ask for them.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator will not insist upon that. There is hardly a quorum present at this time.

Mr. BERRY. I think there is a quorum present, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER, in the chair, when his name was called). The present occupant of the chair is paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. Were he present I should vote "yea."

Mr. MILLS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH].

Mr. POWER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON].

Mr. WILSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. He not being present I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CASEY. I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO].

Mr. HIGGINS. I suggest to the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] that we exchange pairs, so that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], with whom he is paired, will stand paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], and then the Senator from Texas and I can vote to make a quorum.

Mr. MILLS. That is satisfactory to me.

Mr. CALL (after having voted in the negative). I ask if the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. CALL. I withdraw my vote; I am paired with him.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator will not withdraw his vote.

Mr. CALL. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. PASCO] is paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. CASEY]. I understand the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to request that I allow my vote to stand in order to make a quorum. I will comply with his request.

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—27.
Allen,	Frye,	Paddock,	Shoup,
Carey,	Hawley,	Peffer,	Squire,
Chandler,	Higgins,	Pettigrew,	Stewart,
Dawes,	Hiscock,	Platt,	Stockbridge,

So the bill was passed.

EXCLUSION OF CHINESE.

Mr. CHANDLER. I submit amendments intended to be proposed by me to House bill 6185, in reference to the exclusion of Chinese, which I ask may be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made in the absence of objection.

Mr. CHANDLER subsequently said: At the suggestion of other Senators I ask that my amendments intended to be proposed to the Chinese exclusion bill, which are brief, may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire, that the amendments proposed by him may be printed in the RECORD? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The proposed amendments are as follows:

Amendments to be proposed by Mr. CHANDLER to H. R. 6185:
Section 1, line 3, after the first "That," add "for fifteen years."
Section 1, line 21, strike out "absolutely prohibited" and insert "suspended for the period of fifteen years aforesaid."
Section 2, line 1, after "who shall," add "while this act remains in force."
Section 2, line 5, strike out "prohibited" and insert "suspended."
Section 7, line 13, strike out "five" and insert "two."
Section 12, line 3, after "of this act," add "other than those excepted in the first section thereof."
Section 13, at the end add:

"In case of the loss or destruction without the fault of any Chinaman of his certificate of residence which has been duly issued to him, a duplicate may be issued under rules and regulations prescribed by said Secretary of the Treasury."

SEC. 14. Strike out in lines 2 to 6 the words:

"And the provisions of all treaties now in force between the United States and the Chinese Empire, in so far as they or any of them conflict with the provisions of this act, be, and the same are hereby, abrogated, set aside, and repealed."

SEC. 14. At the end add:

"And provided further, That this act shall continue in force for fifteen years from and after the date hereof and no longer."
Amend the title by striking out the words "absolutely prohibit," and insert the word "suspend."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1185) to establish a court of appeals for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRIS. Before the question is put upon that motion, I will state that there is a special order for to-day.

Mr. GEORGE. I want to call attention to that.

Mr. HOAR. I will not interfere with the special order. The bill to which I have referred may come up as the unfinished business.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the special order come up as the unfinished business, and after that is disposed of the Senator can have his opportunity.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

Mr. GEORGE. I call for the special order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The special order will be reported by title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A resolution submitted by Mr. GEORGE relative to the appointment of a committee to inquire into the cause of the low price of cotton and the depressed condition of agriculture in the States raising cotton.

Mr. PLATT. What has become of Senate joint resolution 9, in relation to the West Virginia direct tax, which stands first on the Calendar?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That comes up to-morrow, April 19, at 2 o'clock.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I was going to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts, now that I have got my resolution before the Senate, that it remain the unfinished business, and I shall have no objection to its being informally laid aside and let the Senator from Massachusetts take the floor.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose the court of appeals bill will hardly pass to-night. It is an important bill. I presume the Senator's resolution will pass without debate.

Mr. GEORGE. No; there will be some debate upon it. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi withdraw the motion to adjourn for the present?

Mr. GEORGE. I withdraw it.

Mr. PADDOCK. I think if the Senator from Mississippi would accept a slight modification of his resolution it would remove the objection which was raised the other day by some Senators on account of the scope and apprehended large expense of it. If the resolution can be confined to an investigation during the session of Congress, leaving the matter to be determined afterwards whether authority shall be given to investigate during the recess—

Mr. GEORGE. I can not exactly catch the drift of what the Senator from Nebraska is saying.

Mr. PADDOCK. I was saying that I thought it would remove the objection which was raised the other day if the Senator would accept an amendment or modification of the resolution.

Mr. GEORGE. The one the Senator suggested?

Mr. PADDOCK. The one I suggested.

Mr. GEORGE. I will state that I can not accept that. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. PADDOCK. All right. I made the suggestion only for the purpose of getting immediate action.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me one moment?

Mr. GEORGE. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. HOAR. I simply desire to give notice that as soon as the special orders are disposed of I shall ask to take up the court of appeals bill for the District of Columbia.

It may be proper to say that while there has been a great deal of difference of opinion in regard to one matter connected with this measure, to wit, the limitation and extent of appeals to the Supreme Court of the United States, I am informed that all the conflicting opinions which have been heard of by the Senate or by the committee are reconciled by this measure as it stands. So I think there will not be a long debate on that subject.

MILITARY POST NEAR LITTLE ROCK, ARK.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 113) to establish a military post near Little Rock, Ark.

Mr. WALTHALL. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I am aware that the Senator from Mississippi is familiar with this subject, and I have no doubt his motion is right, but as the bill came from the Military Committee, I should like to hear what is the section stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be reported. The Secretary read the section proposed to be stricken out by the House of Representatives, as follows:

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of defraying the expenses of locating said army post as aforesaid, and of constructing barracks, quarters, kitchens, mess halls, stables, storehouses, magazines, and other necessary and suitable buildings, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as is necessary, the same to be drawn from the Treasury and applied to said purposes under the direction of the Secretary of War: Provided, That no part of said sum hereby appropriated shall be expended until the aforesaid tract of land shall have been conveyed to and accepted by the United States.

Mr. HAWLEY. That leaves the bill without any appropriation.

Mr. WALTHALL. It strikes out the appropriation.

Mr. HAWLEY. Is the Senator content to have it in that shape?

Mr. WALTHALL. The friends of the measure are willing to have it in that form.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not see how the bill is very effective without an appropriation. I do not see what good effect the bill will have without it. It can have no immediate effect.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The proposition in the bill is to exchange certain grounds held by the United States Government in the city of Little Rock, Ark., for a larger body of ground outside the city, to be used as a military post. Of course the exchange of title will have to be first perfected before anything else can be done. The objection was made in the other House to the consideration of the bill that it carried an appropriation. The gentleman in the other House in charge of the bill had to agree to allow the appropriation to be stricken out. I am sure that there will be no difficulty in having an appropriation yet before this Congress expires to carry out the purpose of the bill, after the titles have been perfected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi moves that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. GEORGE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 19, 1892, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATION.

Executive nomination received by the Senate April 18, 1892.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 18, 1892.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

FRENCH SPOILIATION CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the French spoliation claims arising out of the seizure of the vessel "Ship Speculator," which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY ACCOUNTING OFFICERS OF THE TREASURY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with section 2 of the act of July 7, 1884, schedules of claims allowed by the several accounting officers of the Treasury Department; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and, with accompanying papers, ordered to be printed.

M. R. KIRKPATRICK.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of M. R. Kirkpatrick vs. The United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows: To Mr. WOLVERTON, for four days, on account of important business.

To Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina, for four days, on account of important business.

SWAMP-LAND GRANTS.

The SPEAKER. On a previous occasion the Committee on Public Lands was passed in the call of committees for motions to suspend the rules. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE].

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5602) to adjust the swamp-land grants, to fix a limitation for the filing of claims thereunder, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc. That it shall be the duty of the proper officers of the Treasury and Interior Departments, as soon as practicable, to adjust and settle the claims of any State against the United States for all lands which have been or may hereafter be sold, or otherwise disposed of by the United States that were included in any grant of swamp and overflowed lands to such State.

SEC. 2. That for all of said lands in any State which were sold for cash the said State shall have credit for the full amount of the purchase money received by the United States and the same shall be paid over to the governor or treasurer of said State; and for all of said lands in any State located with warrants or scrip or which were otherwise disposed of by the United States, and for which indemnity has not heretofore been granted, such State shall have indemnity in cash, the amount thereof to be limited to the price at which the lands were held at the date of their disposal by the United States, the said indemnity to be paid as herein provided in the cases where lands were sold for cash.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior shall, when adjustments and allowances, if any, are made by him under this act, report the same to the Secretary of the Treasury, showing the amount ascertained to be due from the United States to such State on account of lands sold or otherwise disposed of, and a description of the lands for which such indemnity is allowed, with the names of the persons to whom sold, patented, or granted, and the date the same was sold or otherwise disposed of; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause such State to be credited with the amount or amounts so allowed and reported by the Secretary of the Interior, as of the last day of the year in which it was received or the lands otherwise disposed of, as the case may be, and apply the same on the payment of any debt of the State to the United States, if any, and pay the balance, if any, over to the governor or treasurer of the State.

SEC. 4. That the acceptance by any State or its legal representative of indemnity for any of the lands sold or otherwise disposed of by the United States shall be a relinquishment and waiver of all its right, title, and interest in and to such lands in place, and an acknowledgment and confirmation of the title thereto in the grantees of the United States.

SEC. 5. That all selections of lands heretofore made, and all swamp-land indemnity proofs now on file in the Department, taken in accordance with the rules of the Department at the date of the same, and which have not been finally rejected, shall be used in making adjustments under this act.

SEC. 6. That all claims for lands in place, for cash, lands, or other indemnity, under the swamp-land laws or under this act, shall be forever barred unless presented to the Secretary of the Interior within two years from the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] as tellers.

Mr. McRAE. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. KILGORE. I object.

The SPEAKER. The tellers will take their places.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 155, noes 15. So a second was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] to control the fifteen minutes' debate in favor of the proposition and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] to control the fifteen minutes against it.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to adjust what is known as the swamp-land grant of September 28, 1850, and to provide a limitation upon the States for the filing of claims under it. The grant covered the whole of the swamp and overflowed lands, made thereby unfit for cultivation, and unsold at the time. All legal subdivisions the greater part of which was wet and unfit for cultivation were by the act declared to be swamp lands, and the Secretary of the Interior was required to prepare lists of such land as soon as practicable. Such lists were never made, and claims are still being presented each year by the States. The Commissioner of the General Land Office in his last report says that unless some act is passed the present force of examiners in the field and the clerical force in his office now employed on swamp-land indemnity must be continued from year to year for an indefinite period of time. He suggests a limitation of three years; the bill fixes two.

The grant was a present grant and all such lands have ever since remained so granted. The grant is the law and the deed—and the courts, both State and Federal, have, without exception, held that the title passed to and vested in the States immediately on the 28th day of September, 1850. The words of the grant are direct and positive, and the difficulty of ascertaining the character of the land does not affect the question. Some of these lands have been disposed of by the Government since the grant to the States. The purchasers of course get no title, and unless they purchase from the State they must lose their land and take a refund of their purchase money without interest under section 2362 of the Revised Statutes.

Under this bill the purchase money received, if sold, or the minimum price if otherwise disposed of, will be credited and paid to the States and the titles confirmed to the grantees of the United States, and thus end all trouble and litigation. If the States are willing to settle upon this basis certainly the United States should not object.

This bill does not in any way enlarge the original grant and makes no change in the method of determining the character of the lands involved. These matters are all left just where the original grant placed them. It gives no indemnity for any land unless it has been erroneously disposed of, and leaves the Interior Department to say what sales, if any, are erroneous.

Mr. KILGORE. I understand the gentleman from Arkansas to say that the main purpose of this bill is to quiet the titles of people who have purchased lands from the Federal Government which it was understood had been granted by that Government to the State governments.

Mr. McRAE. Yes; that is the main purpose.

Mr. KILGORE. Is there not another purpose, namely, to pay to the States money that those lands were supposed to be worth?

Mr. McRAE. The bill would only pay to the States the purchase money that the United States received for the lands. The lands belonged to the States by reason of the grant, and the Federal Government erroneously sold them and received the money for them, and why should the States not have the purchase price? The bill seeks to credit the money to the States that were entitled to land only after the Government itself has decided that it has made erroneous sales of such lands.

Mr. KILGORE. But is there not a great deal of controversy as to whether these lands were swamp lands?

Mr. McRAE. There has been in the past, and there will be in the future, much trouble and litigation upon this and other points, unless this or a similar bill should pass. We do by this measure all that can be done to end this trouble by providing a limitation, and leave the Department with all the power it needs to determine the character of the law. It leaves the Department itself to say, according to its own methods and in its own time, whether errors have been committed.

Mr. OATES. If the gentleman will allow me a suggestion. The object is to pay over to the States the money which the Federal Government realized from the sale of lands that belonged to the States.

Mr. McRAE. That and nothing more.

Mr. KILGORE. How long have these sales been going on?

Mr. McRAE. The act was passed September 28, 1850. An indemnity act in many respects similar to this was passed March 3, 1851, and I presume that some erroneous sales have been made from time to time since then.

Mr. KILGORE. And when the amount is ascertained that would be due to the States under this adjudication which you propose, would not an appropriation be then required, or do you provide for the appropriation?

Mr. McRAE. The bill does not provide for an appropriation, because I will not assume, until the Department so decides, that any great number of erroneous sales have been made; but whatever such sales there may have been the bill provides that the Government shall correct as I have stated.

Whenever the allowances have been made, if ever, then, of course, Congress will be expected to appropriate for it, just as it appropriates now to refund the money to the settlers if in States not indebted to the United States. Under the existing law annual appropriations are made for the purpose of refunding to the settlers. The bill will save the Government by the limitation upon claims and by credits on debts due it much more than it will cost, and do an act of justice to many of its grantees, and besides settle with the States now in default.

Mr. KILGORE. You say you are unwilling to presume that there has been any considerable number of sales made in violation of the arrangement between the States and the Federal Government. If that is so, would it not be better to let the matter stand as it is, and not throw the whole business into confusion by the passage of a complicated measure like this?

Mr. McRAE. This bill does not make but on the contrary relieves against confusion and trouble. It does not complicate but simplifies matters. It is simply a question whether or not Congress will do justice by those to whom it has erroneously granted lands.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. McRAE. Yes, sir.

Mr. McMILLIN. How much money does your committee estimate will be required to meet the obligations of this act?

Mr. McRAE. Possibly it will not require an additional dollar over the amount that will be required under the present law. Now there is no limitation upon the filing of claims. The bill makes one of two years.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then what good is the act?

Mr. McRAE. It quiets the title of these settlers and authorizes credits to the States. In short, it—

Mr. McMILLIN. Which section of it is intended to quiet the titles?

Mr. McRAE. I do not remember the number of the section, and I have not a copy of the bill at hand, but there can be no question about this.

Mr. McMILLIN. I see that the fourth section looks in that direction, but the balance of the bill does not touch that question at all. So far as I can see on the face of the bill it is mainly a bill to pay money to the States for swamp lands alleged to have been granted by the Federal Government.

Mr. McRAE. It does not provide for the payment of money for swamp lands "alleged" to have been granted, but for actual swamp and overflowed lands granted, and the bill leaves the question as to whether the lands were swamp lands or not exactly where the original grant placed it. It does not seek to change that in any particular.

Mr. McMILLIN. You can not give any estimate as to what amount will be required to meet the obligations provided for in this bill.

Mr. McRAE. The amount and number of erroneous sales can never be known until all the claims are passed upon one by one. This the bill directs the Department to do.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman said he was not prepared to say that any would be required.

Mr. McRAE. I said that I was not prepared to say that the adjustment under this bill would cost more than under existing law and Department methods. Under the bill we will have an end of the matter, while under the laws now in force there is no end, and no final adjustment possible.

Mr. McMILLIN. But if there is not something to go out in consequence of this legislation then there has been no violation of the arrangement between the States and the Federal Government.

Mr. McRAE. The gentleman has certainly failed to understand that under the present law the States take the land in place and the settler gets the money he paid refunded to him. This bill reverses this, and gives the settler the land he bought and the States the money. I do not mean to be understood as saying that no money will be required to adjust these old grants, but I do believe that less actual money will be paid out in the end under this bill than under the present plan of adjustment. The most of the money accruing under this bill would be credited to States indebted to the United States. The Treasury officials will not adjust and pay our State because she is indebted to the United States, and they will not credit the sums when adjusted on the debt because the law does not authorize it, and Congress will not give authority. That is our condition, while the State is annually advertised as in default.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope my friend from Arkansas—

Mr. MCRAE. I can not yield to gentlemen any further. My time is too limited. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Eight minutes.

Mr. MCRAE. I reserve that time until gentlemen on the other side have exhausted their time.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I am willing to yield any portion of my time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] or the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN]. I am not familiar enough with this question to discuss it; I will leave that for others who know more about it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have but a single word to say. I have not had time even to read this bill. I understand the general subject very well. This is a bill which affects a large number of States, including my own; and it will involve a large sum of money—nobody can tell how much. All I have to say is that I think the House ought not to pass a bill of such importance upon a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. McMILLIN. Has the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] any estimate of what expenditure will be required to meet the provisions of the bill in his State alone?

Mr. HOLMAN. It will require a very large sum of money. As the gentleman from Texas has already said, where in any State there is not land to be given in exchange for swamp land disposed of, then the money is to be paid; and it concerns my State to the extent of several hundred thousand dollars, in my judgment.

Mr. McMILLIN. Your State alone?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes. I do not think such a bill ought to pass under a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. STOCKDALE. As the gentleman from Indiana states that he is familiar with this general subject I would like to ask him a question. As I understand, this measure affects cases where lands have been granted by the Government to the States as swamp land under the act of 1850—

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. STOCKDALE. And where afterward the Government sold these lands to settlers?

Mr. HOLMAN. They have been disposed of in various ways.

Mr. STOCKDALE. As I was saying, the Government sold to settlers lands which had previously been granted to the States. Now, whenever those cases came into court, both the State and the Federal courts have held that the grant to the State is paramount; that the State can oust settlers and hold the land. Now, the purpose of this bill is that in such cases the State shall not sue the settler, but shall accept the money that the United States Government received for this land, land which without this act could be recovered from the settler. Thus the effect of the bill is to prevent litigation.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, up to this time no such suits have been brought; no State receiving a grant of land from the Federal Government has thought proper to make that the foundation of a claim against its citizens.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Suits have been brought by the grantees of the State against the grantees of the General Government over and over again.

Mr. HOLMAN. See how this bill will operate in a State like mine—the State of Indiana. A large grant of land was made to that State for the construction of the Wabash Canal; that grant embraced a large amount of swamp lands. Now, do you propose to pay Indiana, or the men who have obtained by assignment those claims?

Mr. MCRAE. No, sir; there is no provision for that in the bill; that provision, which was in some of the prior bills, has been stricken out of this one.

Mr. HOLMAN. It may have been; I have not had time to examine the bill carefully.

Mr. MCRAE. The gentleman should not misrepresent the bill. It provides for the redemption of no scrip and authorizes no payments except to the States.

Mr. HOLMAN. I know what the bill provided heretofore.

Mr. MCRAE. There is no such provision as you have discussed in the bill now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I do not know anything about this bill. [Laughter.] I have some information that came to me from the Interior Department during the sitting of the Fifth Congress; and that information (whether it was accurate or not I am not prepared to say) was that it would cost the Government of the United States $50,000,000 to settle this matter if this bill should go through.

Mr. MCRAE. Who made any such statement?

Mr. KILGORE. This is about the same bill which was pending in the Fiftieth Congress?

Mr. MCRAE. Who made any such statement? I challenge the truth of the statement, and demand that the gentleman state the authority on which he makes it.

Mr. KILGORE. Well, I am not bound to give my authority unless I want to. [Laughter.] But that is the information that came to me authoritatively from the Interior Department during the sitting of the Fiftieth Congress. Now, I understand this is the same bill, or about the same bill, that was then pending.

Mr. MCRAE. It is not the same bill; and I deny that any such statement was ever made by any officer of the Department in relation to this bill or one like it.

Mr. KILGORE. Was there not a bill similar to this pending in the Fiftieth Congress?

Mr. MCRAE. Not similar; it embraced the general features of this bill and much more. In this we have endeavored to eliminate everything to which there could be any reasonable objection.

Mr. KILGORE. There was just such a statement made to me at the Interior Department—not only in writing, but orally—in one of the offices of the Interior Department by a man who seemed to know what he was saying.

Mr. TERRY. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. KILGORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TERRY. I would like to ask the gentleman how it can cost the Government of the United States any more to credit the States with the $1.25 per acre, if that is the price at which the lands were sold, than it would cost to give that sum directly to the party who is evicted or whose title is declared worthless, as the Government is in duty bound to do?

Mr. MCRAE. And as the Government does do every month in the year.

Mr. TERRY. Every settler who loses his land by reason of an invalid title from the United States has a right to go to the Government and have the purchase money refunded. I ask, then, how can it cost the Government one cent more to pay to the settlers in the swamp-land States what is due for their failure of title than it will cost to credit that amount to the States and have it settled in that way?

Mr. KILGORE. Well, I am not prepared to give an answer to the gentleman's question. I do not understand, as I stated before, exactly what the bill proposes. In fact, I do not know anything about it.

But I yield now to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BERGEN].

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the gentleman yields I want to say a word.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILGORE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. BERGEN. Mr. Speaker, I want to answer the question which has just been propounded by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] when the gentleman from Texas was occupying the floor. Of course if will cost the United States Government no more to pay directly to the settlers on these lands than it would to pay the same amount to the States. But the question is will the Government have to pay either the settlers upon these lands or the States?

A MEMBER. Of course, if their title is no good.

Mr. BERGEN. The whole question involved here is this, that the Government of the United States disputes the right of the States to make title to these lands. This bill proposes to settle that question by handing over the money which the Government of the United States has received for the lands to the States; thus conceding the claim that the State has the title and that the Government of the United States has been a trespasser.

Mr. MCRAE. Will the gentleman permit me—

Mr. BERGEN. Oh, I understand what the gentleman claims that this bill does.

Mr. MCRAE. Then, if you understand it you are not stating it correctly. It leaves the adjustment altogether with the Department, just as it is now. It hands no money over until the Interior Department admits an erroneous sale.

Mr. BERGEN. And this question is now brought into this House for settlement. The gentleman claims that it leaves the adjustment with the Department, but the ulterior question that is involved is, to whom do these swamp lands belong under the acts of 1850 and 1857? Do they belong to the State in which they are located, or to the Government of the United States?

Does the patent of the United States carry title or does the warrant from the individual State? That is the question that is involved.

Mr. OATES. That question is easily settled.

Mr. TERRY. The Supreme Court of the United States has already settled it.

Mr. BERGEN. It may be easily settled, but it is not to be solved in the manner provided here. The fact is that many of these lands are not swamp lands at all.

Mr. MCRAE. Then they did not pass under the swamp land act, and no indemnity for it could be allowed under this bill.

Mr. BERGEN. They are dry lands, but have been claimed by the States as swamp lands; and the right to make title to them as swamp lands is claimed on the part of the individual States, and so also the right to the moneys that have arisen from their sale. The United States disputes this and says that the States have no business to make title; and no right to receive the proceeds arising from the sales. Such is the situation to-day—such is the situation of this bill. Such was what was undertaken to be settled in the Fiftieth Congress and was defeated in the Fifty-first Congress, and is now undertaken to be foisted on this House under suspension of the rules.

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman from New Jersey certainly does not wish to mislead the House. Does he not know—

Mr. BERGEN. It is proposed now to pass this bill through this House without full investigation or understanding of the subject and in opposition to the expressed opinion of Congress heretofore.

Mr. PICKLER. Does the gentleman undertake to say that this bill was defeated in the Fifty-first Congress?

Mr. BERGEN. And, Mr. Speaker, I was told by a late Commissioner of the General Land Office that the bill would carry $80,000,000.

Mr. MCRAE. What Commissioner?

Mr. BERGEN. Well, you ought to know him better than I—under Mr. VILAS.

Mr. MCRAE. But what Commissioner made any such statement?

Mr. BERGEN. I said a late Commissioner. I have no doubt he was a good Democrat. The Commissioner of the Land Office under Secretary VILAS.

Mr. MCRAE. You say he told you that it would cost $80,000,000. The gentleman from Texas says he told him it would cost $50,000,000. Why he could have said it would cost $100,000,000 just as easily. There is no truth in either statement.

Mr. BERGEN. He said it was exceedingly difficult for anybody to estimate exactly what such a bill would carry. He said it was a vicious bill, a dangerous bill for any Congress to pass; that it carried more than anybody could understand, because it undertook, under the provisions of the bill, to claim not only what the Government admitted was swamp land, but also what was reported to be such by the surveyors working either in the interest of the State or of individuals, and the surveyor was often an unreliable person or thought to be so by the Department. I think the bill is a bad bill.

Mr. KILGORE. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, in that one minute I wish simply to say that the swamp-land laws are now being executed under the act of 1857. Nobody takes any exception to the operation of that law. It operates fairly and justly to all the States, and I hope that that law will not be interfered with by legislation at this late day.

Mr. KILGORE. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN].

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I would be glad if I could see the effect of this bill sufficiently to give it my support, because my strong inclination is to go with the report of the committee generally upon these questions; but up to this time, in a matter involving so much of the public lands in the then public-land States of the Union in 1850, we have not got one single expression from any man favoring this measure as to how much money it is going to cost, or what will be the expense to the Government, or what its operation will be.

Now, I do not know what would be the effect on cases of this kind. Maj. Albert Akers, one of the most vigilant and efficient officers of the Government, was sent by the last Administration into one of these States where swamp lands existed. He reported to the Interior Department that he found 400,000 acres of land in that State that had been set apart and treated as swamp lands on which there was not one acre of swamp.

Mr. MCRAE. Then those lands do not pass by this bill?

Mr. McMILLIN. That is what we ought to know with certainty.

Mr. MCRAE. We do know it with certainty, and there is nothing in the bill that would justify the statement that such lands would pass.

Mr. McMILLIN. Now, I stand ready to assist every settler and every State to the obtaining of legal and equitable rights under the law; but further than that, in giving the public lands of this Union, I am not inclined to go. If we can have this bill considered so as to show that it does that, and does no more than that, then with all my heart I shall support it; but until then it seems to me that the interests of the Government are great enough to at least call for careful consideration of the matter, and that there should be more than fifteen minutes discussion on a side, when there is not even time to read the report. The bill may be right. The gentleman having it in charge, and the committing reporting it, certainly think so. But dealing as it does with our public lands, and possibly involving large appropriations first or last, I think it should, when disposed of, receive careful consideration, and be subject to amendment, if amendment should be found necessary.

Mr. MCRAE. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES].

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New Jersey especially, and some others, seem to misconceive the purpose of this bill and the case upon which it is made. The granting of swamp or overflowed lands by the United States to the different States of the Union in which the United States owned public lands carried the title to those lands into the States. Subsequently to their selection—and whether that was erroneous or not is not the question now—

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. It ought to be the question. That question should be considered and fixed by the bill.

Mr. OATES. There have been some errors in the selection of those lands. It is a fact that some lands which were swamp or overflowed at the time of the selection are now dry lands.

Mr. STOCKDALE. But the title has passed.

Mr. OATES. But the title passed by the grant, and when the Government participated in the location through its surveyors, the title of the State was perfect. Subsequently the United States sold or disposed of parts of these lands for homestead purposes, and by cash entry, at a dollar and a quarter an acre; and these lands are now occupied by settlers, in the main, and the question of title is thereby raised. Where is the title? These homestead purchasers have paid their money to the Government, but the Government has no title to grant them. Now, this bill proposes an adjustment with the States in which the title is, by paying back to the States the money which the Government realized for the sale of the land, whether it was homestead or whether it was cash entry. The bill simply provides for the return to the State of the money received by the Government for the lands sold. The Government had no right to sell lands to which it had no title.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. OATES. My time is very short, but I will yield.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Does the bill provide for a return by the States to the Government of the value of the lands improperly taken as swamp lands?

Mr. OATES. The State has nothing to do with that, as I stated in the beginning.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Then it is a one-sided affair?

Mr. OATES. The gentleman assumes that the selections were made wholly by the State, when they were made by the State and the United States combined.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I am aware of that, and it was done fraudulently to a very large extent.

Mr. OATES. Then the United States ought not to take advantage of its own fraud.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. But the State participated. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MCRAE. I yield two minutes to my colleague [Mr. TERRY].

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, this bill does not add one cent of liability to what the Government is already liable for. If the Government of the United States has undertaken to convey to any citizen a title that it did not possess, then the Government of the United States is bound in justice to refund that amount of money to the settler whose title has failed. Now, instead of refunding that money to the settler this bill says that it shall refund that money to the State, and that the settler's title shall be quieted.

Under the law as it now stands the State or the State's vendee can evict the Government's vendee. The difference between the title conveyed by the United States and the State is simply this: Until the emanation of the patent of the Government of the United States the State's title is no more than a title under a bond for title. When a patent has emanated it is then a title as under a deed; but the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that the title took effect in equity the moment the grant was passed and the selection made.

Mr. DICKERSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TERRY. I have not time to yield for a question. Mr. Speaker, gentlemen are opposing this bill on the ground that they have not had time to consider it. Beyond that there is nothing in their position. If they can not vote for a bill they do not understand, they can not vote for one in a hundred of the bills reported to this Congress. They have to trust something to the committees, and why not do so in this instance?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McRAE. I yield one minute more to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES].

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the case, some of these gentlemen may not understand the process under which the selections of swamp or overflowed lands were made.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, this is an important bill, and I hope we will have order.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen will please cease conversation.

Mr. OATES. The principle upon which this land was selected was this: If the major portion of a subdivision was swamp or overflowed, although the minor part of it was dry land, it was selected as swamp land; and in that way gentlemen will see into what an error they fall when they say that a large amount of these lands selected were not overflowed. It is a fact that large quantities of dry lands were called overflowed lands because they were parts of subdivisions which the Government surveyors found to be swamp lands. Under the rule they were necessarily set aside as swamp lands. The United States surveyors made the surveys, the States made those selections, and reported them to the Interior Department. In that way they were set aside as overflowed lands.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LIND. Will the gentleman from Alabama yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas has two minutes remaining.

Mr. LIND. May I ask the gentleman from Alabama a question?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired and he can not answer a question.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that we have not more time to consider this bill than we have. I am perfectly willing to have it examined and discussed fully. It will stand the strictest scrutiny. It has been favorably reported from the Committee on Public Lands. It was so reported in the Forty-ninth, Fiftieth, and Fifty-first Congresses. It has always received the approval of this House whenever it has been brought before it for its consideration. It is a just measure, if there ever was one presented to this House.

If the Congress of the United States does not mean to repudiate its contracts made with its settlers and the States, and to rob the one of their homes and the other of just credits due under every rule of honesty, then it ought to pass this bill at once. There were only 17 votes against it in the Committee of the Whole in the last Congress. The objections urged here to-day are unfair and unworthy of those who make them. They might have applied as against making the grant, but not against the adjustment of it. So far as my State is concerned, I regret that the grant was ever made. It has cost much more than the State can ever realize from it, but that is no reason why we should not provide for an honest, fair, and speedy settlement of it.

Mr. BERGEN. Did it pass the last House?

Mr. McRAE. It did not. It was there considered in the Committee of the Whole; considered during the morning hour, and talked to death.

Mr. BERGEN. Yes.

Mr. McRAE. A vote was had upon it in the committee by tellers in the Fiftieth Congress, and only 17 voted against it; but we were not able to get a vote in the House within the hour and so it went over.

Mr. BERGEN. Yes.

Mr. McRAE. This, Mr. Speaker, is a very serious matter to many settlers as well as to several States; it is to determine whether the homes they have acquired from this great Government shall be lost to them by bad faith on the part of Congress. Can this or any American Congress refuse a measure so fair and so honest? Gentlemen say that no settlers have been evicted. The records of the courts and the petitions of the purchasers contradict them. There is not a public-land State in this Union where there are not scores of such cases. Others will arise just as errors are made as they will so arise unless there is a limitation.

To prejudice members against this bill it is said that it will cost a large sum of money, stated all the way from one to eighty million dollars. I do not believe it; but if it is true what does it imply on the part of the Government and the Interior Department charged with the adjustment of the original grant? It means, Mr. Speaker, that they have made erroneous sales aggregating those sums, and that the Government has that large sum of money that it is not entitled to and will not return it. That is what you in effect say when you make such reckless statements, because no provision is made for the payment for any land except swamp lands that have been erroneously sold as dry lands. It implies incompetency if not dishonesty to the officers of the Government. The question is whether we will make the titles of the purchasers good or not.

Mr. BERGEN. Is any title being defeated by not passing this bill?

Mr. McRAE. There have been thousands of titles defeated, and many more will be if matters go on as they are now.

Mr. TERRY. There have been many titles defeated in Arkansas.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I ask unanimous consent that the discussion on this bill be continued for thirty minutes. It is a very important bill, involving a large amount of money.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. BERGEN. I object. [Cries of "Don't!"].

Mr. McRAE. No objection is made on this side.

The SPEAKER (the question having been put). The Chair is in doubt, as this requires a two-thirds vote.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 68, noes 50.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Speaker appointed Mr. McRAE and Mr. KILGORE.

Pending the division by tellers.

Mr. KILGORE said: Mr. Speaker, would it be in order at this point to ask for the yeas and nays on this question?

The SPEAKER. It would.

Mr. KILGORE. Well, sir, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered—38 members voting in favor thereof.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 111, nays 77, not voting 139; as follows:

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I voted to make a quorum, but if there is a quorum without my vote I desire to withdraw it, being paired.

The SPEAKER. There is a quorum.

Mr. STOUT. Mr. Speaker, I should like to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall of the House and listening for his name when the roll was called?

Mr. STOUT. Yes, sir.

Mr. STOUT's vote was recorded.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have my vote recorded. I was in the Hall when my name was called, but my attention was diverted at the time.

Mr. O'FERRALL's vote was recorded.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, Judge ABBOTT, be excused on account of sickness. There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The following-named members were announced as paired until further notice:

Mr. SPRINGER with Mr. REED.
 Mr. PENDLETON with Mr. SMITH of Illinois.
 Mr. HAYNES of Ohio with Mr. SCULL.
 Mr. BRYAN with Mr. O'DONNELL.
 Mr. BROWN with Mr. RUSSELL.
 Mr. BANKHEAD with Mr. MILLIKEN.

 Mr. PRICE with Mr. BELDEN.
 Mr. CRAIN of Texas with Mr. BELKNAP.
 Mr. CADMUS with Mr. POST.
 Mr. DUNPHY with Mr. KETCHAM, until Monday next.
 The following for one week:
 Mr. WOLVERTON with Mr. REYBURN.
 Mr. HOAR with Mr. BROSIUS.
 Mr. JONES with Mr. HERMANN, for one week, commencing April 11.

Mr. NORTON with Mr. POWERS, for two weeks, from the 12th instant.

Mr. SNODGRASS with Mr. HOUK of Tennessee, from April 6 to April 21 inclusive.

Mr. WILLIAMS with Mr. ENOCHS, on all political questions except the election contest case from New York.

Mr. WAUGH. Mr. Speaker, I believe that my pair is limited to political questions, but in order that there may be no mistake I withdraw my vote.

The SPEAKER. Upon this question the yeas are 112 and the nays are 77. Two-thirds not having voted in favor of the bill it falls to pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. SHIVELY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7093) making appropriation for the Navy.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I yield forty minutes of the time under my control to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ELLIOTT].

[Mr. ELLIOTT withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, I have sat here in this House since the beginning of the session and have listened, but until we took up this naval appropriation bill have listened in vain for a voice bold enough to be raised in opposition to the war policy which at the present time so conspicuously pervades every department of this Government.

I must confess that it affords me infinite gratification to learn that I am not the only member upon this floor who holds to the conviction that civilized man the world over has outlived the period in his history when war can be said or held to be either necessary or useful. But if I were alone, and even if I were to be vigorously condemned in advance, I should not hesitate in the least in entering my most earnest protest against the prevailing delusion that the honor of the Government and the dignity of our people can be maintained only by building ponderous war vessels equipped with cannon 40 feet long, capable of throwing enormous masses of metal from 10 to 15 miles.

In protesting against this policy and voting against the proposition of the Naval Committee to enlarge our naval establishment by building an additional cruiser to cost nearly $4,000,000 I am not actuated by the slightest trace of any treasonable motive or the least unfriendliness towards American institutions. On the contrary, I shall vote against this increase of our naval strength because of my intense conviction that liberty in this country can best be maintained and our institutions can best be perpetuated by abandoning the perilous war preparations urged by the committee and inspired by the Administration, and inaugurating a national policy more in harmony with the spirit of the age.

When you have built this modern navy of which we hear so much at an expenditure of three or four hundred million dollars what do you intend to do with it? Upon what nation do you intend to make war? Whose commerce will you sweep from the ocean? Where are the cities you are going to demolish? We certainly shall not need a navy wherewith to subjugate our own people. And is it not true that a firm determination to treat all others with absolute justice and fairness is the most efficient protection a nation can call to its aid?

To prepare for war is in many instances to invite it. When he has gone through a course of training, when he has hardened his muscles, the pugilist is naturally anxious to enter the ring. It has been stated during this debate that our Navy saved us from a war with Chile; the historic truth of that affair is that if it had not been for the indiscreet conduct of a part of our Navy, the occasion for a controversy would not even have arisen, much less any cause for war.

I am not antagonizing this measure because, being a Democrat, I might be expected to be willing to help discredit the policy of a Republican Administration. I well know a Democratic committee has brought this bill into the House, and I well remember that a Democratic Administration, which I did my utmost to help place in power, inaugurated the utterly inexcusable policy of building this modern navy.

I protest against the policy outlined in this appropriation bill in the name of our common humanity, in the name of that superior type of civilization which the closing years of the nineteenth century are so happily developing—a civilization depending for its success not upon the cruel methods of the barbarian, not upon the explosive quality of gunpowder and dynamite, not upon the conflagration of cities nor the annihilation or mutilation of multitudes of excited men, but upon the common sense of the citizen, upon a constantly growing sense of right and wrong, upon the rapidly developing intelligence of the people—a civilization that eloquently appeals to the nobler traits of our nature, to our moral and intellectual qualities.

Mr. Chairman, I believe a time comes in the history of every nation when immortal renown can be garnered by boldly departing from antiquated methods and untenable ideas. Such a time has now come to the people of these United States. Instead of continuing the clumsy, cruel, and expensive agencies which an obedience to the merciless law which requires "an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth" makes necessary we should yield to the new, the better inspiration of doing "unto others as we would have them do unto us." Instead of preparing for war, of which there is not the slightest prospect anywhere, we should with one accord become the fervent advocates of universal peace and persistently urge upon other nations a general and a permanent disarmament. And, Mr. Chairman, is it not true that, in spite of all that is done to the contrary, modern thought is adjusting itself to this channel?

You may see here in this House and appropriate all the public money you can get your hands upon, build all the great battle ships possible, and justify your action with "burning eloquence and faultless rhetoric;" other powers throughout the world may do the same, but let me tell you, my Democratic brethren, while this is being done, while you are passing these bills, the opinion, the judgment of the world is crystallizing, steadily but irresistibly, against the policy you are pursuing, crystallizing against the delusion that the progressive, marvelous civilization we are so rapidly developing can be successfully defended only with the sword and the torch.

Mr. Chairman, I am utterly unable to agree with the gentlemen who have made such eloquent pleas for the enlargement of our Navy. It seems to me these gentlemen fail to take into account the supremely important fact that the world is rapidly growing out of the conditions which in the past made war justifiable, or if not justifiable, at least in some measure excusable. The "extenuating circumstances" (as lawyers term it) which may be cited to uphold war as it has been practiced in the past, have lost their force and standing, and can not justly be used in our day as pretexts and excuses for the purpose of perpetuating a condition of things altogether out of harmony with the progressive spirit of the age.

Something over a century ago our forefathers made the bold declaration that all men were created equal and that government by the people was the natural right of communities. This declaration startled the world, and it was both sneered at and resisted. But have we not demonstrated its truth with overwhelming success? The people of this country are to-day better prepared to make another bold move than our ancestors were for the task which they undertook.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the times are ready for the aggressive display of moral heroism. I believe mankind has reached that point in the unfolding of a superior civilization when the people of this country should step boldly to the front, courageously and aggressively champion the principles and the doctrines of universal peace, and urge with zeal and devotion the substitution of the peaceable, humane mode of arbitration for the confessedly barbarous methods of war. If we fail to lay hold of this opportunity to signalize our devotion to a system of moral ethics fundamentally correct and thus willfully reject the reward which is so temptingly offered, our folly will be inexplicable to our children and a source of regret to all our posterity. Whatever else may or may not happen one thing is inevitable, fate has decreed it, namely, our civilization is developing conditions which, in the near future will, nay must, emancipate civilized man everywhere from the unnatural, the unjust, the damnable servitude of the militant type.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the civilized nations of the earth are now standing upon the very border of a mighty change; I believe we are standing at the very door leading to a new era, and, though this door may as yet appear to be closed, I believe all that is necessary is that it be boldly pushed open, and there will be revealed to us a new land of promise, a new and a better time, when the nations of the earth will be bold enough and wise enough to repudiate antiquated methods and cut loose from the barbarisms and the superstitions to which we have so long and so tenaciously clung. A time when war, with its long list of wretched evils, will be heard of no more; a time when an appeal to our enlightened reason instead of to the sword, an appeal to the calm judgment of men instead of to their inflamed passions, an appeal to hard, common sense instead of to false pride, will have the force that will suffice to settle national questions as well as international misunderstandings and controversies.

Mr. Chairman, a thousand influences, seen and unseen, known and unknown, are at work getting ready the material out of which will finally be constructed the emancipation proclamation that will release a long-suffering world from the crushing weight of militarism. In the short time allotted me I am precluded from going into details. I will call the attention of the House to but two of these influences. It is true they are antagonistic in their character or nature and are working from opposite directions, but are, nevertheless, working in entire harmony to accomplish the one happy result, namely, to eliminate war from our civilization.

The one influence or force is to be found in the intense conviction which is forcing itself onto the minds of all thinking men and women the world over, that war is altogether too barbarous a method to be any longer employed by any Christian nation in the settlement of any sort of controversy—the conviction that we have reached that period in the development of a higher and a nobler type of civilized life when war can be no longer recognized as one of the determining factors of this superior civilization.

The other force or influence lies in the vast amount of knowledge we possess, and to which we are constantly adding, our knowledge of chemistry and mechanics, enabling us to compound explosives and to construct weapons, the killing power of which is so terrible as not only to intimidate the raw recruit but to send consternation to the heart of the bravest and the best disciplined army that can be mobilized and brought upon the gory field.

You, my Democratic friends, who intend to vote for this appropriation ought to remember that the principal armies of the world are now equipped with a weapon the destructiveness of which is so nearly perfect that it will be possible only in case of another encounter for a small fraction of the contestants to escape annihilation. One more war, possibly only one more battle, and the destruction of human life will be so disgustingly bloody and murderous that mankind will be driven to a sober contemplation of the awful spectacle—will be driven to the conclusion that the last vestige of the militant type that exists among us must be forever and entirely suppressed. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, when we have once reached that point, which I am persuaded is not in the very distant future, then there will develop among us a purely untrammelled, industrial type. Men and women will grow up into better and purer beings, being controlled more by a sense of justice and less by the demands of a selfish nature, and the nations of the earth will conform their conduct to a higher and a nobler standard.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the people of this country have it in their power so to shape their conduct in their intercourse with foreign nations. I believe the Democratic party, being the exponent of public opinion, has it in its power to enact such legislation in this free Republic so as to hasten the advent of that blessed period of an eternal, unbroken peace of which prophets have so confidently prophesied, of which philosophers have so fondly speculated, and of which poets have so sweetly sung. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I have prepared a resolution, which I will present to the House, and ask unanimous consent for its consideration, sometime in the near future, perhaps offer it in the shape of an amendment to the appropriation bill for the World's Fair, and I will conclude my remarks by reading it and calling the attention of the House and the country to the object aimed at.

Whereas war has always been recognized as the most calamitous evil with which a nation can be stricken; and

Whereas the trend of modern thought and the marvelous spread of intelligence among the masses of the people have combined to develop conditions in our civilization which render war less frequent than formerly and gives encouragement to the thought that by taking advantage of these conditions war may, in the future, be altogether averted and civilized man the world over released from the crushing weight imposed by enormous military and naval establishments; therefore

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), 1. That it is the duty of the people of the United States in the fulfillment of their true mission to assume the leadership among the nations of the earth in the endeavor to bring about such mutual international compacts as will settle international controversies through the humane and peaceful mode of arbitration.

2. To give speed and efficacy to this movement the President of the United States is authorized and directed to invite in an especial manner, the nations of the earth to send delegates to an international arbitration congress to be held during the summer of 1893, in the city of Chicago.

3. The President is further authorized and directed to cause it to be known by the nations thus invited that this Congress will be considered and treated by the Government and people of the United States as of paramount importance. It is to be accorded first rank among all the congresses which are to be held during the Columbian Exposition year, the question of which it is to treat and for which it is expected to find a practical solution, affecting more vitally than any other the enduring character and glory of our future civilization.

4. The sum of — is hereby appropriated to pay the expenses connected with and growing out of this congress, and to provide for the hospitable entertainment of the foreign delegates who may attend by authority of their respective governments.

And now, my Democratic brethren, in conclusion, let me appeal to you to forsake the policy that binds us to a dark and gloomy past, to a barbarous and a bloody history, and embrace a newer, a better gospel, a nobler inspiration that will link us to a brighter, a happier, a more glorious future. [Applause.]

[Mr. MARTIN withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the residue of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOUK]. I have only three minutes remaining; and inasmuch as the gentleman has not addressed the House during the present Congress, I ask unanimous consent that he be allowed fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOUK] be permitted to proceed for fifteen minutes. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOUK of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to enter into a very lengthy discussion of the questions involved in this bill. For the sake of brevity I shall present in succinct form in the short time allowed me the views I entertain, and trust that the committee will accord me its attention for the short time that I propose to occupy the floor. The question presented to the committee in this discussion involves three different propositions:

First. The increase of the naval establishment by the construction of one 8,000-ton armored cruiser at a cost of $3,500,000.

Second. An increase of the Navy by the construction of two sea-going line of battle ships at a cost of $4,000,000 each, and ten torpedo boats at a cost of $120,000 each.

Third. A proposition to strike out any proposition whatever for the increase of the Navy.

As I have not been in full accord with either of these propositions I did not feel entirely at liberty to solicit time from either of the gentlemen allowed by agreement to control the debate to express my views. I therefore now beg the indulgence of the House to state, through the courtesy of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], and with all practical brevity, the reasons that will control my vote.

I will say in the first place that the proposition that most comends itself to my judgment is one not yet before the committee; it is the construction of a sufficient number of torpedo boats, say from twelve to twenty, to answer the necessities of coast defense, a sufficient number to be placed upon the Great Lakes.

And I will say further in this connection, that I am in favor of the maintenance of an adequate and practicable naval power, in accordance with all existing conditions both here and abroad.

I freely concede to the very able and diligent Committee on Naval Affairs all that can be claimed for their superior knowledge of existing circumstances. I am aware, too, of the inauguration of a definite policy in 1883 for the rehabilitation of the United States Navy, and that the proposition of the committee is in the line of that policy.

But it is well known to Congress and the country that provision has already been made by law for the construction of twenty-five or more war ships and cruisers than we now have (not including torpedo boats), and which will cost when completed not less than $40,000,000.

The important question here arises whether under existing conditions here and abroad this is not a sufficient naval force to answer fully the necessities of the country.

It is not claimed that an increased naval power is necessary, except in the contingency of war, although great force is ascribed to it as a preventive influence. Of course in time of peace our coastwise foreign and lake commerce is exposed to no dangers except those of the elements. That flag which hangs behind the Speaker's chair is its complete protection everywhere on the face of the earth, from all intrusion and interference.

Any American bottom over which that flag floats, in any water throughout the world, is in construction of international law, a portion of the soil of this Republic; and is far more secure than it would be if protected by triple steel plates and any number of guns without it.

That flag is the recognized symbol of the power of the United States, with its population of 65,000,000, and its material resources amounting to $64,000,000,000 worth of property; and it is a known fact, recognized of all men, that if any American citizen over whom that flag lawfully floats, anywhere on the face of the broad earth, receives an injury in his rights of person or property, the entire power and resources of this Government are pledged to compel due atonement.

All mankind know this, and it needs no American line-of-battle ships or armored cruisers stationed anywhere to emphasize the fact.

The use of a navy is therefore only necessary in time of war; although it is claimed, and with much force, that its existence is also necessary not only to prevent war, but to insure its successful prosecution in case it shall occur; but to what extent is a navy necessary to answer this purpose? Armed, fast-sailing cruisers, such as are provided for in this adopted policy for the rehabilitation of the Navy, and such as are here contemplated, are not constructed to fight battles, but only to destroy an enemy's commerce. As such an agency their necessity and efficiency can not be successfully disputed. We learned this expensive lesson by the cruise of the Alabama, and at an almost inestimable cost by the nearly total destruction of the American commercial marine during the late war; but is not the American Navy not already supplied with a sufficient number of such cruisers, including those whose construction is already provided for, to respond to this need in the event of war?

Besides, gentlemen, it must be considered that in this advanced age wars, except such as arise from the resentment or ambition of dynasties or from monarchical and despotic governments seeking territorial aggrandizement or increased power, are not likely to occur; and in this connection I may call the attention of the House to the fact that the most notable illustration in modern history of this truth was furnished by the Geneva arbitration between the United States and Great Britain in 1873.

No more serious or well-grounded cause of war can perhaps ever exist between this and any foreign government, than that which existed when negotiations were opened with England that led to the Geneva arbitration. The universal heart of this great people burned with a sense of insult, wrong, and resentment. The hereditary enmity to England was fully aroused, and our people would unanimously have embraced with alacrity the grim alternative of a war with England. Our Navy as compared with hers at that time was as a mere pigmy in comparison with a giant. Yet what do gentlemen who attribute so mighty an influence to the existence of a powerful navy as a preventive of war suppose were the considerations that induced Great Britain to agree to that arbitration?

My answer is, first, that it was the mysterious but all-prevailing and all-powerful influence of the spirit of modern civilization, which regards war as a relic of barbarism and a crime against humanity, unless all other means of adjustment have failed.

Second. Because England well knew that however great might or should have been the advantages gained by her in the beginning of a war with the United States, the mighty resources of this people, wielded with an intelligence and pertinacity unsurpassed and a courage and fortitude absolutely inexhaustible, would in the end have triumphantly vindicated our cause.

Third. Because she well knew, as she always must know, that a war with the United States must necessarily result to her in incalculable damage, the loss of a large part of her territory, and possibly impair the stability of her national existence.

It is not, therefore, as it seems to me, in this age of the world-wide American statesmanship, and it is not just to the industrial classes of our people to burden them with a heavy and contingent expenditure, through many years of certain peace, simply to be ready for the contingency of an improbable war.

But the second proposition embraced in the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] only seems to me an aggravation of the evils to which I have adverted. This is simply to emulate the folly and false pride of foreign monarchical powers, by building up an American Navy to rival theirs in vain splendor and in magnitude.

The size of the navies of England, France, Russia, Italy, Austria, and Spain is cited to discredit ours; as though we were on dress parade before the world in a competitive show, and were being put to shame by the poverty of our display. Sir, although the navy of Italy is almost beyond comparison superior to ours, and embraces two of the most formidable battle ships afloat, with perhaps the exception of the Thunderer in the British navy, I scarcely think anyone even in the most threatening hour of the recent unpleasantness with that power apprehended that in case of war that Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Charleston, Savannah, or New Orleans would have been bombarded or laid under contribution, or that there would have been the slightest doubt of the final result of the conflict.

And here let me say, in regard to this matter of bombardment and contribution to which our coast cities are said to be exposed, in the first place, such danger can not be warded off by fast-sailing cruisers or line-of-battle ships, but only by torpedo boats, rams, and monitors. And in the second place, does not every sane man know that in the event of any such injuries inflicted on our seaboard or lake cities in the final settlement of the terms of peace, every dollar of such damage would be exacted to be repaid with a penalty by the offending power. Nobody supposes for a moment that this country would ever be content with anything different than full and ample reparation for the injury inflicted upon us under such circumstances by any power.

Mr. BROOKSHIRE. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him to suggest that 40 per cent of the lands of the British Empire are in Canada; and I should not think that they would be likely to jeopardize the ownership of that 40 per cent of their lands in order to have some fun bombarding us.

Mr. HOUK of Ohio. I thank the gentleman very much for the suggestion.

And now I wish to say a word in regard to the point made by the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] of reliance upon the resources, genius, and warlike energy of our people as a complete protection in the sudden emergency of war. The gentleman's personal recollection will bear testimony of the truth of what I am about to say. It is this: That the little fighting device called the Monitor, which entirely revolutionized naval architecture and naval warfare throughout the world, was constructed in an unequipped open yard on the shores of the East River at Brooklyn, and was made ready to proceed on her immortal but brief cruise within the limit of a few months.

That little floating engine of war, almost level with the waves, made all the grand wooden battle ships that constituted the strength of all the navies of the world in 1862 as obsolete as the triremes of Phœnicia and Greece or the galleys of Rome that won for Octavius the dominion of the world in the Gulf of Actium, or the stately vessels of the Turks and of Venice in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries.

Why, sir, whilst we have excelled all people that have preceded us in material, intellectual, and industrial development, we have shown in sudden emergency all the essential characteristics that constitute the most warlike people of the world.

We suffered an expensive experiment to demonstrate this fact; but it has been of inestimable value to our people; and not the least of its advantages has been that it has exempted us measurably, at least, from the necessity of taxing our people to maintain expensive and powerful military establishments.

The cruiser Alabama atoned for the gigantic injuries inflicted upon American commerce in her brief cruise, by furnishing at its close an object lesson to the onlooking nations of the world of American warlike energy and prowess on that fair midday of June, 1864, in her conflict with the Kearsarge and by heroically going to the bottom in the friendly waters of the English Channel. It was fitting that as an English shipyard had given her birth, in an English sea she should have found her grave.

That object lesson was not lost upon the British Government nor upon any of the naval powers of Europe. That one hour's terrific duel between those two celebrated American cruisers was a more effective and in its result a more lasting display of the warlike qualities of our people, than all the battle ships and cruisers we can ever put afloat in dress parade before the world.

And now I wish to say, that so radical has been the revolution in naval warfare and naval architecture that the real decisive battles of the future on the sea are not to be fought by brave and picturesque commanders and gallant tars, but are to be contested by grim machinery, worked, it is true, by brain and brawn, and are to be decided by dynamite and steel.

Take for illustration the two great decisive naval conflicts, the results of which were of controlling influence in the wars of which they were a part. The battle of Trafalgar, fought in the beginning of this century between the allied fleets of France and Spain on the one side and that of England on the other, and that between the Monitor and Merrimac at Hampton Roads sixty years afterward.

The first was fought between fleets of some three-score wooden men-of-war, grand battle ships, with guns ranged in broadsides firing solid shot, and manned by thousands of fighting sailors. England's greatest hero, Lord Nelson, stood upon his quarter-deck upon the Victory, and thence in full view of a thousand enemies and sharpshooters, from one of whom he received the bullet that changed in his death the disasters of the French navy, commanded the twenty-six ships of the English fleet in that memorable battle, the result of which drove French power from the ocean, but left to be pursued upon the land a career of continental conquest under Napoleon that shook the foundations of every capital in Europe, culminating in the terrific disaster of Moscow and the retreat from Russia, followed by the catastrophe at Waterloo but three years afterwards.

The other battle was fought between two unsightly ironclad monsters, of different model and construction, lying flat upon the bosom of the sea, operated by machinery incased in steel, no living foe on either craft in sight, the commander of the victor, the gallant Worden being cooped up in a steel-clad square cage of iron logs, on the foredeck, only large enough to give standing room for three men, and thence directed the cyclopean machinery that after successive hours of terrific pounding from but two immense guns, throwing 180-pound solid shot, drove her formidable foe discomfited from the field of battle; and yet it has been truly said that the then naval supremacy of England vanished in the smoke of that fight; and although less than twenty-four men constituted the crew that fought the Monitor in this memorable contest, but one of whom was wounded, besides the gallant Worden, so mighty was its results that the London Times, when the news reached England, the next day used the following language:

Whereas we had available for immediate purpose one hundred and forty-nine first-class war ships, we have now two, those two being the Warrior and her sister ironclad. There is not now a ship in the English navy apart from these two that it would not be madness to trust to an engagement with that little Monitor.

The war ships of all the maritime powers of the world, that had been constructed at a cost of hundreds of millions of dollars, were regarded as obsolete for war purposes, and, as I have said, a new and different method of construction has come into universal use.

Now I ask, in the face of such a lesson in an age that develops almost daily the most startling discoveries and utilization of hitherto unknown forces, whether in the midst of these inventive activities it is wise statesmanship to continue the expenditure of uncounted millions, raised from taxes on the people, to increase a naval power for which there will be no actual use for an indefinite time, and which may possibly be rendered obsolete by future discoveries.

And whilst I say this, I am still willing to make concessions to the prevailing custom of nations. I am not averse wholly to the rehabilitation of the Navy, but I do not want to see the process already accomplished go on indefinitely. It is a luxury alike expensive and unnecessary. Nor am I indifferent to the apprehension naturally enough felt by our fellow-citizens of an exposed seaboard.

I will gladly vote for as many torpedo boats or devices in that line as may be deemed necessary for the most complete seacoast defense, for in view of the changes in the method of naval attack and ship construction it is apparent that forts for sea force defense are not entirely sufficient.

These inexpensive structures, so easy to maintain and so immediately available for effective service, are a far better reliance in a time of threatened danger than line-of-battle ships. And now, but a word in conclusion.

We are at the opening of a new era, and soon to begin a new century. Organized force in armies and navies as a factor in modern progress, is being superseded by the subtler but far more powerful forces developed under the inspiration of human genius and intellect. The burdens imposed upon productive labor by following the examples of nations that have not yet emerged from the oppressive traditions of feudalism must be lifted from the shoulders of the people. It is for the American people to make, not to follow, examples in the march of human progress to better conditions.

We have no occasion to be afraid of war. Our strength is our security. Our resources, energy, and courage, our enterprise, intelligence, and over all an enlightened sense of justice and right, all combine to put the world under bonds to keep the peace towards the United States. Let us have peace.

During the delivery of the foregoing remarks, the time having expired.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee said: Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio be permitted to conclude his remarks.

Mr. HERBERT. I should like very much, if possible, to conclude the consideration of this bill to-day.

Mr. HOUK of Ohio. I shall not occupy much additional time.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I ask that the gentleman be allowed to conclude his remarks.

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. I also ask unanimous consent that the committee may keep still so that we may hear what the gentleman is saying.

The CHAIRMAN. The suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa is entirely pertinent, and the Chair will endeavor to preserve order upon the floor.

Mr. HOUK of Ohio then resumed and concluded his remarks as above.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as there has been considerable indulgence permitted on the part of the committee in this discussion, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. COVERT] may be permitted to address the committee for ten minutes, not to come out of my time.

Mr. HOLMAN. And I ask unanimous consent that the same privilege be extended to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BUTLER].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine and the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. COVERT. Mr. Chairman, I desire first to acknowledge the courtesy of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE], at whose request I am permitted to occupy the floor.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WATSON] in speaking upon this proposition has evoked an echo of the so-called Holman resolution introduced and passed at an early stage of the session, committing this House to the rejection of all appropriations whatever except such as might be needed for the support of the various governmental departments. I had hoped we might hear no more of this resolution or of the policy it sought to enforce.

I regarded this declaration at the time of its adoption as an empty statement, "full of sound and signifying nothing." There were some desks on the Democratic side of this Chamber to which the whiplash of the gentleman from Indiana could not reach, and my own was of this number. I for one did not vote for the resolution. There was no utility in the empty declaration it embodied: there was absolute wrong in a formal declaration in advance that negative action would be taken in legislative proceedings, no matter what emergency might present itself. Legislative bodies, like individuals, are judged not by empty prior declarations, but upon the work they perform.

I regarded the spirit of the resolution as a near and dangerous approach to a denial of the divine right of petition, a tyrannical procedure which has overthrown government abroad before the birth of our own Republic.

But this resolution and the declaration embodied in it, however strained they may be, are not of application here. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] seeks to provide only a fair and just appropriation for the support of a department, and a very important department, of the General Government.

It occurs to me that the committee have been too conservative in the preparation of this bill. The idea of undue economy has been permitted to prevail, rather than a due consideration of the necessities of the occasion. We have before us the official utterance of the Secretary of the Navy in this regard. In no uncertain terms he tells us that the amount carried by the proposed amendment can be utilized at the present time, and that the work sought to be accomplished by it is not only proper but necessary at this juncture. If there be one Department of the Government whose official head commands in large degree the confidence of the American people, that Department is the Department of the Navy.

I submit that due regard should be paid by the American Congress to utterances coming thus directly from one whose knowledge of the needs of the Navy entitles those utterances to the utmost consideration and respect. I ask this House not to be deceived by any wild idea of false economy in this regard. The people of this land have too deep a love for the Republic to be narrow in their views as to its proper support. National love and national pride combine in demanding that the Federal Legislature make adequate provision for the sufficient maintenance of every department of the General Government.

The people may be trusted to resent any attempt to make improper provision in this regard. A wide difference exists between extravagance on one hand and miserable penuriousness on the other. An invisible telegraphy goes out among the people, telling them what the needs of the Government are, and behind the suggestions of the Secretary, looking to the proper rehabilitation of the Navy and enforcing these suggestions, are the demands of the thoughtful and progressive people of this Republic.

In the last Congress, in addressing the House upon the question of the location of the forthcoming international exposition, I took occasion to say that the exposition would be incomplete without a naval parade in the harbor of New York; and that the navies of Italy and Spain, the lands of the discoverer's birth and adoption, should be invited to participate in the ceremonial. In that connection I gave to the House a detailed statement of the strength of the navies of Italy and Spain, relatively weak and inferior powers.

It is sufficient for my present purpose to say that Italy has today a fleet of eighty-six armored ships, (more than double the number in the American Navy), and in addition over one hundred other war vessels, and that Spain has a navy more than double the size of our own. National pride demands that this land of ours should strengthen and build up its maritime power, that it should rehabilitate its Navy, the protector of its commerce and the defender of its honor upon the high seas.

But not national pride alone makes this demand upon us as the representatives of the American people. The preservation of the safety of the Republic may be most seriously involved by a failure to make adequate provision for an efficient naval equipment.

But gentlemen tell us that this Congress is pledged to economy, seemingly forgetting that the truest economy consists in wise provision for averting disaster. We are told that our people are overburdened with taxation.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WATSON] has drawn a pathetic picture of the wants and necessities of the people in some sections of the South and West. These conditions, however they may have arisen, whether from overproduction or overprotec-tion, or from whatever other cause, are local only, and the matter is foreign to this discussion. I shall join most heartily and earnestly with the eloquent gentleman from Georgia in the advocacy of all measures which shall tend to cure these conditions and to prevent their recurrence. Want and pestilence are not the experiences in any large measure of the people of this land to-day, but the reverse of these conditions exists in almost every section of the Republic. Heaven's sunshine has streamed down upon our soil. Heaven's dews have moistened it. An abundant return has followed, and it is not the time to take despondent views of the conditions that surround us.

But the picture of distress as outlined by the gentleman from Georgia would be as nothing in comparison with the situation if our defenseless seacoasts were ravaged by the iron ships of some foreign and possibly inferior power. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOUK], who preceded me, seeks to convey the impression that because this country is strong and powerful in other respects there is no need for an increase of its naval force. The argument is suggestive of a giant throwing aside his arms and exposing himself recklessly to the lances of an army of inferior men.

The time to prepare for war is the time of profoundest peace. The surest preventive of warfare is a perfect condition to meet it in the event of the dark war cloud lowering. Utopia does not exist as yet in any part of the world. The millennial day has not yet dawned upon this or upon any other land. No man can tell when the passions or the ambitions of nations may evoke the spirit of warfare—nor when its dark cloud may arise over the horizon.

It is our duty now, in the time of profoundest peace, to prepare like patriotic and like prudent men to meet any possible emergency that may arise. It is our duty to complete the work of building up our Navy and to make it worthy of the American Republic. Let us take rank in this regard, to some extent at least, with the other potential nations of the world.

The question of party politics has no part in this discussion. Arthur and Secretary Chandler, Cleveland and Secretary Whitney, alike labored to strengthen and improve this arm of the Federal service. The present Secretary of the Navy may be relied upon to use the power of his high office wisely and well if the desired authority shall be given him by this Congress.

Let American designers provide for the fashioning of American war vessels, to be constructed by American mechanics. Let a part of the present American policy be the perfection of an adequate American Navy. Let the work go on, not to martial music, but to the music of the hammer ringing out in the dockyards of the American Government. Every stroke of every hammer, every blow upon every anvil, will be an added signal of perfect peace to the people of this land. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. What is the further pleasure of the committee?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I understood that the committee gave permission to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BUTLER] to occupy the floor.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not wish to occupy my time now. I will use it a little later.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I shall object to this unless the gentleman does occupy the time now. That was the understanding.

Mr. HOLMAN. The motion to strike out of course is the affirmative proposition, and we should not be compelled to now use all the time we have.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Well, but as I understand it, the gentleman from Indiana has had all his time. The Chair announced that he had occupied all his time.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, but the committee gave the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BUTLER] some time, and he does not wish to use it now.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Now, Mr. Chairman, the committee extended its courtesy to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COVERT] at my request. At the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] the committee extends the same favor and courtesy to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BUTLER], and I submit that he ought to occupy the time now, if at all.

Mr. HERBERT. I hope very much we will be able to get through with this bill to-day. There has been a great deal of debate already upon it. I do not desire to object to any gentleman being heard, but it does seem to me that we have had nearly enough debate upon it, more than twice as much against the bill as there has been in favor of it, and I have only reserved to myself thirty-seven or forty minutes in which to conclude the debate. I hope gentlemen will not ask any more time. I was out for a moment and did not hear what the request was.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] perhaps does not understand the situation. I asked unanimous consent of the committee awhile ago to permit the gentleman from New York [Mr. COVERT] to speak his time, not to come out of the time divided between the three sides. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] thereupon requested that the same courtesy be extended to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BUTLER], and that was done. I submit that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BUTLER], to whom the courtesy was extended on those conditions, ought to occupy his time now.

Mr. HERBERT. I suppose he will do that.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, I do not think that ought to be required. The motion is to strike out, and I think we should have the right to close the debate upon that proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this is scarcely a matter that the Chair should be asked to rule upon.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman from Indiana speaks about the relative order of debate. The gentleman had exhausted the entire time accorded to his portion of this debate, and the permission to another gentleman to occupy the floor was entirely independent. It was a courtesy by the committee as a whole, and in justice to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT], the chairman of the committee, whose time is reserved—

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. And it being the third extension the gentleman from Indiana has had.

Mr. BOUTELLE. And it being the third extension the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has had, it seems to me obvious that I am justified in requesting that the time granted by the committee, outside of the arrangement, be occupied now.

Mr. HERBERT. I hope the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] will go on. Let us get through with this bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I simply desire to say that I shall object to the extension unless the time is occupied now.

Mr. WHITING. You are too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hardly thinks the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] can object now. There were no conditions attached at the time.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, is it understood that the time now remaining is to be divided between the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] and myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The time now remaining, except that which has been extended to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BUTLER], is to be divided between the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE].

Mr. BOUTELLE. What is the purpose of the Chair in regard to that extended time? Does the Chair mean that the gentleman from Iowa shall close debate or the gentleman from Alabama?

The CHAIRMAN. There was no modification or qualification attached to the request made as to the time when the gentleman should occupy the floor.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I submit that it was qualified by the very terms of the permission, that the extension should be granted to him on precisely the same terms as it was granted to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COVERT]. It was clearly understood, and it is clearly in order that the time should be occupied now.

The CHAIRMAN. The only limit was the amount of time given, not the time when it should be occupied, the Chair thinks. It is a matter of good faith with the gentleman as to when he shall occupy it; and the Chair does not feel called upon to say when he shall occupy it. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BOUTELLE. The Chair will certainly concede that the gentleman who offers the amendment, or the gentleman who represents the committee, shall close this debate.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a question of propriety, but the Chair thinks the gentleman will observe it is hardly a question of order at this time.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I believe that has been uniform custom of the House; but I will leave that to be settled between the gentleman from Alabama, in defense of his own privilege, and anyone else who sees fit to challenge it.

The most that I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, at this time, is in answer to the only serious objection that I understand has been urged by the majority of the committee against the authorization of these additional vessels; namely, that if they are authorized now, the armor can not be furnished by the time they will be ready for it. In reply to that assertion I will state that contracts for armor have been made as follows:

With Bethlehem Iron Company	Tons.
With Carnegie, Phipps & Co	6, 000

Total under contract	12, 703
Still to be contracted for, for ships thus far authorized	3, 800

Deliveries on the two contracts have already commenced, amounting in all to 300 tons, and more than one-fourth of the whole Bethlehem contract is already forged. It is estimated that deliveries will continue at the rate of 700 tons per month, so that the present contracts should be completed by September 1, 1893. It is believed that in the course of the next twelve or fifteen months either of these establishments will be in condition to carry on extensive manufacture of armor in addition to that needed for the ships now in course of construction.

The amount of armor required for a battle ship like the three now building is 2,700 tons, but it should be borne in mind that the armor for a battle ship is not needed within eighteen months after her construction is commenced. Both of the establishments named claim to be able to furnish at the rate of 400 tons, or 800 tons total, after six months from the present time. It must be borne in mind that the casting of ingots and forging, in a new contract, should be done several months in advance of the completion of the old contracts, and that in order to keep these establishments occupied it will be necessary to give new orders before 1894 calendar year. I present the following statement, furnished me by the Bureau of Ordnance, of the amount of armor plate made by the Bethlehem Company up to the 5th instant:

THE BETHLEHEM IRON COMPANY, April 10, 1892.

Statement of the manufacture of armor plate up to April 5, 1892.

Ship or purpose.	Weight as forged.	Weight shipped or ready for shipment.
	Pounds.	Pounds.
Terror	680, 580
Cruisers 7 and 8	43, 975	9, 970
Projectile test plates	257, 763	139, 173
Experimental test plates, 10 inches	101, 949	31, 682
Texas	229, 115	36, 782
Maine:
Bulkhead plates	116, 500	75, 709
Slope to protective deck		112, 705
Monterey	1, 124, 243	415, 479
Battle ships 1, 2, and 3	868, 529
New York	27, 700
Amphitrite	96, 132
Puritan	48, 200
Total pounds	3, 594, 686	851, 500

Weight as forged, 1,604.77 tons.

Weight shipped or ready for shipment, 389.14 tons.

NOTE.—Among plates ready for shipment are those for the two barbettes of Monterey (157.57 tons), which will be shipped within a week.

I have also the following official letter from the naval officer who is now acting as inspector at the Bethlehem works, which clearly sets forth the assurances of a largely increased capacity for the production of armor there in the near future:

OFFICE OF INSPECTOR OF ORDNANCE, BETHLEHEM IRON WORKS,
South Bethlehem, Pa., April 11, 1892.

SIR: Replying to Bureau's letter No. 2061, of April 8, 1892, I have consulted with the officials of the Bethlehem Iron Company and learn that the following additional facilities for finishing armor plate have been ordered and will be available in the near future.

Planers.	To plane length.	To plane width.	Ordered from—	When available.
	Feet.	Feet.
One	30	8	William Sellers & Co.	Three months.
One	30	10	and Bennett, Miles & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.
One	30	12
One	30	11	Building here	Do.

Each of these planers will plane both edges of a plate at the same time, and they are to be powerful and specially built for heavy armor plates. The capacity of the four will be about equal to that of eight single side planers. The present machinery for finishing armor plates consists of three saws, two single side planers, one edge planer and shaper, and one drill press in the plate-trimming shop. I understand that with an additional edge planer and shaper this is practically the Creusot equipment for machining armor plate. In the new machine shop there are three planers and one drill press and in the old machine shop there are two planers, all capable of machining heavy armor.

With the installation of the four new planers I think the machining capacity will be about doubled. The additional forging facilities now under construction and which will be available within the year will enable plates to be forged closely to size and shape and thus do away with much machining, and consequently increase the output.

After a careful consideration of the condition of the plant in all its details, I am of the opinion that there will be a marked increase in the output of the finished plates within the next three months. It is difficult to estimate the actual number of tons per month at present, but I see no reason why it should not reach from 350 to 400 tons towards the end of the year.

I think deliveries commencing with this month, will gradually increase as the plant in all its parts gets into full operation, and experience is gained in the various stages of manufacture and fitting.

Very respectfully.

K. NILES,

Lieutenant and Inspector of Ordnance.

Commodore W. M. FOLGER, U. S. N.,
Chief of Bureau of Ordnance.

In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, I am glad to be able to state that the entire armor for the Monterey has been completed, and will be delivered during the present month. From Carnegie,

Phipps & Co., the other contractors, I have received a letter, dated March 23, in which they say:

In the month of February we shipped 165 tons of armored plate to apply on our contract with the United States Navy Department. Our shipments in March will aggregate about the same quantity. With increased finishing facilities, which will be available within sixty days, we hope to reach an average monthly production of not less than 350 tons.

These documents from the Navy Department, and from the contractors, engaged in this work, fully substantiate my contention that there will be no difficulty with regard to furnishing the armor of the proposed ships. That there should have been some delay up to the present time was to be expected, when we have been domesticating in our country great steel-forging establishments of a magnitude unparalleled in the industrial works of this country.

It was only natural that there should be some delay, which has been increased by the important experimentation of the Navy Department in regard to the character and quality of the plates. Some compensation for that delay is found in the fact that the perfection of the nickel and Harvey processes has largely increased the resisting power of the armor plates; so that we will have on the vessels under construction the very best armor of any navy, armor capable of a much greater resistance than that of any other country.

Upon one other point, which will be urged by the chairman of the committee, against the increased expenditure involved (while of course I am unable to anticipate exactly the line of his argument in that regard), I may perhaps satisfy the reasonable expectation of the committee by a general statement—that the total cost of the two battle ships proposed in my amendment will probably be, entirely completed, about $11,000,000.

The armed cruiser authorized in the bill will cost, according to the authorization, $3,500,000, exclusive of armament, and $1,200,000 for her armament. The ten torpedo boats will cost $1,200,000, and I have increased the limit for the torpedo cruiser by $162,000. That will make an aggregate of $17,062,000, which will be carried by the authorization for ships the construction of which will be extended over at least four years, probably more; so that the average annual additional expenditure involved by making this provision now will be in the vicinity of four and a quarter million dollars ($4,265,500). And the aggregate cost of all the vessels proposed only equals the amount actually appropriated last year for expenditure in one year upon the increase of the Navy.

Now, if the argument of some gentlemen on the other side that we do not need a naval force at all is valid, then of course the expenditure of even $4,000,000 a year for new ships can not be justified. But, Mr. Chairman, the policy of the Government in this regard has been determined and inaugurated. It has been indorsed by administrations of both political parties. It has been recommended by naval committees of both political parties, and the only difference between the present chairman of the committee and myself and other of his colleagues at this time is as to the period when we should commence the construction of the additional number of battle ships required.

In his report the chairman distinctly states his belief that we ought to have at least ten or twelve additional battle ships, and he states that there is no reason why we should not complete the authorization of these vessels within four years. If that is to be done, I submit that we can not begin too soon. If we authorize these two battle ships to-day they will not be put under contract until late in the fall at best, and it will be at least eighteen months to two years before they will be ready for their armor.

These vessels require at least four years, and probably longer, for their construction. If we authorize two battle ships in this bill we shall have two additional battle ships at the end of the time required to build them, which will be one year earlier than if we postponed action until the next session of Congress. If we do not put them in this bill and the committee and the House continue in the future to hold with the committee's report that we ought to have them, we shall at least have deferred the period of their completion by a full year. It is a simple question whether we shall perform the duty of the hour now, or put it off for twelve months. That is the only substantial issue between the bill as it stands and my amendment.

I will not stop to discuss at this time the peculiar views of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], because, whatever there may be behind them or whatever strength he may believe there is in them, or whatever support they may have in certain sections or localities, his opinion that we do not need any Navy has never been approved at any time by the representatives of the people of the United States. It has never had the approval of the executive department or of either branch Congress and, as a matter of fact, it has never had the approval of either of the great political parties in the declarations of their policy. Gentleman on the other side should remember that the very last Democratic national convention made the work of reconstructing the Navy a matter of especial boast in its platform, as follows:

By intelligent management and a judicious and economical expenditure of the public money it has set on foot the reconstruction of the American Navy upon a system which forbids the recurrence of scandal and insures successful results.

These successful results are what I am seeking to promote by the amendment which I have offered. That amendment is in the direct line of our naval development. We can not afford to say that this country is unwilling to incur the expense necessary for accomplishing a result that all who understand the subject concede to be desirable. That we need these ships is recognized by everyone who has examined the subject carefully. If, as is believed by the experts of the Department, the best measure of economy in appropriations for the Navy at this time is to provide a sufficient number of powerful ships of sufficient strength in armor and battery to defend our coasts and to repel the assault of any nation that may venture to make war upon us, we can not excuse ourselves for delay which is simply for the sake of delay, the postponing to another year of that which we ought to do now.

Mr. Chairman, this is not a sectional question in any sense. The Navy is not a sectional institution. It is the Navy of the United States. It is the Navy, not of the North and the East, but of the South, of the West, and of the Pacific coast as well. I have myself favored, and shall continue to favor, legislation to establish one of the great naval depots on the Gulf, where I think we should have a well-equipped station.

To-day one of the most important naval establishments in the country is located in Virginia; and we have been developing it more rapidly and increasing its importance faster than that of any other navy-yard in the country; while in my own section the navy-yards at Boston and Kittery have not been utilized as their superior advantages and unexcelled facilities would fully warrant. I have made no complaint on account of the building up of the great naval establishment in the South; and have been willing to help to build up another. The Navy is a national institution.

The personnel of the Navy represents every part of our common country. Since the close of the war there have been appointed as the future officers of the Navy, by you, gentlemen, and your predecessors, from the States that engaged in the rebellion, no less than 540 cadets and acting midshipmen to officer our ships and command them in case of war. Why, sir, the gentleman from Indiana himself has appointed no less than nine of these future naval heroes that he would have fought battles on the ocean without ships and win naval victories without guns.

An examination of the naval roster shows that to-day there are on the active list of the Navy in the various corps not less than 227 officers appointed from the States that engaged in the rebellion—every one of them proud of his flag, every one of them anxious to serve his country, every one of them desirous that this great arm of our service shall be increased and strengthened as it ought to be.

Gentlemen, I appeal to the representatives of all sections of this country in behalf of a national interest. To gentlemen from the West let me say, no matter how far you may have gone into the interior, your footsteps toward the setting sun were followed by the fostering care and protection of the patriotic people of the East; and no advance of civilization, no onward march of the pioneer, was ever swift enough to outrun the fraternal care and the solicitous, patriotic interest with which the people of the seaboard and of the East have helped to make generous provision for everything that the nation could do for the promotion of your prosperity and the protection of your homes.

Gentlemen of the South, this is your Navy as well as mine. The building up of this great source of national security and power, this greatest of all hostages for our peace with all nations, is a duty that rests upon you as it does upon me—a duty to which I am reluctant to believe you will fail to respond. Only a short time ago, when a war cloud seemed to be hovering darkly upon our horizon, we heard numerous and gratifying expressions on the part of gentlemen from the South of a desire, in case hostilities should ensue with any other nation on the earth, to show to the country that that portion of our people who were alienated from us during a recent unfortunate period would be among the first to spring to the national defense and among the most eager and valiant in upholding the national honor.

I believe it; but, gentlemen, we do not need that sort of assurance from you. It is not necessary that this nation should be plunged into war or bathed in blood in order for you to prove your devotion to its interests and your pride in its glory. You have an opportunity here to-day to stand up for the prestige of the United States among the nations of the earth. You have an opportunity now, by putting behind you all the demagogic considerations of a mistaken political expediency, that has been repudiated on this floor by representatives of your own party from several of the most important States of the Union—you have an opportunity, by making a reasonably liberal provision from the funds of the people for carrying forward the necessary work for the reestablishment of the American Navy, to show quite as conclusively as you possibly could in time of war that you desire to uphold the dignity and enhance the glory and power of our common country. [Applause.]

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, has the time of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] expired?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine has twelve minutes left.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, the proposition to gradually increase our Navy I am confident will receive the cordial indorsement of the American people. Ever since the trouble with Chile I have been satisfied that our Navy should be materially increased. The fact is, that trouble would not have happened if we had a more powerful navy.

They regarded their navy as absolutely superior to ours, and I am not sure but what they were correct. They had conquered Peru and they became arrogant, and concluded their fleet could sail up to San Francisco and levy on that city for an amount that would replenish their depleted treasury. They probably counted upon assistance that would enable them to attack and levy upon our cities on the Atlantic coast. Had not a settlement been made they might have caused a destruction of property that would have entailed a loss that would have amounted to more than what a dozen such navies as we possess is worth.

When we recollect the immense destruction of property caused by the Alabama and Florida, which vessels would bear no comparison with vessels owned by the Chilean Government, we are justified in concluding that Chile could have damaged us seriously.

Now, sir, I do not think we should invite an attack from a country like Chile. For the matter of that I would not neglect to provide suitable defense, both by sea and land, that will prevent any power from interfering with the rights of our country or its citizens when in the performance of public or private business in foreign countries.

Do you think under like circumstances the sailors of Great Britain would have been subjected to so outrageous and disgraceful an attack as was made upon our sailors in the streets of Valparaiso? We all know nothing of the kind would have happened, and had such an attack been made we all know that a British fleet would have very soon appeared in the harbor of Valparaiso, and if suitable reparation had not been made the British fleet would have leveled that city to the ground.

But our situation was such that we were not in position to compel Chile to do justice until we had spent considerable time and a large amount of money in order to create a fleet of sufficient capacity to cope successfully with the Chilean navy.

This country possessing a population of 64,000,000, with large cities exposed for the want of proper defenses, I regard it as a necessity that we should materially increase our Navy, that it may correspond to a partial extent with the population and wealth of the country. We have an extensive coast and great interests to protect, and I believe we will save money by keeping up an efficient navy. We shall be less likely to have trouble with other countries.

I have noticed that in modern times the nations that are the most prosperous are the countries that have the largest navies. No one will deny that the supremacy and power of Great Britain on the globe is due to her navy. It was the same with Holland, when Von Tromp commanded her fleets and rode in triumph the Northern seas and the British Channel. It was the same with Spain, Italy, and Venice, as long as they retained their supremacy on the sea. Turn back the leaves of ancient history and we can trace the downfall of Egypt and the powerful nations of ancient times to the time they neglected their navies.

Nothing contributed more to our prosperity, glory, and importance in the early history of our country than the splendid record made by the Navy in the early days of the Republic. In those times, when the war vessels of England swarmed the seas, Paul Jones sailed his vessels in triumph through the British Channel, and Decatur, when this country was in its infancy, dictated terms to Algiers.

Let us keep pace with our competitors for the trade of the world and encourage our people in their competition by affording them protection in the most remote corners of the earth.

The money invested in vessels will give employment to people in various parts of the country. It will give employment to those engaged in mining coal and iron. It will give employment to the common laborer, to skilled artisans in iron and wood and the machinery necessary to the construction of such vessels, and will result in distributing the money among the people.

Let us build vessels that will excite the admiration of our people and the admiration and wonder of the people in all parts of the world, and impress upon distant and surrounding nations the necessity of paying proper respect and consideration to the American citizen. [Applause.]

[During the delivery of the foregoing remarks, Mr. SIMPSON asked unanimous consent, which was granted, that Mr. MILLER'S time be extended for ten minutes.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. I waive the balance of my time.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. Thirty-seven minutes.

[Mr. HERBERT withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

Mr. MCALEER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] be extended for twenty minutes.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know—

Mr. HERBERT. I will not take any more time, Mr. Chairman. I will ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I wish to say to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] that I do not object at all to the proposed extension of his time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for general debate is exhausted.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, we want to get a vote upon this bill, and, as I think the committee are ready to vote upon it, I will not occupy any more time, but, with the permission of the committee, will extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE], which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 39, strike out all after the word "dollars," in line 10, to and including the word "designate," in line 22, and insert:

"The President is hereby further authorized to have constructed by contract, two sea-going, coast-line battle ships, designed to carry the heaviest armor and most powerful ordnance upon a displacement of about 10,000 tons, with a coal endurance of about 5,000 knots on the total coal capacity at the most economical rate of speed, and to have the highest practicable speed for vessels of their class, to cost, exclusive of armament and of any premiums that may be paid for increased speed, not exceeding $4,000,000 each; and ten torpedo boats at a cost not to exceed $120,000 each.

"In the construction of all said vessels, including said armored cruiser, all other provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled 'An act to increase the naval establishment,' as to materials for said vessels, their engines, boilers, and machinery, the contracts under which they are built, the notice of any proposals for the same, the plans, drawings, specifications therefor, and the method of executing said contracts shall be observed and followed, and said vessels shall be built in compliance with the terms of said act, save that in all their parts said vessels shall be of domestic manufacture. And in the contracts for the construction of each of said vessels, except said armored cruiser, such provisions for minimum speed and for premiums for increased speed and penalties for deficient speed may be made, subject to the terms of this bill, as in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy may be deemed advisable. If the Secretary of the Navy shall be unable to contract at reasonable prices for the construction of any of said vessels, then he may build said vessel or vessels in such navy-yards as he may designate.

"And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to readvertise for proposals for the construction of one swift torpedo cruiser of about 750 tons displacement, which was authorized by the act making appropriations for the naval service, approved June 30, 1884, and the limit of cost of said torpedo cruiser is hereby extended to $512,000, exclusive of armament."

Mr. CAMINETTI. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] by inserting what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "advisable," second paragraph of Mr. BOUTELLE'S amendment, the following:

"In making proposals for contracts for building the vessels authorized by this act it shall be required that one of said coast line-of-battle ships, and such of said torpedo boats as may be intended for use on the Pacific coast, shall be built on or near the coast of the Pacific Ocean, or the waters connected therewith, and the remaining one of said coast line-of-battle ships and such of said torpedo boats intended for use on the Atlantic coast shall be built on or near the Atlantic coast, or the waters connected therewith, as the Secretary of the Navy shall approve: Provided, That if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the President of the United States, from the biddings for said contracts, when the same are opened and examined by him, that said coast line-of-battle ship can not be constructed at a fair cost on or near the coast of the Pacific Ocean, he shall authorize the construction of said vessel elsewhere in the United States."

Mr. BOUTELLE. Is that identical with the provision in the previous bill?

Mr. CAMINETTI. Yes, I have followed the law of 1889, the language of which I believe was drawn by the gentleman himself.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I accept the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. HEARD. I wish to ask the gentleman from California [Mr. CAMINETTI] and also the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] whether the provision of the former law authorized the construction of a vessel on the Pacific coast unconditionally? Was there not some limitation with regard to cost?

Mr. BOUTELLE. This amendment as read contains a proviso which meets the gentleman's point.

Mr. HEARD. The former act provided, I believe, that if the vessel could not be built there within a certain limit of cost, it should be built somewhere else.

Mr. CAMINETTI. That is provided for here.

Mr. BOUTELLE. According to my understanding, this amendment follows the language of the previous law, which contained a proviso such as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD] indicates.

Mr. HEARD. I did not hear that part of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. CAMINETTI] will be regarded as incorporated as a part of the amendment of the gentleman from Maine. The question is now on the amendment of the gentleman from Maine as amended.

The amendment was rejected; there being on a division (called for by Mr. BOUTELLE)—ayes 65, noes 101.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Perhaps the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT], my colleague on the committee, will be willing to arrange for a vote by yeas and nays in the House on this proposition.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I hardly supposed that would be assented to.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I beg to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 39, strike out all after the word "dollars," in line 10, to and including the word "designate," in line 22, and insert:

"The President is hereby further authorized to have constructed by contract one sea-going, coast-line battle ship designed to carry the heaviest armor and most powerful ordnance upon a displacement of about 10,000 tons, with a coal endurance of about 5,000 knots on the total coal capacity at the most economical rate of speed, and to have the highest practicable speed for vessels of its class, to cost, exclusive of armament and of any premiums that may be paid for increased speed, not exceeding $4,000,000; and five torpedo boats at a cost not to exceed $120,000 each.

"In the construction of all said vessels, including said armored cruiser, all other provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled 'An act to increase the naval establishment,' as to materials for said vessels, their engines, boilers, and machinery, the contracts under which they are built, the notice of any proposals for the same, the plans, drawings, specifications therefor, and the method of executing said contracts shall be observed and followed, and said vessels shall be built in compliance with the terms of said act, save that in all their parts said vessels shall be of domestic manufacture. And in the contracts for the construction of each of said vessels, except said armored cruiser, such provisions for minimum speed and for premiums for increased speed and penalties for deficient speed may be made, subject to the terms of this bill, as in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy may be deemed advisable. If the Secretary of the Navy shall be unable to contract at reasonable prices for the construction of any of said vessels, then he may build said vessel or vessels in such navy-yards as he may designate.

"And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to readvertise for proposals for the construction of one swift torpedo cruiser of about 750 tons displacement, which was authorized by the act making appropriations for the naval service, approved June 30, 1890, and the limit of cost of said torpedo cruiser is hereby extended to $512,000, exclusive of armament."

Mr. CUMMINGS. I do not desire to take up the time of the House on this amendment, and there is no necessity for it. The amendment simply provides for one-half of what the amendment of the gentleman from Maine called for.

The amendment was rejected; there being on a division (called for by Mr. CUMMINGS)—ayes 73, noes 99.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment for two light-draft steel gunboats, in connection with which I will print in the RECORD the following communication from Rear-Admiral J. G. Walker, United States Navy, commanding the squadron of evolution:

U. S. S. CHICAGO, FLAGSHIP OF THE SQUADRON OF EVOLUTION, Montevideo, Uruguay, February 15, 1892.

SIR: I have the honor to call the attention of the Department to the sanitary condition of the east coast of South America, and to the naval force which the chief foreign powers maintain in the South Atlantic, and also to the objections which may be strongly urged against the permanent retention of unsheathed cruisers of large size upon this station. In Brazilian ports yellow fever is found practically throughout the year; in the summer frequently assuming an epidemic form, and in the winter existing in scattered and sporadic cases, at all times a menace to the health of unacclimated crews.

The concurrent testimony of all officers of large experience in South America is that vessels should visit Brazilian ports only when specific circumstances require them to do so; that at such times their stay should be of brief duration, and that strict sanitary regulations and precautions should be enforced. This involves the refusal of liberty to men, and the curtailment of many privileges which are usually granted to both men and officers, and which promote contentment and relieve the tedium and monotony of a long foreign cruise.

During this present season the yellow fever has been unusually severe in Rio Janeiro and Santos; and it has even appeared at Bahia, the one port of Brazil in which during several previous years it has been said not to have existed.

The unhealthiness of the coast of Brazil, therefore, practically limits cruising vessels to the estuary of the River Plate, of which the principal ports are Montevideo and Buenos Ayres. At Montevideo vessels of deep draft are obliged to lie 2 miles or more outside of the bay in the open sea. The weather is frequently boisterous, and during the winter almost incessantly so, rendering communication difficult and causing injury to boats, gangways, external chutes, and other articles of equipment. Wooden or sheathed vessels, coppered, go further in, lying at times without injury in the soft mud of the bottom, but an unsheathed vessel can not do this without endangering the protective paint and risking destructive corrosion of the steel shell.

The anchorage for heavy ships at Buenos Ayres is still farther out, being 10 or 12 miles from the city. There is no harbor for large vessels, and in order to reach even this anchorage, heavy ships must be dragged through the mud off Point Indio where the water is shoal. Twenty feet can now be carried through the dredged channel into the "Boca," or harbor mouth and the artificial basins close to the city, but vessels lying in the basins suffer distinct military disadvantages in being tied up to the dock and in having their opportunities for drills and exercises much restricted. Moreover the sanitary conditions are not favorable to a long stay.

The only suitable vessels for cruising in the rivers and its estuary are small vessels built of wood or sheathed and coppered. Such vessels can be taken inside anchorage at Montevideo, and can visit Rosario, Colonia, and other river ports, lying always within easy communication with the shore, and can without hindrance from weather or surroundings keep up the drills which are necessary to military efficiency.

The great naval powers fully recognize these facts. England, whose commercial interests in the river are enormous, not alone because of the steamer lines running under her flag, but also because of the great number of her subjects in Uruguay and the Argentine and the vast quantity of English capital embarked in railway, banking, and other ventures, maintains a squadron of four small vessels, one corvette, and three gun vessels, under the command of a captain as senior officer. The French keep one small vessel under a captain's command, the Spanish one, the Italians two, the Germans none. The Spanish and Italian senior officers are commanders.

All these powers have steamer lines coming into the Platte, many citizens living in the river countries, and much capital invested in them. The United States Government alone maintains a flag officer on this station, and the United States cruisers at present here are the only men-of-war on the East coast of South America that can not anchor in the bay of Montevideo. All the small foreign vessels above mentioned are sheathed and coppered. The importance of the frequent docking of unsheathed vessels presents a tangible and serious objection to their long retention on this coast. There are no docks in the river capable of taking in large ships.

A cruiser like the Chicago, for instance, must go to Rio Janeiro, that being the only port on the coast that affords the requisite docking facilities; and to place a vessel in dock there involves not merely the risk but practically the certainty of infection by yellow fever. The bottom of a cruiser ought to be examined within four months of her last docking, say within two or three months of her arrival upon this coast. The alternative therefore speedily presents itself—either to risk the deterioration of her bottom or an epidemic of yellow fever among her officers and crew. Large ships have always been unsuitable for cruising duty upon this station, but large wooden ships were independent of those docking facilities, which can not be withheld from large steel ships without endangering their existence.

I venture to repeat the recommendation which I have previously made to the Department, that this station should cease to be a flag officer's command. The duties are inadequate to a flag officer's rank and position, and the expense is unnecessary. The new vessels of our Navy can be more economically maintained and can render better service elsewhere. I would recommend keeping a small vessel of light draft, preferably a special-service vessel, in the River Platte, and sending once a year a vessel from the North Atlantic Squadron to this coast, thence to the Cape of Good Hope, up along the east coast of Africa, and back home through the Suez Canal and the Mediterranean, occupying a year in the cruise. Round trips of this kind would have many advantages, would perform efficiently the cruising service required in time of peace, visiting many ports in regular rotation, and would involve only the absence of one ship at a time from the home sounding.

My personal interest in making these recommendations is small, my command of this station is only temporary and incidental to other contemplated service, and my cruise is approaching its close. But I have always opposed the assignment of a flag officer to this command, and with each visit to South America I am the more convinced that the suggestions which I submit are in the line of military efficiency and good administration.

Very respectfully,

J. G. WALKER.

Rear-Admiral United States Navy, commanding Squad of Evolution.

HON. SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 39 strike out all after the word "dollars," in line 10, to and including the word "designate," in line 22, and insert:

"The President is hereby further authorized to have constructed by contract two steel gunboats of the most approved type, of about 1,200 tons displacement, to have a maximum speed of not less than 17 knots, and to cost, exclusive of armament, not more than $500,000 each; ten torpedo boats at a cost not to exceed $120,000 each.

"In the construction of all said vessels, including said armored cruiser, all of the provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled 'An act to increase the naval establishment,' as to materials for said vessels, their engines, boilers, and machinery, the contracts under which they are built, the notice of any proposals for the same, the plans, drawings, specifications therefor, and the method of executing said contracts shall be observed and followed, and said vessels shall be built in compliance with the terms of said act, save that in all their parts said vessels shall be of domestic manufacture. And in the contracts for construction of each said vessels, except said armored cruiser, such provisions for minimum speed and for premiums for increased speed and penalties for deficient speed may be made, subject to the terms of this bill, as in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy may be deemed advisable.

If the Secretary of the Navy shall be unable to contract at reasonable prices for the construction of any of said vessels, then he may build said vessel or vessels in such navy-yards as he may designate. And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to readvertise for proposals for the construction of one swift torpedo cruiser of about 750 tons displacement, which was authorized by the act making appropriations for the naval service, approved June 30, 1890, and the limit of cost of said torpedo cruiser is hereby extended to $512,000, exclusive of armament.

Mr. CAMINETTI. With a modification striking out "battle ships" and inserting "gunboats," I renew the amendment which I formerly offered, and which was accepted by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE].

Mr. BOUTELLE. I hardly think the gentleman will care to have that apply to a small appropriation of this kind.

Mr. CAMINETTI. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. CAMINETTI] withdraws the proposition.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BOUTELLE, it was rejected; there being on a division (called for by Mr. BOUTELLE)—ayes 68, noes 104.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I desire to offer one other amendment, and then I am through. [Laughter.]
The Clerk read as follows:

On page 39, strike out all after the word "dollars," in line 10, to and including the word "designate," in line 22, and insert:
"The President is also hereby authorized to have constructed by contract four torpedo cruisers of about 800 tons displacement, each to show a speed of between 22 and 23 knots per hour, to cost, exclusive of armament and torpedo outfit, not more than $350,000 each; two light-draft gunboats of about 1,000 tons displacement, for special service in foreign waters, to cost, exclusive of armament, not more than $350,000 each; and two first-class torpedo boats of the general type of torpedo boat No. 2, to cost, exclusive of armament and torpedo outfit, not more than $120,000 each."

In the construction of all said vessels, including said armored cruiser, all other provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled "An act to increase the naval establishment," as to materials for said vessels, their engines, boilers, and machinery, the contracts under which they are built, the notice of any proposals for the same, the plans, drawings, specifications thereof, and the method of executing said contracts shall be observed and followed, and said vessels shall be built in compliance with the terms of said act, save that in all their parts said vessels shall be of domestic manufacture. And in the contracts for the construction of each of said vessels, except said armored cruiser and four torpedo cruisers, such provisions for minimum speed and for premiums for increased speed and penalties for deficient speed may be made, subject to the terms of this bill, as in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy may be deemed advisable. If the Secretary of the Navy shall be unable to contract at reasonable prices for the construction of any of said vessels, then he may build said vessel or vessels in such navy-yards as he may designate.

The amendment was rejected, there being on a division (called for by Mr. CUMMINGS)—ayes 70, noes 97.

The Clerk proceeded to read the next paragraph of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, there was a motion made to strike out.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Is not this too late?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana incorporated his motion in the RECORD. It will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HOLMAN moves to strike out the pending section.

The amendment was rejected, there being on a division (called for by Mr. HOLMAN)—ayes 58, noes 120.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following substitute for the pending paragraph:

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after line 15 on page 38 down to and including line 22 on page 39, and insert the following:

"That for the purpose of further increasing the naval establishment of the United States, the President is hereby authorized to have constructed by contract four torpedo boats, at a cost not to exceed $120,000 each. In the construction of said vessels all the provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled 'An act to increase the naval establishment,' as to material for said vessels, their engines, boilers, and machinery, the contracts under which they are built, the notice of and proposals for the same, the plans, drawings, specifications therefor, and the method of executing said contracts, shall be observed and followed, and said vessels shall be built in compliance with the terms of said act, save that in all their parts said vessels shall be of domestic manufacture. If the Secretary of the Navy shall be unable to contract at reasonable prices for the building of said vessels, then he may build such vessels in such navy-yard as he may designate."

Mr. BOUTELLE. Do I understand that this strikes out the provision for the armored cruiser?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes.

Mr. BOUTELLE. And substitutes four torpedo boats?

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the effect of it. It strikes out the ship and substitutes four torpedo boats.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. Why not make this provision in addition to the other?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Would it not save time to make it four row boats? It would be a good deal cheaper. [Laughter.]

The question was taken on the amendment; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOLMAN) there were—ayes 45, noes 105.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNDER THE BUREAU OF ORDNANCE.

Armament and armor: Toward the armament and armor of domestic manufacture for the vessels authorized by the act of August 3, 1886; of the vessels authorized by section 3 of the act approved March 3, 1887; of the vessels authorized by the act approved September 7, 1888; of the vessels authorized by the act of March 2, 1889; of those authorized by the acts of June 30, 1890, March 2, 1891, and this act, including the purchase and installation of new machinery for the breech-mechanism shop at the navy-yard, Washington, D. C., and torpedo outfits for the Atlanta, Boston, and Chicago, $2,000,000.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if provision is made in this appropriation for the ship provided for in this bill?

Mr. HERBERT. Oh, there is plenty in the bill for that ship.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I understand not.

Mr. HERBERT. I understand there is.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I move to amend by increasing the amount to $3,500,000.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, we have now concluded the reading of the bill, and I ask unanimous consent to turn back to page 13 and amend the title under the head of "repairs and preservations at navy-yards and stations" on that page.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. HERBERT. I move to amend the total in lines 19 and 20 on that page, making the total for public works for navy-yards and stations $588,900.

That amendment is rendered necessary by the striking out of the provision for the dry dock at Algiers, La., and this is simply a correction of the amount of the bill to conform to the action of the committee.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It is simply a correction of the footings.

Mr. HERBERT. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out $833,900 and insert in lieu thereof $588,900.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. HERBERT. I move that the committee rise and report the bill with the amendments to the House favorably.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHIVELY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the naval appropriation bill, had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments and that as amended the bill do pass.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the question will be taken on the amendments in gross.

There being no objection, the amendments were considered and adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

The question being on its passage,

Mr. BOUTELLE. I move to recommit the bill with instructions to report it back with an amendment which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 39, strike out all after the word "dollars," in line 10, to and including the word "designate," in line 22, and insert:

"The President is hereby further authorized to have constructed by contract two sea-going, coast-line battle ships, designed to carry the heaviest armor and most powerful ordnance upon a displacement of about 10,000 tons, with a coal endurance of about 5,000 knots on the total coal capacity at the most economical rate of speed, and to have the highest practicable speed for vessels of their class, to cost, exclusive of armament and of any premiums that may be paid for increased speed, not exceeding $4,000,000 each; and ten torpedo boats, at a cost not to exceed $120,000 each."

In the construction of all said vessels, including said armored cruiser, all of the provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled "An act to increase the naval establishment," as to materials for said vessels, their engines, boilers, and machinery, the contracts under which they are built, the notice of any proposals for the same, the plans, drawings, specifications therefor, and the method of executing said contracts shall be observed and followed, and said vessels shall be built in compliance with the terms of said act, save that in all their parts said vessels shall be of domestic manufacture. And in the contracts for the construction of each of said vessels, except said armored cruiser, such provisions for minimum speed and for premiums for increased speed and penalties for deficient speed may be made, subject to the terms of this bill, as in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy may be deemed advisable.

If the Secretary of the Navy shall be unable to contract at reasonable prices for the construction of any of said vessels, then he may build said vessel or vessels in such navy-yards as he may designate.

And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to readvertise for proposals for the construction of one swift torpedo cruiser of about 750 tons displacement, which was authorized by the act making appropriations for the naval service, approved June 30, 1890, and the limit of cost of said torpedo cruiser is hereby extended to $512,000, exclusive of armament."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Maine, to recommit the bill with the instructions just read.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, to save time I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Naval Affairs with the instructions just read, and on that motion he demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 62, nays 135, not voting 131; as follows:

SENATE.

TUESDAY, April 19, 1892.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.
The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

COURT OF CLAIMS FEES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the chief justice of the Court of Claims, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 12th instant, certain information relative to fees charged by the officers of that court; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

COURT OF CLAIMS REPORT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting conclusions of fact and of law in the French spoliation claim of Reginald Fendall, administrator of John Leonard, deceased, relating to the brig Calliope; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. VEST presented a petition of the Kansas City (Mo.) Paint, Oil, and Varnish Club, praying for the passage of House bill 187, providing for the consolidation of third and fourth class mail matter into one class, to be classed hereafter as third-class matter; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented the following petitions of Friendship Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Missouri:

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. VILAS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 334) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to fulfill certain treaty stipulations with the Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior and the Mississippi, and making appropriation for the same, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7360) authorizing the construction of a wagon and motor bridge over the Missouri River at St. Charles, Mo., reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2715) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Kansas River, reported it with amendments.

Mr. VEST. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7365) to authorize the Illinois and Iowa Railway and Terminal Company to build a bridge across the Mississippi River at Moline, Ill., to report it without amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to ask the Senate to take that bill up and pass it. I have had several letters on the subject. It is a matter the two States of Iowa and Illinois are interested in.

Mr. VEST. I make no objection; but there are several bridge bills here, important to the parties interested and to the public in certain localities, and I intended to ask the Senate to take up those bills and dispose of them. I am receiving telegrams and letters all the time stating that parties want to commence construction and can not do it without the necessary legislation by Congress, and I intend to ask the Senate to take up these bills, probably this afternoon, if we can get time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope we shall go through with the routine business before that is done.

Mr. CULLOM. If that is to be done I will not ask that this bill be considered now. However, I am very anxious about this bill. I have had several communications on the subject.

Mr. VEST. I have no objection, of course, to its consideration, but there are four bridge bills on the Calendar about which there is considerable exigency, and I want to have them all considered.

Mr. CULLOM. I will not ask for the consideration of the bill at present, but I will join the Senator from Missouri in his request to have the bridge bills considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. CAREY, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2800) for the erection of a public building at the city of Dunkirk, N. Y., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 688) to amend sections 1 and 2 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the sale of timber on certain lands reserved for the use of the Menomonee tribe of Indians, in the State of Wisconsin," and for other purposes, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1090) to amend section 1 and section 2 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the sale of timber on certain lands reserved for the use of the Menomonee tribe of Indians, in the State of Wisconsin," reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, submitted a report accompanied by the bill (S. 2920) to regulate the cutting and sale of timber reserved to the use of the Menomonee tribe of Indians in Wisconsin; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1370) for the relief of the legal representatives of Mrs. Adeline Shirley, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Claims. I report adversely the bill (S. 723) for the relief of the legal representatives of Mrs. Adeline Shirley. The reason for reporting this bill adversely is that its provisions are embraced in the other bill just reported.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be postponed indefinitely.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported two amendments intended to be proposed to the army appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CLIMATIC FEATURES OF THE DAKOTAS.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. PETTIGREW February 25, 1892, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein). That 5,000 copies, comprising the necessary text, tables, and charts, be printed of the paper entitled "Certain Climatic Features of the Two Dakotas," being a presentation of special information collected by the Weather Bureau for a long series of years as to temperature, rainfall, winds, barometric pressures, evaporation, and atmospheric disturbances, which are believed to have marked influence upon agricultural interests in the said States.

SEC. 2. That 1,000 copies be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 copies to be distributed by the Weather Bureau.

REMOVAL OF GARBAGE IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. BLACKBURN on the 8th instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Whereas there was appropriated by the last Congress the sum of $24,000 for the removal of garbage in the District of Columbia for the year ending June 30, 1892; and

Whereas it is stated by the Commissioners for the District of Columbia in their last annual report now before Congress that said appropriation is already "practically exhausted," and an additional appropriation is asked for: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate of the United States in Congress assembled. That the Committee of the Senate on the District of Columbia is hereby instructed to investigate the manner and methods by which said appropriation has been expended, and to report to the Senate at an early day the result of their investigations.

Also, that said committee is directed to report what changes have been made in the official management of the health department of the District of Columbia, and for what reasons; and if any unusual or unfair means have been used to accomplish such changes.

Also, if the present contractor for the transportation of garbage and the collection and transportation of dead animals in the District of Columbia is carrying out his contract according to the specifications thereof.

Also, if said contractor is an employé of the War Department, drawing a salary from the United States; and if so, why is he allowed to occupy such a double position.

Also, if said contractor has been awarded a five years' contract for the collection of garbage and dead animals in the District of Columbia; and if so, the amount of said contract; and if said contractor has been allowed to sublet said contract; and if so, to whom, and what consideration he received for the same.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 2930) for the relief of George Webb; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PADDOCK introduced a bill (S. 2931) to provide for the survey and transfer of that part of Fort Randall military reservation in the State of Nebraska to said State for school purpose; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DIXON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2934) for the purpose of limiting the conditions in patents granted to citizens of other countries, to those demanded of American citizens by these countries respectively, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. CULLOM (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2935) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," approved March 3, 1891; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Select Committee on Indian Depredations.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 2936) for the relief of the United States Regulation Firearms Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. MANDERSON introduced a bill (S. 2937) for the erection of a monument in the city of Washington to the memory of the late Commodore John Paul Jones; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Library, and I desire to call the attention of that committee to some very valuable documents which accompany the bill. They were prepared by a gentleman who has given very great research to the history of this eminent naval officer, and I hope that they will receive consideration at the hands of the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill, with the accompanying papers, will be referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. CHANDLER introduced a bill (S. 2938) for the purchase of a marble bust of Ulysses S. Grant; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. VEST introduced a bill (S. 2939) for the relief of Austin Aukrom; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HARRIS introduced a bill (S. 2940) for the relief of James A. Richardson, administrator of Ezekiel T. Keel, deceased, of Shelby County, Tenn.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 2941) for the relief of John Schuh; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2942) granting a pension to Lawrence Heffron, late private in United States Marine Corps; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2943) granting an increase of pension to Thomas H. Gohagan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 2944) making the surveyor of the District of Columbia a salaried officer and to provide for more efficient service in the surveyor's office; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2945) granting an honorable discharge to Almond Munson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2946) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate The Masonic Mutual Relief Association of the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1869; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. FELTON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2947) to provide a national currency circulating medium and to provide for the circulation thereof; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. PADDOCK introduced a bill (S. 2948) to pension William H. Pierre; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 2949) granting a pension to Josephine Glover; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DAWES introduced a bill (S. 2950) for the relief of the legal representatives of Samuel Woods; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FELTON (by request) introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 74) proposing an amendment to the Constitution in reference to a national money system; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. FELTON. I have been requested to say in connection with the measures introduced by me that it is the desire to bring the subject before the Finance Committee for their consideration. I am told that the sentiment is backed by a large number of respectable and leading citizens. I move that the bill and joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. ALLEN and Mr. FELTON submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the river and harbor bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PETTIGREW submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GRAY submitted five amendments intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLICATION OF COPYRIGHTED BOOKS IN THE RECORD.

Mr. SANDERS. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire whether the publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, without the consent of the proprietor, of a copyrighted book is an infringement of the right granted to such proprietor of the sole liberty of printing, reprinting, publishing, completing, copying, executing, finishing, or vending the same, and whether the publication therein subjects any person who shall sell or expose to sale the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD containing such reprint to the penalties prescribed in section 4964 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and whether any person is liable to the owner of such copyrighted book for damages for such publication; and if so, what person, and what action, if any, is desirable to be taken in view of the publication of copyrighted books in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; and that said committee have leave to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. PLATT. I wish that the resolution may be printed and lie over. I should like to look at it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be printed and lie over.

HEARINGS ON CHEROKEE AGREEMENT.

Mr. PLATT submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, have power to employ a stenographer to report hearings in connection with Senate bill 2870, "to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Cherokee Nation of Indians of the Indian Territory, to make appropriation for carrying out the same, and for other purposes," and upon the relations existing between the United States and the five civilized tribes of Indians. Said committee, or subcommittee, shall have power to send for persons and papers; and the expenses incurred by such hearings shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers properly approved by the chairman of said committee.

IRRIGATION PUBLICATIONS OF GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

Mr. POWER. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, requested to furnish the Senate with information in relation to the following matters and at as early a date as practicable:

1. What documents, reports, monographs, papers, maps, and illustrations have been printed during the fiscal years of 1890-91 and 1891-92 for the United States Geological Survey in relation to irrigation, the storage of water, the measuring of streams, the construction and character of works in this and other countries, the survey of arid lands for reclamation purposes; also if any have been printed in previous years, not already published and distributed; and, if so, what relation such reports, etc., bear to the annual and special publications of the Geological Survey, as authorized by law, and at what date (if any such documents are now printed or printing) will they be ready for distribution?

2. What reports relating to arid-land reclamation and irrigation are in preparation in the offices of the United States Geological Survey and the United States Census; whether the same are now in course of printing; by whom are such reports being prepared, and under what authority of law; from what appropriations are the costs of said reports, papers, etc., being borne, and from what rolls are the persons employed thereat being paid, with a full statement or estimate of the cost of each of such publications or documents, both for preparation and printing, with the number to be printed and specific authority under which the work is being or has been done.

3. That the information asked shall include a statement as to whether any portion, and if so, what portions, of said reports, etc., have been previously published and circulated, either public or private papers and reports; also as to the authority of law under which such data have been gathered, the names and duties of those employed to obtain and prepare the same, the rolls on which they are now or were borne and paid, the amount of the payments to them while so employed, and the offices or divisions to which they were assigned.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President—

Mr. HALE. Let that lie over.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to suggest that if the resolution is to be passed on, the word "directed" ought to be inserted in place of the word "requested." I think we ought always to direct a Department in such resolutions.

Mr. HALE. I should like to have the resolution printed and lie over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE in the chair). Objection being made, the resolution will lie over, under the rule.

Mr. PLATT. Let the change be made from "requested" to "directed."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution has gone over. Mr. PLATT. I rose to make my suggestion before the objection was made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut moves that the word "requested" be changed to the word "directed." Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and that amendment will be made. The resolution will go over, under the rule.

GEORGETOWN AND TENNALLYTOWN RAILROAD.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby directed to forthwith investigate the operations of the Georgetown and Tennallytown Railroad Company, as to whether said company has complied with the laws and regulations governing it, especially in regard to roads, streets, and highways which are crossed by its track; whether the rails are placed upon proper grade; whether gates are sufficiently maintained, and whether the roadbed of said track and of the street in which it runs has been by said company made unsuitable for travel, and whether any arrangement has been made with any other company for the use of any part of its track or poles, and to report forthwith to the Senate.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had yesterday approved and signed the act (S. 2388) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Oregon and Washington Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Columbia River, between the State of Oregon and the State of Washington, and to establish it as a post road."

FUNDING ACT OF ARIZONA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there are no further resolutions, concurrent or other, the Calendar is in order.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to make a statement with reference to a bill on the Calendar, and then to ask unanimous consent that it may be taken up and disposed of at the present time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the Senator will be recognized to make a statement.

Mr. PLATT. The bill relates to a slight amendment in the funding act of Arizona. It is to make the interest on some bonds payable semiannually instead of annually. That is the only amendment to the law. It is necessary in order to enable the Territory of Arizona to sell its bonds under the act. An agreement has already been made for the sale of $1,500,000 of bonds if the bill can pass Congress, and the transaction is simply waiting for the passage of the bill. The other House has passed the bill, and I ask that it may be disposed of this morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut asks, unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5499) to amend an act entitled "An act approving, with amendments, the funding act of Arizona," approved June 25, 1890. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. PLATT. There is an amendment proposed by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Committee on Territories report to add to section 2:

And no further Territorial legislation shall be necessary in order to make said Territory liable for the principal and interest of said bonds; and no further advertisement for the sale of $1,500,000 of said bonds at not less than par shall be necessary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I wish to call attention to the fact that this bill provides for the payment of interest in gold.

Mr. PLATT. Or in its equivalent in lawful money.

Mr. STEWART. Or in its equivalent in lawful money. It is the first measure passed by Congress, at least since the resumption act, which has made any distinction in the different kinds of United States money. I do not know but that the original act contained the same provision.

Mr. PLATT. The act passed by the Legislature of Arizona in 1887 contained the same provision. The same language is followed in this bill.

Mr. STEWART. This will probably be used by our gold friends to show that the people of Arizona are opposed to the free coinage of silver and that they have joined the gold combination. The bill in this form will undoubtedly be used as an argument for that purpose. I do not think it will be a very sound argument, because it is the gold men themselves who refuse to loan money to Arizona unless they can make these terms.

It is rather a forced loan, such as the gold men are in the habit of making. They take advantage of everything of this kind to patch up their cause, being unable to show that there is gold enough for use as money, or that the legislation of 1873 was wise legislation, or that prices are not changing all over the world in consequence of an inadequate basis for circulation. The fact that we have only about half the amount of metallic coin in the commercial world that we had eighteen years ago is not denied, and its baneful effects are felt everywhere and can not be denied by argument. The advocates of a gold standard resort to little catch things like this where a Territory is forced to accept their terms to prove that they have adherents and advocates.

A few days ago some industrious individual in the employ of the gold men ascertained that I had made some mortgages payable in gold in California, where the gold law prevails and where any man who does business must sign a note payable in gold. If he gets a discount at a bank, or if he does business in that country, he must do as they do. As I explained the other day, I gave no direction in regard to the matter; it was done by an agent, who took the mortgages on the usual blanks prepared by the gold men. That has been commented upon, and I think the editor of every leading paper in the United States has taken the trouble to write an editorial on it, as if that had anything to do with the grasp of contraction, as if that had anything to do with the oppression of mankind occasioned by the destruction of one-half of the basis of circulation!

I simply call attention to this matter. We shall hear from it again. I shall not take any further action than to call attention to it, because the Territory of Arizona is in a deplorable condition, with an enormous debt, and the people of that Territory think this measure will be some relief. They think this funding bill will put their finances in a better condition. Whether that be true or not, time will tell. At all events, I am disposed to allow them to manage their own affairs, and am willing that the gold trust shall have all the benefit of the provision in this bill; but they will call attention to the fact that Congress is recognizing a difference between the different classes of money which are in use.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I am very glad that the Senator from Nevada does not feel it necessary to oppose this bill. I desire to make a simple statement about it.

The original act, which we are now asked to amend, was passed in 1887 by the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Arizona. The only change that we make in it is to make the interest payable semiannually instead of annually. The law, so far as relates to the payment of interest in gold or its equivalent, is precisely the language employed in the original act by the Legislature in 1887. The sale of these bonds upon the contract which has already been made will save the Territory of Arizona about $7,000 per month interest, and the people of that Territory are very anxious that the bill shall pass without further delay.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, the bill which was passed by the House of Representatives contains a provision that the interest "shall be paid in gold coin of the United States," without saying anything about "or its equivalent." The act of the Territorial Legislature of the Territory of Arizona contains the words that "the interest shall be payable in gold coin or its equivalent in lawful money of the United States."

Mr. PLATT. I think the Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am only going by the Senator's own report as he has it printed here.

Mr. PLATT. There is a mistake in the print. If the Senator will listen to the reading of the bill I think he will see that the language is all right.

Mr. COCKRELL. I not only listened to the reading of it, but I have it, and I am able to read, and I see the bill has not the words "or its equivalent in lawful money."

Mr. PLATT. I think the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. COCKRELL. We shall see who is mistaken.

Mr. PLATT. On looking at the bill I see the Senator is right.

Mr. COCKRELL. I rather thought the Senator from Connecticut was mistaken.

Mr. PLATT. I agree that I was.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is all right, then.

This bill provides further, in accordance with the language of the Territorial statute, that the principal of these bonds shall be payable in lawful money of the United States. The principal being payable in lawful money of the United States is the only reason why I shall make no objection to the passage of the bill, though I believe the principle is wrong in not making the interest payable in lawful money, but the principal is payable in lawful money.

Mr. KYLE. I wish to offer an amendment, to strike out, in line 11, of section 1, the words "gold coin" and insert "lawful money."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, line 11, after the words "paid in," it is proposed to strike out "gold coin" and insert "lawful money;" so as to read:

Said bonds shall bear interest at a rate to be fixed by said loan commissioners, but in no case to exceed 5 per cent per annum, which interest shall be paid in lawful money of the United States, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be considered as agreed to, if there be no objection.

Mr. PLATT. No, Mr. President, it will not be considered as agreed to without objection, for I object to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Then the Chair will put the question on the amendment.

Mr. KYLE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I desire to make this statement about the bill. The Territorial Delegate desires that the bill shall be passed in its present form; all the officers of the Territory desire that the bill shall be passed in its present form. The contract has been made for the sale of these bonds upon the theory that the bill would be passed by the Senate as it came from the other House, and I hope that no change will be made in it. It is a matter which it seems to me the people of the Territory have a right to regulate in their own way.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I shall trouble the Senate but for a moment. The request of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] is based upon the action of the Delegate from the Territory of Arizona, as I understand it.

Mr. PLATT. Certainly it is.

Mr. PEPPER. I am opposed to changing the tenor and the spirit of the laws of the United States at anybody's request except at the request of the people themselves. We are now just entering upon what I believe will be the most stupendous struggle in our history upon this very question as to whether or not we are going to pay or propose to pay our debts in gold instead of in lawful money of the United States, and I hope that this amendment will carry. If it be necessary to repeal the law and enact a new one very good, but it does not matter about that so far as I am concerned and the people whom I represent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE], upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

Mr. DAWES (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. I should vote "yea" if the Senator from Vermont were present.

Mr. McMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH].

Mr. POWER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question if present, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BUTLER. I am paired generally with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. I do not know how he would vote on this proposition, and I therefore withhold my vote. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN], he being paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] and I with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], that we transfer our pairs and record our votes.

Mr. McMILLAN. That is satisfactory to me, and I vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS. I vote "yea."

Mr. CALL (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. CARLISLE. Is the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] recorded as voting?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He is not recorded.

Mr. CARLISLE. I am paired with that Senator, and withhold my vote.

Mr. GEORGE. Has the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. GEORGE. I am paired with him, and withhold my vote. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. FELTON. I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRUCE]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. HISCOCK (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. I did not hear him vote, and therefore I withdraw my vote.

Mr. RANSOM. I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who is temporarily and necessarily absent from the Senate. I should vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. HISCOCK. I suggest to the Senator that he and I transfer our pairs. I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] and the Senator from North Carolina is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. By a transfer of the pairs we shall both be at liberty to vote.

Mr. RANSOM. That is satisfactory to me.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then my vote may stand.

Mr. RANSOM. I vote "yea."

Mr. BERRY. Under the arrangement just made, my colleague [Mr. JONES of Arkansas] will be paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. If my colleague were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT (after having voted in the negative). I voted inadvertently. I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR]. If my vote standing would make a quorum I should let it remain, but as I understand it will not, I desire to withdraw it for the present.

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 15; as follows:

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A quorum has not voted.

Mr. PLATT and Mr. COCKRELL. Let the roll of the Senate be called.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators responded to their names:

Allen,	Daniel,	Jones, Nev.	Ransom,
Allison,	Dixon,	Kenna,	Sawyer,
Bate,	Dubois,	Kyle,	Shoup,
Berry,	Faulkner,	McMillan,	Stewart,

Cullom,	Hoar,	Pugh,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Fifty-seven Senators have responded to their names. A quorum is present. The yeas and nays will be again taken on the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). Being paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN] and myself have consented to transfer our pairs, and I vote "yea."

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR], and shall not vote unless it becomes necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. POWER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FAULKNER. I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT. I suggest to the Senator from West Virginia that he and I transfer our pairs, so that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR] and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] will stand paired, and we shall be at liberty to vote.

Mr. FAULKNER. That is satisfactory to me.

Mr. GEORGE. Has the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He is not recorded.

Mr. GEORGE. I am paired with that Senator, and withhold my vote. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. HIGGINS. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] and I have agreed to transfer our pairs. He is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON], and I with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. We will transfer these pairs, so that we can both vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. BUTLER. Under that arrangement I vote "yea."

Mr. HISCOCK (after having voted in the negative). Has the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am paired with that Senator, but I understand that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], who is absent, is not paired. Therefore, I transfer my pair with the Senator from Arkansas to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], and I will let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 24; as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, I wish to make a statement with reference to this bill, which was considered by the Committee on Territories.

Mr. SMITH, the Delegate from Arizona, who is in favor of the free coinage of silver, appealed to the Committee to amend this bill. A law was passed in the last Congress providing for the funding of the indebtedness of Arizona. That law provided that interest should be paid in gold or its equivalent in lawful money.

Mr. KYLE. May I ask the Senator a question there?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield?

Mr. CAREY. Yes, sir.

Mr. KYLE. Does the law provide that the interest shall be paid in gold or in lawful money?

Mr. CAREY. In gold or its equivalent in lawful money, and that is the law on the statute book to-day.

Mr. SMITH came before the committee and said that unless this bill was amended and the interest made payable semiannually instead of annually, as in the law, they could not sell their bonds. He further stated—and it has been confirmed by the speech of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART]—that the universal custom in the Territory of Arizona, in Nevada, and in California, is to pay indebtedness, principal and interest, in gold.

I am opposed to the free coinage of silver. I am convinced that it is not right that this Government should to-day coin all the silver that may be presented at the mints. I do not believe in making contracts payable in gold, yet I believe it is the right of a Territory, or of a State, or of the Government of the United States to make a contract in gold if it wishes to do so. On Mr. SMITH's personal appeal the Committee on Territories agreed to so report this bill.

What was the nature of his appeal? He stated that the people of Arizona were burdened with an indebtedness, they were paying $150,000 per annum in interest, and they had to strain every nerve to raise the necessary amount to pay the interest. He says the minute that the law is amended as proposed by this bill the Territory of Arizona has a contract by which it can dispose of its bonds and save $75,000 per annum.

These are the reasons why I voted as I did to maintain the provision of the bill, that the people of Arizona if they wished to do so, may make a contract to pay their interest in gold and not in lawful money, and they can not sell their bonds unless they do so.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the provision to pay in lawful money is a provision to pay in gold or silver at the option of the debtor. At this time, fortunately, the term "lawful money" includes both gold and silver. In practice these people can pay in gold if they prefer. The United States has no obligation payable in gold save the gold certificates, in which case the Government acts simply as a trustee.

Why should we now discriminate in favor of one kind of money? Is there any condition of affairs in this country which justifies anybody in saying that gold is more valuable for payment than silver? Is it any advantage to the people of Arizona Territory to pay in gold? Is it any burden for them to pay in silver or paper, which is included in the term "lawful money?"

If the Territory of Arizona can not sell its bonds, it is because the people who have the money distrust that Territory. The State of Colorado is able to sell its securities payable in lawful money. It has recently sold at more than par $300,000 of its bonds, payable in lawful money.

Mr. HISCOCK. At what rate of interest?

Mr. TELLER. Four per cent. I do not know what rate of interest is provided for in this bill.

Mr. PLATT. Five per cent.

Mr. TELLER. You can sell in any of the markets of this country the securities of any municipal corporation or any State that is solvent, payable in lawful money.

Mr. CAREY. I will say to the Senator that, if he will make inquiry, he will find that it is very difficult to sell Western bonds now.

Mr. TELLER. I am as well advised upon that subject as the Senator from Wyoming; I spend as much time studying these questions as the Senator from Wyoming; I am as familiar with the markets of the world as the Senator from Wyoming, and I can put in the markets of the world the securities of any solvent corporation in the United States payable in lawful money.

Mr. STEWART. You can not if the United States discriminates against it.

Mr. TELLER. The United States ought not to discriminate against its money of any kind. I say here, Mr. President, that if there is any difficulty in selling these bonds, it is not because the term "lawful money" is there. If these people are burdened with a great debt and are paying large amounts of interest, with proper management and proper attention they can get out of debt without burdening themselves with a payment which must ultimately cost them 40 or 50 per cent more, especially if the sentiments expressed by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] and the people who think with him shall prevail in this country. These people will, when they pay their debt, not only pay the interest with appreciated money year by year, but pay the principal with appreciated money.

"Lawful money" is the term used in the statute, or "coin of the United States." I am willing that the bill shall be amended so as to read "payable in United States coin." I am not willing to vote for the bill, and I will not give my vote for it, if the amendment is not allowed to stand; nor will I vote for any security made by the United States or by its authority which disparages one of the money metals, or even that respectable class of American money called greenbacks, which are included in the term "lawful money."

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President—

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. DANIEL. With pleasure.

Mr. PLATT. I regret very much that a simple bill of this sort should start anew this financial discussion in the Senate. I do not want to enter into it. We are not passing any independent law; we are simply approving an act which the Territory of Arizona passed some time ago, and I am perfectly content that the vote shall be taken. If the amendment is adopted as it is, I shall not call for a separate vote on it in the Senate. I appeal to the Senator from Virginia to let this bill be disposed of, but still, if he wishes to enter into the discussion, that is his right.

Mr. DANIEL. I yield to the appeal of the Senator not to expose the fallacies of the gold men any more. I think they have been sufficiently exposed by what has been said here.

Mr. PLATT. The discussion has been all on that side, I believe, so far.

Mr. DANIEL. I will consent, out of respect to the Senator, not to harrow his feelings any more, and let the vote be taken.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, I wish to say that I do not understand the question discussed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] to be involved at all. I understand that the people of Arizona have a debt which they suppose they can compromise upon certain terms which suit them, and that the only question before the Senate is whether the people of Arizona shall be allowed to regulate their own affairs in their own way, or whether we shall interfere with them and require them to adjust them according to our way.

I do not understand that the question discussed by the Senator from Colorado is involved at all, because the underlying question is this: Shall Congress undertake to regulate these matters for these people, which they understand and which concern them? Whatever burdens are assumed, they assume. I believe in the doctrine that the wisest people are those intrusted with the management of their own business, and that he who is interested is always wiser than the man who is not.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, my friend from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] does not exercise his powers of persuasion upon gentlemen who wish to speak upon the other side of this question, and until he gets a little more impartial I am afraid that I shall have to inflict upon him a few remarks, at least, in support of the Constitution of this country and of the bimetallic currency which was adopted for this nation just one hundred years ago.

Mr. PLATT. I assure the Senator that I shall listen to him with great pleasure.

Mr. DANIEL. I am very much obliged to the Senator.

Mr. President, this is just one of the little entering wedges by which Congress is invited to revolutionize the solemn policy which was declared to be the fixed policy of this Government a little over a year ago, to keep its constitutional metallic currency at par, that is, the coin of one metal at par with the other.

There is no difficulty inherent in the nature of the case in sustaining our silver metal at par with our gold metal when it is coined. We have a slang phrase, which even gentlemen who occupy the position of statesmen condescend at some time to use, in which they speak of our solid, old-fashioned, hundred-years-old silver dollar as an 80-cent or a 70-cent or a 69-cent dollar. Mr. President, it would be impossible for Ananias himself to embody in so many words a more unadulterated and unalloyed falsehood than is attempted to be imposed upon the people by any such declaration as that the silver dollar is an 80-cent or a 70-cent or a 69-cent dollar.

We are told also that values must be left to regulate themselves, as if money grew upon trees like apples and peaches grow; as if money sprang up in fields as wheat and corn spring up; as if anybody in the country who chose to do it could create money as he may create some fabric of the factory, or cultivate some product of the pasture or the field.

Mr. STEWART. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. DANIEL. It is no interruption.

Mr. STEWART. I wish to suggest that the silver dollar is worth a dollar when it has the stamp of the Government upon it, and it is only depreciated because of the policy which has been pursued in relation to silver.

Mr. DANIEL. I understand that, and I am going to say that before I get through, but we can not say everything at the same time when we are trying to put one argument on top of another.

Mr. President, this misstatement of fact that we have a depreciated dollar and this economic fallacy that Congress has nothing to do with regulation of value are the two errors that lie at the root of all the doctrines which are preached against our constitutional currency.

What is a dollar? A dollar is defined in our laws under our Constitution to consist of so many grains of silver, or of so many grains of gold plus the stamp of the Government and plus the power and force of the Government behind the stamp to make that coin accepted by all who may have the right to demand a dollar as legal tender in the discharge of debt. A cent is a mere mathematical expression for a hundredth part of that thing which is a dollar, and to speak of the silver dollar as containing only 69 cents is to say that 100 and 69 are the equivalents of each other—that 100 times one is 69.

Mr. President, as to this matter of the regulation of value, our forefathers one hundred years ago when they fashioned the Constitution appreciated—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. STEWART. I ask that the Senator be allowed to proceed with his remarks by unanimous consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. PLATT. I hope that the bill may be disposed of this morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to the Senator from Virginia proceeding.

Mr. DANIEL. I will hurry through.

Our forefathers one hundred years ago, when they fashioned the Constitution, appreciated the fallacy of some economists who declare that you can not regulate values, and made it the duty of Congress not only to coin money, but "to regulate the value thereof."

Mr. President, whenever you put the dollar in the silver, you find the silver in the dollar, showing that when you coin money and give the metal the functional right of money, by that very act you bring all of our money to par.

I was astonished at the nature of the argument used by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY]. He says that the people of Arizona are afflicted with debt, that they are poor and are appealing to Congress to increase their financial facilities to pay debt, and yet, in the same breath, he tells the Senate that he would deny to them the right to coin the metal which is stored in their own soil and make it money for the purpose of relieving them from that debt.

Mr. CAREY. If the Senator from Virginia will permit me to make a statement—

Mr. DANIEL. With pleasure.

Mr. CAREY. The law itself that we are legislating in reference to is an act of the Legislature of Arizona, a funding bill passed by the Legislature, which provides for the payment of the interest on the bonds in gold.

Mr. DANIEL. Why is Congress asked to give its approbation to that act?

Mr. PLATT. It is not asked to give its approbation to that act. It is simply asked to make the interest payable semi-annually instead of annually, as the act requires, and that at the request of the people of Arizona.

Mr. DANIEL. Then, Mr. President, if the people of Arizona want favor from Congress I would require them first to respect that public policy which Congress has declared to be the fixed policy of this nation, and I would grant no favor to any suitor who came seeking to undermine the money fabric of this country, to gorge those who are trying to turn us upon the single gold standard and to contract our currency. Least of all did I expect to hear a Senator who represents one of the fresh young States of this country, a land which God has stored with the precious metals, use arguments against these riches of his own country, and while appealing to Congress to relieve the wants of an indebted community, to proclaim that he is opposed to allowing that very community to use the means with which nature has provided them for their own relief.

Mr. President, this is but an indication to me that no wave of the wand can destroy a question which is as widespread as this nation, and which has its advocates in every hamlet, in every county, and in every State. The silver question is not going to down at any man's bidding or at any party's bidding. It will press itself for solution until our Constitution is obeyed and until the spirit as well as the profession of bimetalism is respected.

A distinguished statesman of New York, Mr. President, has called attention to the fact that there is now no ratio fixed between gold and silver. The Constitution provided that Congress should regulate the value of money in order that it might fix the ratio between these two metals. We have fixed the value of the gold dollar, we have fixed the value of the silver dollar, and we have fixed the value of gold bullion, but we have not fixed the value of silver bullion.

Gentlemen sometimes say that gold is of a value which supports itself. It does not support itself. The gold bullion is always equal to the gold dollar, because the law will turn it at the expense of the whole people of the United States into a gold dollar at any one's request. The idea of our Constitution was that we should have an automatic currency, that it should regulate itself as the blood is regulated in the system by the action of the heart, that demand and supply might adjust themselves to each other by laws which would operate of their own force without further legislation.

It was provided that we should have free coinage of gold and free coinage of silver in order that this result might be accomplished, and with the free coinage of both metals at that ratio that the law fixed, is it not evident that the metals would run into coin when there was want of money and run out of coin into jewelry and into ornaments when there was abundance? But as the law stands to-day, only the value of gold is fixed. How is it fixed? It is fixed by the fact that the people of this whole country at their expense established a mint and employ artificers and pay skillful workmen to turn any man's gold bullion into a dollar for him at his own will and pleasure. That, Mr. President, has appreciated the value of gold at least 25 per cent, as estimated by the economist and statistician.

Take your gold watch, your gold ring, your breastpin, your bracelet, and you can fling it into the mint any day and it will be handed back to you in dollars. Beat those dollars up by a hammer until they are shapeless, and the mint will turn them into dollars for you again at the expense of the people of this whole country, and all the wealth of the people and all the power of the Government is behind the value of gold, appreciating it and sustaining it as the equivalent of that thing into which it may be turned. But how is it with our money metal, silver? It is tossed about upon the marts of exchange at the pleasure of the bears and bulls of the market. They are permitted to make special contracts payable in gold dollars; they loan money of any kind and require payment in a particular kind, and the result is that the money of our country is being hoarded up by a few gold men and that they are attempting to prostitute the whole fabric of Government to the gormandizement and aggrandizement of themselves.

Is anyone idle enough to believe that the people who understand these things are going to quietly bow themselves out of court because a political party at one time or another, or a coterie of gentlemen in Washington City, say, "We do not want to make the issue." Political parties, Mr. President, do not make issues; Congresses do not make issues; the people make issues, and if they are not recognized by political parties the people will recognize them notwithstanding, and will hold to accountability those who refuse to obey their will.

We have seen here for a series of years the most remarkable spectacle that ever was beheld in the Republic. According to the conception of a republic, it is organized for the purpose of giving the people an opportunity to express their will, but according to the interpretation of the word "republic" as placed upon it by the practical politicians who have attempted to deal with our affairs here in Washington it is simply an establishment to give an opportunity to certain gentlemen who have opposing interests, as they conceive, to suppress the people's will. There is a majority to-day in both sides of Congress for the free coinage of silver if no alien or subtle influences were exercised upon the members here save those which they receive from their constituency when they leave their homes.

Why, Mr. President, is the people's will set aside? Why will not representatives stand up here and defend the things which their constituencies at home expected them to defend? Because it is said there is some policy of party which prevents. Can a party hide its head in a bushel? Can you quench the thoughts of the people by putting their issues in a bag, and say they are gone?

Mr. President, these issues will not down; they will rise again; they will come and come and come, as the widow came to the unjust judge, until, at last, he will accord what is asked "for the much clamor."

Not in this act nor in any act would I seek to establish one currency in this country for the rich and another for the poor. You have got your coinage laws now so arranged that the poor people never see a gold dollar. Gold has gone out of circulation, and in order that it may go only into the hands of those who are hoarding it up, we have even ceased to coin gold dollars. Let any poor person go to work to save up his hard earnings in a stocking, and he can not find a gold dollar anywhere to save. We have stopped coining it. If silver be a 70-cent dollar, as is proclaimed by some, you have so fixed it that the mass of the people can get nothing but 70-cent dollars, and so that the rich and powerful alone may get the gold, which is coined in larger denominations.

Mr. President, I have said enough for to-day, but I will call attention to one other fact, that you are creating by your coinage laws an aristocracy of money; you are making a difference between that metal which is obliged in its very nature to be the circulation of the people, and that metal which is obliged in its very nature to be the medium of large payments. Congress, and Congress alone, with the Treasury Department at Washington, is responsible for this confusion of our financial position. It does not come from anything inherent in the nature of the metals, but it is produced artificially, and the more sturdy and steady and unyielding are those who insist here upon one equal, uniform currency for the whole people, the sooner will this wrong be righted, and the sooner will the spirit of the Republic be represented in our circulating medium.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I voted upon this bill precisely as I would have voted if the amendment had been to strike out a stipulation that this interest should be paid in silver. I voted that the people of Arizona should have the right which belongs to the people of every State in this Union—to make the best bargain they can when it becomes necessary for them to borrow money or to fund an existing loan.

I understand from those who represent the Territory of Arizona in the other House that the situation is just this: Already there is a loan outstanding in the Territory of Arizona, the principal and interest of which is a burden upon the taxpayers of that Territory, drawing 10 per cent interest; and this Territorial law, which is now before the Congress of the United States for amendment, provides that it may be funded at a rate not greater than 5 per cent, the interest payable in gold.

As I understand, arrangements are already made by which the funding of that debt may be made upon those terms. That law was passed two years ago. The only amendment that is sought by the committee here is that the interest shall be payable semi-annually instead of annually. So I think our silver notions, if notions they be, are out of place here, especially as they interfere with the rights of the people of Arizona to do that which they think is best for them, and impose upon them a burden of something like $75,000 of interest yearly in order to gratify persons who are so sensitive on this whole question of silver.

I do not think that anyone who votes "nay" on this amendment, as I did, is making a record one way or the other on the free coinage of silver.

My only reasons for so voting were that I believed that the people should have the right in a business point of view to do that thing which they believed to be best for their material interest, and it seems to me that we are exploiting our notions upon a great question, which, I confess, divides this country, and into which I am not going at all to enter at this time, but we are airing our notions about that question at the expense of the taxpayers of Arizona.

Mr. PUGH. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question of him?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. PUGH. The act of 1890 declares it to be the public policy of the United States to preserve the parity between gold and silver. Is not this bond or this contract in contravention of the declared public policy of the United States, and would any court enforce a contract which showed upon its face that it was against the public policy of the Government?

Mr. GRAY. Why, Mr. President, this bill, as I understand it, which is now before the Senate of the United States, having come over from the House of Representatives, to allow the people of Arizona to fund their debt at 5 per cent in lieu of a debt now bearing 10 per cent, has no more to do with the public policy declared in the act of 1890 than the thing which is most absolutely foreign to that which is capable of being conceived.

Mr. PUGH. We should not ratify a contract which shows on its face that it is contrary to the expressed public policy of the United States. You can not legalize a contract that is against public policy.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama has asserted, but has not shown that this bill or the provision which is sought to be put into it, allowing these people to pay the interest in gold, is against the public policy declared in 1890 to preserve the parity between the two metals. How does this affect the parity between the two metals? I believe that absolute freedom of contract in regard to the money in which a debt is solvable will go further towards preserving the parity of the two metals than any legislation which is supposed to force a condition of things which can only exist by consent of those who are carrying on the business of the country.

I do not, therefore, see how the question of the Senator from Alabama is at all pertinent to the plain business proposition that is now before the Senate, to allow these people to create a debt whose interest shall be solvable in that metal which will require the least of it to pay the interest. If they must pay $75,000 in gold, whereas they will be required to pay $150,000 if payable in silver or gold, I do not see how the parity of the two metals comes into the question at all.

Mr. PUGH. I should like to ask the Senator if the bond would not show on its face that it was a discrimination against silver, that it was a discrimination in favor of gold, and if that discrimination would not be per se detrimental to the parity of the two metals?

Mr. GRAY. I can not see that it is a discrimination by law against one metal or the other to allow a man to make a contract in the fashion that is most beneficial to himself. That is not a discrimination by law. He may be for or against gold; he may have a penchant for silver; he may believe, as my friend from Alabama believes, that silver is a better money metal than gold and make a contract that the interest be payable in silver. I do not know that that is a discrimination by law.

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President, I desire to say just one word, and that is that my vote against this amendment had nothing in the world for its object except to enable the people of Arizona to carry out a contract which was conditioned upon this legislation, and which will save them $75,000 yearly.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator from Wyoming allow me to ask him a question for information as to a matter of fact? Are the bonds now outstanding payable in lawful money of the United States or in gold?

Mr. CAREY. I will state that I understand the indebtedness of Arizona is a floating indebtedness in warrants which are drawing from 10 to 12 per cent per annum.

I want to state further that the currency of Arizona is gold. I suppose if you wanted currency in Arizona to-day you would have to pay a premium for it. The business of the Territory is done in gold.

I should like to call the attention of the Senate to a fact which does not seem to be understood on this floor. The Territory of Arizona passed a bill for the funding of its indebtedness in 1887. On June 25, 1890, Congress approved that act of Arizona. Arizona had not the right to pass such a funding bill, because of the restriction which had been placed upon the Territory. It came to Congress and asked Congress to approve the act which it had passed, and Congress did so. That act states in specific terms that the interest shall be paid in gold or its equivalent annually.

Mr. TELLER. "Lawful money."

Mr. CAREY. Lawful money annually. All that Arizona asks to-day is a simple amendment which changes the manner of the payment to a semiannual payment. It does not change at all the kind of money to be used. It involves, as I understand, a million and a half of indebtedness. That is a large indebtedness for the Territory of Arizona. The Delegate has stated to me within a few minutes that unless the bill can be passed in the way proposed by the Committee on Territories it will be of no use to them; that they have made a contract, and they have come to Congress for relief, not to discuss the gold question, for that has been discussed heretofore; and I have no doubt that most of the gentlemen who are opposing this measure to-day voted for that proposition. It is a simple proposition. Will you allow the people of Arizona to pay their interest semi-annually or pay it annually? If you permit them to pay it semi-annually they can dispose of their bonds. That is all. I do not see why the silver question should be brought up, and it looks to me as if those who are opposing this measure propose to drive Arizona off from the gold basis, which they have maintained there, I believe, since the Territory was organized.

Mr. KYLE. May I ask a question of the Senator?

Mr. CAREY. Certainly.

Mr. KYLE. If the people of Arizona are willing to pay in either gold or silver, who is it that now makes the demand for the payment of the interest in gold?

Mr. CAREY. I suppose it is the parties who propose to take these bonds.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] thought that probably he had more experience than I in reference to bonds. I will state to him that last summer—

Mr. TELLER. The Senator will allow me to say that I made no such statement.

Mr. CAREY. That you were better informed.

Mr. TELLER. I said that I was as well informed about the markets of the world as the Senator from Wyoming, and I will insist upon that.

Mr. CAREY. I was not discussing the subject of the markets of the world. I was discussing the question of the sale of municipal bonds of the West. I will state that two or three years ago the Territory of Wyoming wanted to sell about two or three hundred thousand dollars of bonds for building an insane asylum, a capitol, and a university, and the Territory sold them for 112, 6 per cent bonds. Last summer I was telegraphed by some of my people that they wanted to sell some water bonds, which they asked me to look after. I had an offer on those bonds of 104, payable in lawful money, but the silver agitation was in full blast, and when I went back the next day the broker insisted that the bonds should be made payable in gold. I telegraphed to our people under no circumstances to consent to a gold payment. I do not believe in putting gold into bonds, principal or interest. I believe the payment of interest on those bonds should be in lawful money. But when a Territory comes with a Territorial act, I believe that those people know best what is for their interests, and I am not willing to vote against that which they believe to be for their interests, but will concede to them what they want.

Mr. KYLE. I am not going to make a speech, but the Senator has answered my question by saying that it was at the request of the money-lenders of the East that it was proposed that these bonds should be paid in gold rather than in the lawful money of our country. I submit that it is owing to the established policy of the money-lenders of the East that many of our mortgages throughout the West at present are made payable in gold at some time in the future. That is bad enough as affecting our present ratio between the two metals, gold and silver. We therefore protest when these parties come before Congress—

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Arkansas in the chair). Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. KYLE. When I finish my sentence.

These parties come before Congress and have inserted a clause here which apparently gives legal sanction to the discrimination between gold and silver, thereby more materially affecting the parity between the two metals.

Mr. PLATT. It is now practically 2 o'clock, and the unfinished business is entitled to be laid before the Senate, but I ask if we can not have unanimous consent now to have this bill disposed of. I am not asking any new vote in the Senate. The Senate has voted in favor of the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota, and I am not seeking it to reverse its action now. I ask that the bill be disposed of if there are no further amendments.

Mr. GEORGE. Not to displace the special order.

Mr. PLATT. Not at all, but we can dispose of it in a minute, I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the resolution of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] relative to the appointment of a committee to inquire into the cause of the low price of cotton and the depressed condition of agriculture in the States raising cotton.

Mr. PLATT. Now, I ask unanimous consent that that resolution may be laid aside for a moment that we may have a vote on the bill which has been pending. I think the discussion is over.

Mr. PADDOCK. The resolution can be laid aside informally.

Mr. PLATT. If there is to be any further discussion, I shall withdraw the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to continuing the consideration of the bill which has been under consideration during the morning hour? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PLATT. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and request a committee of conference with the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. PLATT, Mr. JONES of Arkansas, and Mr. FAULKNER were appointed.

CONDITION OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask now that the resolution which is the special order may be considered. I will state that the objection which was made by one or two Senators the other day to this proposition has been withdrawn. I suppose it will only take a moment to pass the resolution. I think there will be no objection whatever to it. It was read at length the other day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] is before the Senate, and the pending question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, which will be read.

The SECRETARY read the amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, which was, to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to ascertain in every practicable way, and report from time to time to the Senate, the present condition of agriculture in the United States, and the present prices of agricultural products; and if there be any of which the prices are depressed, then the causes of such depression and the remedies therefor. And particularly whether the reports of the Department of Agriculture on the distribution and consumption of farm products, published from time to time by authority of the Secretary of Agriculture, contribute in any way to such depression of the market prices of such products, and whether any proper governmental purpose is subserved by such publication, and whether such publication should be continued.

And for this purpose that they be authorized, by subcommittee or otherwise, to sit during the recess and sessions of the Senate, at such times and places as they may deem advisable, to employ a stenographer and such clerical assistance and such experts as they may deem necessary, and that they be authorized to send for persons and papers, the expense of such investigation to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment to the resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

WEST VIRGINIA DIRECT TAX.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the special order for this hour, which is Senate joint resolution No. 9.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 9) to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the governor of the State of West Virginia the sum appropriated by the act of Congress entitled "An act to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress, approved August 5, 1861."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment heretofore submitted by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], which will be reported by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the end of the joint resolution the following as a new section:

SEC. 2. It is further provided that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested and instructed in respect to the bonds of Virginia held by the United States to make such settlement with the State of Virginia as a majority of the bondholders of that State have accepted or may accept through the bondholders' committee, and upon the receipt of such securities of Virginia as may be issued and apportioned to be received in lieu of the Virginia bonds held by the United States shall deliver them to the State of Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask now that the joint resolution may be read at length, with the amendments incorporated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be read as amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to the governor of the State of West Virginia, under the provisions, conditions, and limitations of the act of Congress entitled "An act to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861," which act was approved March 2, 1861, the sum of $181,306.93, less the sum of $27,328.18, which was paid to the governor of the State of West Virginia on the 25th day of August, 1891, to be held in trust for the citizens and inhabitants of said State, notwithstanding any claim by the Government of the United States against the State of Virginia.

SEC. 2. It is further provided that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested and instructed in respect to the bonds of Virginia held by the United States to make such settlement with the State of Virginia as a majority of the bondholders of that State have accepted or may accept through the bondholders' committee, and upon the receipt of such securities of Virginia as may be issued and apportioned to be received in lieu of the Virginia bonds held by the United States shall deliver them to the State of Virginia.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Calendar, under Rule IX, is now in order. The first bill on that Calendar will be stated.

The bill (S. 871) to provide for fortifications and other seacoast defenses was announced as first in order.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, am I mistaken in supposing that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, gave notice that he would call up, when these other matters were out of the way, a certain bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts yesterday gave notice, according to the recollection of the Chair, that as soon as the special order for this hour was disposed of he would call up a bill; but he has made no such motion.

Mr. PLATT. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the Calendar, under Rule VIII.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and the first bill on the Calendar will be stated.

The bill (S. 1588) for the relief of Charles B. Stivers was announced as first in order on the Calendar.

Mr. PLATT. What has become of Senate bill 1843, which stands at the head of the Calendar?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that it went over yesterday under some objection; that there was some mistake in the print, and it was sent to the Printing Office.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that Senate bill 1588 may go over. I see that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], who reported the bill, is not in his seat.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire that the bill shall take its place under Rule IX?

Mr. ALLISON. No; let it retain its place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will retain its place on the Calendar.

The bill (S. 1213) to encourage coöperation and to provide for the formation of associations in the District of Columbia for the purpose of conducting any lawful business and dividing the profits among the members thereof, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PLATT. I think perhaps that bill had better go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over without prejudice.

The bill (S. 1999) for the relief of John G. Rose was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALLISON. Let that go over. I see that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], who reported the bill, is not in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The bill (S. 1857) to further increase the naval establishment was announced as next in order.

Mr. PLATT. That bill had better go over, too.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. PLATT. The Senator who reported it is not here. I would not object if he were here; but it is a pretty important bill, and I suppose it will need some explanation. It may stand over until he comes in.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it stand over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over temporarily.

The bill (S. 2424) for the appointment of consuls to the Congo Free State was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALLISON. Let that bill be passed over for the present, until the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who reported it, comes in.

CHEYENNE AND ARAPAHOE RESERVATION.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I ask that the resolution reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs some days ago be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution called up by the gentleman from Arkansas, which will be read.

The resolution reported by Mr. JONES of Arkansas from the Committee on Indian Affairs on the 13th instant was read, as follows:

Resolved, That for reasons set forth in the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs upon the President's message of February 18, 1892, upon the appropriation of March 3, 1891, for payment to Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations for their interest in the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Reservation in the Indian Territory, submitted with this resolution, it is the opinion of the Senate that there is no sufficient reason for interference in the due execution of the law referred to.

Mr. ALLISON. That is an important matter. I hope the resolution will not be considered now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President—

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator allow me a moment. I should like to ask if the Senator from Iowa would be willing to have some time fixed at which we can consider this resolution. It is an important matter, and I should like to have it considered at some time within a day or two. I will agree, if the Senator is willing, to take it up, say, day after to-morrow, immediately after the morning hour, at 2 o'clock.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to the consideration of the question at any time when there is a full Senate and an opportunity may be given for its careful consideration. The Senator knows that this is an important matter, and it should be carefully considered.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If there is no objection, I should like to have a time fixed so that Senators may have notice that the resolution will come up at that time, and there can be a full consideration of it. I ask unanimous consent that the consideration of the resolution which has just been presented to the Senate be fixed for 2 o'clock on Thursday next, day after to-morrow.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall object to unanimous consent for consideration of this matter then. It is a matter of too much importance to be set down so early. At some time when we have an opportunity I shall be glad to see it taken up and considered, but it is a matter that can rest four or five days without public inconvenience, I think.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am perfectly willing to allow the resolution to remain any reasonable length of time, and would like to have the Senator indicate any time when he will be willing to take it up.

Mr. HOAR. Suppose the Senator give notice now that he will call it up some day next week, say Tuesday or Wednesday.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I would prefer to have a time fixed that would be agreeable to the Senator from Iowa. That is all I desire.

Mr. ALLISON. Has the resolution been reached on the Calendar now?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. No, it was reported by the committee and laid over.

Mr. PERKINS. I suggest that the Senator name Monday or Tuesday of next week.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am willing for that, or for any day that will be agreeable to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. I will confer with the Senator, and perhaps we can agree upon a time. I have not yet had time to look into the question. The Senator will remember that it is a matter of considerable importance, and I am quite sure that nobody will be injured by delay.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. My purpose in wishing to have a time fixed for the consideration of the resolution was that the Senate may be full, and that it may have due notice that the subject will come up at that time. I do not want to call it up in the absence of anybody here, and if we have a time fixed at which we can consider it, I suppose everybody who chooses to do so will be present. In pursuance of the suggestion made by the Senator from Massachusetts I give notice that I shall ask the Senate to consider the resolution at 2 o'clock on Monday next.

DISTRICT COURT OF APPEALS.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1185) to establish a court of appeals for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

Mr. HOAR. The amendments, which diminish the number of the court, I should like to have acted upon as the reading of the bill proceeds, if there be no objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and that course will be pursued.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, in section 1, line 6, before the words "associate justices," to strike out "three" and insert "two;" so as to make the section read:

That there shall be, and there is hereby established in the District of Columbia a court, to be known as the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, which shall consist of one chief justice and two associate justices, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall hold office during good behavior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 2, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seven" and insert "six," and in line 4, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seven" and insert "six;" so as to make the section read:

That the said justices shall each receive an annual salary of $6,000, payable quarterly at the Treasury of the United States, except the chief justice, who shall receive $6,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 5, before the word "dollars," to strike out "five hundred;" and in line 17, before the word "dollars," to strike out "five hundred;" so as to make the section read:

That there shall be a clerk of said court of appeals, to be appointed by the court, who shall receive as compensation for his services, in the discretion of the court, an annual salary not to exceed the sum of $3,000, payable quarterly at the Treasury of the United States, and who shall give bond, such as the court may determine to be satisfactory, for the faithful performance of his duties; and his duties shall be such as the court may from time to time prescribe. The court shall regulate from time to time the fees to be charged by the said clerk, which shall be accounted for at least once in each quarter and paid into the Treasury of the United States; and said clerk shall receive such allowance for clerical assistance and necessary expenditures in the conduct of his office as the court may determine by special or general order in the premises, but not to exceed the sum of $3,000 in any one year, payable, as aforesaid, at the Treasury of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 2, after the word "than," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" so as to read:

That the said court of appeals shall establish such terms of the court, not less than three in each year, as to it may seem proper and expedient; and it shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the transaction of the business to be brought before it, and for the time and method of the entry of appeals and for giving notice of appeals thereto from the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and such other rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper in the premises.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 15, to insert after the word "thereof," the words "or for any other reason whatever;" and in line 17, before the word "justices," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to read:

If any member of the court shall be absent on account of illness or other cause during the session thereof or shall be disqualified from hearing and determining any particular cause by having been of council therein, or by having as a justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia previously passed upon the merits thereof, or for any other reason whatever, or if for any reason whatever it shall be impracticable to obtain a full court of three justices, the member or members of the court who shall be present shall designate the justice or justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia to temporarily fill the vacancy or vacancies so created, and the justice or justices so designated shall sit in said court of appeals and perform the duties of a member thereof while such vacancy or vacancies shall exist.

Mr. HOAR. In line 18 I move to strike out "the" and insert "a;" so as to read: "shall designate a justice or justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 12 of section 7.

Mr. HOAR. In section 7, line 9, after the word "term," I move to strike out the words "together with the original papers and record entries duly certified." It is my purpose to put in a more comprehensive provision for that at the end of the section.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I move to insert in section 7, line 12, after the word "created"—a mere formal amendment—

Which said court of appeals is hereby vested with authority and jurisdiction to hear and determine the causes so transferred. The appellate power and jurisdiction of said general term is hereby abrogated and abolished, and no causes shall hereafter be heard in the said general term.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, in section 7, line 16, after the word "granting," to insert "or dissolving;" and in line 17, after the word "attachment," to strike out the words "and the like;" so as to read:

Appeals shall also be allowed to said court of appeals from all interlocutory orders of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, or by any justice thereof, whereby the possession of property is changed or affected, such as orders for the appointment of receivers, granting or dissolving injunctions, dissolving writs of attachment; and also from any other interlocutory order, in the discretion of said court of appeals, whenever it is made to appear to said court upon petition that it will be in the interests of justice to allow such appeal.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I move to add at the end of section 7:

In all cases of appeal to the court of appeals and in the causes transferred to the court of appeals under this section, the original papers and duly certified copies of the necessary record entries shall be transferred and delivered to the court of appeals under such regulations as the court of appeals shall from time to time prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of section 10.

Mr. HOAR. In section 10, line 2, after the word "be," I move to strike out:

Rendered in writing, and shall be filed in such case as part of the record thereof.

And to insert:

Reduced to writing, duly authenticated and filed with the clerk of said court before any judgment, decree, or order shall be entered in pursuance thereof.

So as to read:

That the opinion of the said court of appeals in every case shall be reduced to writing, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, in section 14, line 3, before the word "thousand," to strike out "six" and insert "five," and in line 5, before the word "thousand," to strike out "six" and insert "five;" so as to make the section read:

That the justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia shall hereafter receive an annual salary of $5,000 each, payable quarterly at the Treasury of the United States, except the chief justice, who shall receive $5,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

Mr. GEORGE. I move to strike out section 16 of the bill, in the following words:

SEC. 16. That the justices of the court of appeals hereby created and of the supreme court of the District of Columbia shall be deemed to be justices of the courts of the United States within the meaning of the law providing for the retirement of such justices upon their attaining the age of 70 years and having been in commission ten years or upward. And whenever any justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia shall be appointed a justice of the court of appeals hereby created the terms of service of such justice in both courts shall be deemed continuous and as under one commission for the purposes of said law.

I think this motion to amend is proper at this time, and upon it I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to appeal to my honorable friend from Mississippi with this suggestion: This very proposition, as applied to the Court of Claims, was very thoroughly debated in the Senate on last Thursday the yeas and nays called upon it, and it was determined by a very large and decisive vote of the Senate. I desire to ask the Senator whether under those circumstances, the principle having been so fully discussed, he should call for the yeas and nays?

Mr. GEORGE. I do not propose to discuss it.

Mr. HOAR. It was a vote that had no partisan division about it, because there were many on the Senator's side of the Chamber who advocated the system. I ask the Senator whether he will not allow it to go without a call of the yeas and nays? Of course I do not wish to interfere with his own discretion as a Senator.

Mr. GEORGE. I have no desire at all to discuss the question. I am very much opposed to civil pensions, and I desire, as far as I am concerned, to discharge my duty by making the appropriate motion to rid the bill of the provision.

Mr. HOAR. It can hardly be supposed, my honorable friend will agree, that there would have been a change of opinion on the subject in the mind of any Senator within a few days. There has been no change of the Senate, and it is merely for the convenience of the Senate that I make this appeal.

Mr. GEORGE. If nobody wants the yeas and nays I shall not call them. I make the motion to strike out section 16.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, to strike out section 16 of the bill. (Putting the question.) The yeas appear to have it. The noes have it, and the amendment is not agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. As the yeas and nays have not been called, I desire to state upon the record that I voted "yea," to strike out the clause.

Mr. COKE. I desire to make the same statement.

Mr. MILLS. I call for the yeas and nays, so that we may have a record of it.

Mr. HARRIS. Yes, let us have the yeas and nays, so that we may all appear on the record.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). Being paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN] and myself have consented, he being paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE], to transfer our pairs. I vote "yea."

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. MILLS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. If he were here I should vote "yea."

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR], but I observe that on last Thursday when a similar proposition was before the Senate upon another bill he voted adversely to a proposition of this kind. I will therefore vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON]. Otherwise I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DAVIS. I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

Mr. MORGAN. I will vote to make a quorum. I vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL. Has a quorum yet voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A quorum has not voted.

Mr. WALTHALL. I feel at liberty to vote, notwithstanding my pair, to make a quorum. I vote "yea."

Mr. GEORGE. If the vote still lacks a quorum, I can vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A quorum has voted.

The result was announced—yeas 11, nays 36; as follows:

YEAS—11.

Bate,	Blodgett,	Colquitt,	Morgan.
Berry	Cockrell,	Harris,	Walthall.
Blackburn.	Coke,	Jones, Ark.

NAYS—30.

Allen,	Hawley,	Perkins,	Squire,
Allison.	Hiscock,	Platt,	Stewart,
Call,	Hoar,	Power,	Stockbridge,

Davis,	Gorman,	Pasco,
Dawes,	Gray,	Pettigrew,

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and fifty-three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 20, 1892, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 19, 1892.

SURVEYOR OF CUSTOMS.

John R. Puryear, of Kentucky, to be surveyor of customs for the port of Paducah, in the State of Kentucky, to succeed John W. Cobbs, deceased.

PROMOTION IN THE ARMY.

Col. Frank Wheaton, Second Infantry, to be brigadier-general, April 18, 1892, vice Kautz, retired from active service.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 19, 1892.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

WHARFAGE OF MONITOR AMPHITRITE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, with its inclosures, requesting an appropriation to pay the Harlan and Hollingsworth Company, of Wilmington, Del., for wharfage, care, and protection of the monitor Amphitrite; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PRODUCTION OF PRECIOUS METALS IN THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the report of the Director of the Mint upon the production of the precious metals in the United States for the calendar year 1891; which, with accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and ordered to be printed.

DEFICIENCIES IN APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Attorney-General, with its inclosures, submitting estimates of deficiencies, actual and estimated, on account of appropriations under the control of the Department of Justice; which, with accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BRIG CALLOPE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the French spoliation claims arising out of the seizure of the vessel Brig Calliope; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following Senate bills; which were severally read a first and second time, referred to the committees indicated below, and ordered to be printed:

A bill (S. 2470) to amend the Articles of War, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 1273) to authorize the entry of lands chiefly valuable for building stone under the placer-mining laws—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. 1504) for the relief of David Dealy and Mary Younkin—to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

A bill (S. 1486) granting to the State of California 5 per cent of the net proceeds of the cash sales of public lands in said State—to the Committee on Education.

A bill (S. 2729) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes"—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 1797) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Kickapoo Indians in Oklahoma Territory and to make appropriations for carrying the same into effect—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER OF LABOR.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House Senate concurrent resolution for the printing of the annual report of the Commissioner of Labor.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, that resolution has been reported by the Committee of Printing of the House, and I ask that it now be considered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate resolution, which will be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 35,000 copies, in cloth binding, of the annual report of the Commissioner of Labor, relating to cost of production, earnings, efficiency of labor, and cost of living, 16,000 copies for use of members of the House of Representatives and 9,000 copies for the use of members of the Senate, and 11,000 copies for the use of the Department of Labor.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This is the regular report of the Commissioner of Labor, and the resolution is simply to authorize the printing of that annual report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I only want to say a word. Heretofore 54,000 copies of this work have been printed, but the Joint Committee on Printing agree that 35,000 is sufficient. The resolution has passed the Senate, and I ask unanimous consent that it be agreed to by the House.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 29), on the same subject, was ordered to be laid on the table.

NATIONAL BANK, BRANCH OFFICE, CHICAGO, ILL.

Mr. BACON, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back favorably with amendment the bill (H. R. 8001) to authorize a national bank at Chicago, Ill., to establish a branch office upon the grounds of the World's Columbian Exposition; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CAPT. JOHN G. BOURKE, UNITED STATES ARMY.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back the resolution in regard to the alleged misconduct of Capt. John G. Bourke, United States Army; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows: To Mr. LESTER of Georgia, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BYNUM, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WARWICK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 4429) to empower the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to grant respites and pardons in certain cases;

A bill (H. R. 5978) to extend the time for making an assessment of real estate in the District of Columbia outside the cities of Washington and Georgetown; and

A bill (H. R. 6286) to amend the charter of the Rock Creek Railroad Company.

VACATION OF LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Rules to report the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk, and I demand the previous question on its adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That all orders heretofore made granting general leave to print remarks are hereby vacated and set aside.

Mr. McMILLIN. I demand the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Does that not leave it open for debate for thirty minutes?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee whether it is the intention to have that rule take effect at once?

Mr. McMILLIN. It is the purpose that it take effect at once. The effect will be to operate from now; and I will state to my friend from New Jersey that it is a unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee to this fact. There are some members upon this floor who have not been transgressors in a certain line in the past, who have relied upon these leaves to print, and who have in good faith prepared matter upon the issues upon which said leaves were given to print and have not gotten that matter ready to go into the RECORD at this moment; and if it were ready, under the operation of the previous question upon this rule, this being adopted instantly, they could not get that matter into the RECORD, and in remedying an abuse which undoubtedly exists under the present arrangement, the gentleman is, unwittingly perhaps, doing injustice to gentlemen who in good faith have observed the letter and spirit of the rules of this House, and are left by the sudden change in a position which at least puts them in the attitude of having some of "love's labor lost."

Mr. McMILLIN. In response to what has been said by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] I will state that it is not the purpose of the Committee on Rules by this report to do injustice to anyone or to prevent a full discussion of the pending questions that are so important to the country. I will assure him further that it is the purpose of this side of the House to have considered at as early a day as possible two other bills relating to tariff duties, bills that have been already reported, and when they are considered I suppose there will be no difficulty in members getting an opportunity to discuss them fully.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I suggest to the gentleman that this resolution reported from the Committee on Rules simply withdraws the general leave to print, but does not prevent members from obtaining special leave.

Mr. McMILLIN. As suggested by my friend from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS], this report simply withdraws the general leave, but if any gentleman desires to get individual leave to print, that is something which the House can grant without reference to this resolution. The resolution is not intended to hamper the House in the least in granting to individuals in the future leave to print, or in granting general leave, but its effect will be to make that a matter under the control of the House.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the resolution be again reported.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] has the floor; but if there be no objection the resolution will be again reported.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Not in my time.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Now, Mr. Speaker, in response to what the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] has said, I will admit that the situation described by him is an ideal one, but unfortunately for some gentlemen upon this floor it is purely ideal, for it is well known that it is impossible for every gentleman to obtain the floor to discuss these matters either by the grace or without the grace of the committee, and it is also well known that some of those who do obtain the floor do not succeed, I suppose from the force of circumstances, in throwing the greatest possible light upon the particular questions at issue. It is impossible for as many gentlemen to obtain the floor as desire to be heard before the country. I say before the country, because we have arrived at a stage in our legislative experience when talk in this Chamber amounts to but little; it is addressed generally to some suffering chairman of the Committee of the Whole, who can not get away, and a few unemployed pages, and a great expanse of empty seats; but it goes out through the RECORD and through the periodicals to the people of the country, and those Representatives who desire thus to reach their constituents should have the means of doing so.

I know the trouble that it is sought to cure, and I am in entire sympathy with the attempt of the Committee on Rules. I voted the other day against laying the resolution of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] upon the table, because I thought this abuse should be remedied, but I was outvoted; and now I do not want, at the price of my attempt to do right upon that occasion, to be cut off from all avenues of reaching a constituency which, heretofore at least, has placed some confidence in the remarks that I have uttered. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] such time as he desires.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to ask the gentleman from Tennessee whether the Committee on Rules have taken into consideration the question of framing rules or regulations covering the matter of leave to print in the RECORD. We have had printed there already several volumes, obviously in violation of the whole spirit of the leave to print and of the rules of this House. Now, it seems to me that there may be rules framed that will properly guard this matter even when leaves to print are granted, so as to restrict the matter printed to that which is intended to be covered by the ordinary leave. Of course we all recognize the fact that there have been serious abuses of the leave to print within the last week or two, abuses which have led to the report of this order revoking the leaves that have been already granted. I concur with the committee in the desire to remedy this abuse, but I hope the matter will not be allowed to rest there, but that we shall have some system of rules and regulations framed that will serve to prevent these unexampled abuses and at the same time preserve the reasonable right of members in this matter.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has eight minutes remaining.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I reserve that.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, in response—

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question. There are some members of the House, and I am one of them, who made some remarks in Committee of the Whole in the discussion of the free-wool bill, but whose remarks were withheld for revision and have not yet appeared in the RECORD. Now, is it intended to cut off the privilege of such members to print the remarks thus made and withheld for revision?

Mr. McMILLIN. That question has not been discussed in the Committee on Rules, and hence I can state only my own opinion, but my opinion is that this report, if adopted, will not prevent gentlemen who have actually made remarks from revising those remarks and having them inserted in the RECORD.

In reply to the gentleman from New Jersey, I wish to state, Mr. Speaker, that it has been two weeks, if I keep the record accurately in my memory, since we voted on the wool bill, and a week from last Thursday we voted, I believe, on the other bill passed here. The committee was of the opinion that the period of two weeks during which members have had general leave to print was such as not to leave any gentleman with a grievance if the privilege were terminated now. And, as I stated, it was the intention to leave the matter with the House to grant hereafter such leave to individual members or to members in general as the House might see fit, guarding that leave in such manner as may be deemed proper.

Now, in reply to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], I will state that the committee did investigate somewhat, or at least consider, the question of a rule governing this matter. But any gentleman here who will attempt to frame a rule that shall give leave to print and yet place restrictions on it will realize how difficult the task is. And the committee were of opinion that the object would be accomplished by adopting this resolution, leaving the House when other bills may be considered either to give extensive time for debate or to give such leave to print as it may see proper at that time. I think this resolution will accomplish the whole object.

Mr. DINGLEY. Will the gentleman pardon a question?

Mr. McMILLIN. With pleasure.

Mr. DINGLEY. It is not, then, the intention of the committee to take any action respecting the large amount of matter that has been inserted in the RECORD contrary to the spirit of the rules within the last two weeks, which has been printed at the expense of the Government, and is now being distributed under the frank of members?

Mr. McMILLIN. That is a matter upon which the committee has not yet acted; and in advance of such action I do not feel authorized to speak so as to bind the committee. That is not the question here. The question is, what shall be done with this resolution?

Mr. Speaker, I reserve whatever time I have remaining.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has eleven minutes.

Mr. BERGEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question.

Mr. McMILLIN. Very well, I yield the gentleman one minute for that purpose.

Mr. BERGEN. I would like to know whether the gentleman does not think that this proposed resolution puts this matter in a very unfair situation—unfair to this side of the House? Of course the gentleman has known, and members of his party have probably known for some time, that such a resolution as this was contemplated; and now to bring the resolution into the House in this way at the present time without any notice at all—does not that appear to the gentleman to be taking an unfair advantage?

Mr. McMILLIN. In reply to the gentleman, I state unhesitatingly that nothing unfair has been contemplated, and no unfairness appears to be involved in this proceeding. Both sides of the House were represented in the Committee on Rules; and this report is not the action of our side alone; it was the action as well of representatives of the gentleman's own party members of the Committee on Rules. It appears to me no injustice can result; no member can have cause to complain, if after the lapse of two weeks he has not placed in the RECORD what he wanted to put there as his remarks on the wool bill.

Mr. BERGEN. But the gentleman will bear in mind that this side of the House undertook the other day what it thought a proper thing to do in a matter of this kind—to expunge from the RECORD those things which had been put into it in violation of the spirit of the rules.

I wish to ask the gentleman another question, whether all of Henry George's book has been printed in the RECORD?

Mr. McMILLIN. I have not paid close enough attention to the matter to speak positively as to what has been already printed. So far as any complaint in this matter is concerned, I will state to the gentleman that a member of this House, sitting not 15 feet from him, has published the same matter in the RECORD twice.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the rest of my time.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I resume the floor, and yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL].

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, there is one thing that strikes me in reference to this question. The more matter there may be printed in the RECORD, the more time this House has in which to transact its business. [Laughter.] Gentlemen can make short speeches, and then they can have leave to print—

A MEMBER. Long ones.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. And we can have the pleasure of reading what they print the next day in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It gives us all great pleasure to read the speeches that we have not heard pronounced on the floor. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, individually I wish to state how this rule if adopted will bear upon me. I have had it in contemplation to make some remarks upon some of the appropriation bills as they may come up in their turn in this House. I have been looking for material with which to illustrate my points in an argument occupying the five or ten minutes which might be allowed me. I have carefully cut out extracts from newspapers and preserved them. I want to pay proper compliments to my constituents [applause]; and I have two articles written by particular friends of mine—men noted in the scientific world and otherwise; and my idea was that when I might get up to occupy the floor on the sundry civil bill, or the legislative appropriation bill, I might be indulged in inserting in my remarks what these gentlemen have said. But if you adopt this resolution to-day I presume I shall be deprived of that privilege, and thus be denied the opportunity of sending out to the country important matter written by men of great scientific and other attainments who are constituents of mine.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, after listening to the explanation of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] I do not hesitate to say that his report does an injustice. I know he does not mean to be unfair; but such will be the effect of this action. The effect will be to let every guilty man escape, and to punish every innocent one. Those who have already transgressed the spirit of the rule by printing in the RECORD matter which had nothing, or at least very little, to do with the subject under discussion, and which was written, not by themselves but by others perhaps as distinguished, will be allowed to retain that matter in the RECORD, while others, who have not transgressed at all, will not be allowed to print even their own lucubrations in that esteemed and flourishing periodical.

Now, how will this resolution operate in my own case? As is known to some members of the House, the condition of my health during the past few weeks has been such that I have scarcely been able to keep up with my current work.

I violated this morning all sanitary precautions by arising at an usually early hour, and before 7 o'clock was sitting at my desk penning some burning words on the tariff. I know that they are burning words, at least I know they are dry enough to burn; and I want in some way or other to spread these matters before the gaze of a waiting world. [Laughter.] If I can, by permission of some gentleman, have an opportunity, when the next tariff bill is under discussion, to give forth the benefit of my observations on this question, I shall be perfectly content, so far as I am individually concerned. But if the rule be adopted in the terms proposed, it may do an aspiring youth, albeit a modest one, a great injustice. [Laughter.]

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. McMILLIN. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER].

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I doubt not that the rule presented to the House this morning from the Committee on Rules is the outgrowth of the fact that the RECORD, which in my judgment ought to be simply a journal of the proceedings of this House, an accurate transcript of what actually takes place, has been filled with a great deal of extraneous matter, as the House has witnessed during the last week or two, which should not have been printed under the general leave to print. The rule reported this morning is designed to revoke the permission heretofore given to print, in order that there may be no further violation of the proper rule that should apply in reference to such matters; and as an indication to the House itself, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] has said that at some future time the Committee on Rules will probably present another rule on this subject, although, undoubtedly, a very difficult matter to deal with.

But it is at least an indication to the House that it ought to be very chary about giving this unstinted leave to print, generally, on subjects under discussion before the House. If a gentleman is interrupted in his speech, as the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] so eloquently explained this morning, or rather interrupted in his contemplated speech, he ought to be allowed the opportunity of submitting it in some shape to the House. But it can hardly be said that this leave to print is of any practical value in reference to legislation in the House long after a bill or resolution to which it refers has been acted upon. And in answer to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL], to whom I always listen with a great deal of pleasure, I can only say he can never apply to the House for permission to add to any remarks, which he has submitted on the floor, when it would ever be denied him for a moment.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. I am very much obliged to my friend from Mississippi. Thank you.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. There need be no apprehension on the part of any gentleman who wants to extend legitimate remarks on a subject actually under discussion in the House as to the extension of that privilege in all proper cases.

But, I take it, Mr. Speaker, that the action in the present case has been rendered imperiously necessary by the publication in the RECORD of a vast mass of extraneous matter not at all pertinent to the subject under discussion. It would be well if this right could be protected and yet materially restricted.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman from Mississippi allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Do you not think it would be better to have expunged from the RECORD, at the time we made a motion to that effect a few days ago, all of this extraneous matter published up to that time?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I think not, for the reason that that would have been a harsh measure in reference to gentlemen who had already printed, and I think it would have also been a great injustice to the gentleman from Maine himself, for that action would have excluded an article that he himself had published. But not having taken that action, we ought at least now to see that no further abuse of the RECORD shall be committed.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Let me state to the gentleman from Mississippi that that action would not have been an injustice to me, for my article was not published until afterwards, and was only published then in retaliation for what had been done by gentlemen on the other side of the House.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. That only shows that the gentleman himself committed the same wrong that he protests against by publishing extraneous matter in the RECORD which ought not to have been published under the general leave to print, and since two wrongs do not make a right, he ought to stand corrected by this rule.

Mr. MILLIKEN. You ought to correct the rule first.

Mr. McMILLIN. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS].

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, this proposition, I desire to say, is the unanimous report of the Committee on Rules. It is made necessary by what must be apparent now to every member of the House, by the gross abuse of the general leave granted to members to print remarks in the RECORD. I sought, it will be remembered, very early to refer this infringement of our rules to the Committee on Printing, with a view to correct the abuse at the outset, when it was first discovered that some gentlemen on the other side of the House, conspiring together, had secured the printing in the public RECORD of an entire volume of Henry George.

We on this side of the House believed that the publishing of that book in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD was the grossest violation of the privileges of this House, and that no member with any proper sense of propriety could have entered into any such conspiracy; but on a motion to refer the matter to a committee of this House to inquire into the propriety of such conduct we were voted down, and the majority of the House declared that such publication was entirely proper. That being so, there was no recourse for the minority except to meet, as we have, the action of the majority, by publishing such documents as we saw fit in answer to the free-trade screed of Mr. George. About the only thing you have accomplished and the sum total of your achievements is to commit the Democratic party absolutely to the doctrine of free trade, bald and simple. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

In addition to that, you have committed your party, upon a yea-and-nay vote, to the monstrous doctrines of Henry George in their fullest scope, and used the public record and the money of the people to distribute that document at their expense. And not only that, but if you will examine the extracts from that book, adopted by the Democratic party, it will be found you have also committed your party to the single-tax doctrine and the abrogation of all duties; and the last chapter, published by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STONE], denounces the farmer, as the owner of land, as the chief robber of all. [Laughter.] That he is the party who is robbing the people by pretending to own land, when in fact it belongs to all the people. The Democratic party having committed itself to these monstrous principles, I am not surprised, and indeed I very heartily join in the recommendation of the Committee on Rules, that it is proposed to stop the performance, with the view of saving the Democratic party from absolute annihilation. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

A MEMBER on the Republican side. From suicide.

Mr. BURROWS. And now one word. This order to print was granted on the 12th day of March. Some gentlemen on this side think we are cutting them off a little early. As I say, this order to print was made on the 12th of March, and it is now the 19th day of April. The bill passed the House and from its consideration on the 7th of April. Now, all gentlemen who desire to print have undoubtedly availed themselves of the opportunity before this time. If they have not, I am quite sure if any gentleman shall rise in the House after the adoption of this order and say that he has remarks prepared upon the wool question which he has not had the opportunity to deliver, and will satisfy the House that they are entirely proper and presented in good faith, he will have no difficulty in getting leave to print them in the RECORD.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I want to ask the gentleman from Michigan, who is a member of the Committee on Rules, a question—

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. McMILLIN. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WARNER] for one minute.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, there may be reasons why this resolution should not be adopted, but they are not involved in the suggestions made by our friends on the other side, that the resolution is an oppression upon them. And since the wolf charged the lamb with muddying the spring, there has never been a case of greater assurance. When the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] called attention to the fact that the RECORD had been perverted, as he claims, he knew—because he is too well posted to give him the excuse of ignorance—that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] had already incorporated in the RECORD column after column of the screed of Mr. Roswell G. Horr.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Two columns—

Mr. WARNER. And instead of making a motion that would have been promptly adopted by this House without any question whatever, to refer the whole matter of how far such privilege should be exercised under the leave to print, he made a special attack upon the action, under the leave to print, of certain other gentlemen, and made it in such shape that no self-respecting House could adopt the resolution.

Mr. PICKLER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will yield another minute to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. WARNER. Now, sir, if there is anything that appears plainly upon the RECORD as it now stands, it is this: That the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], knowing the extent to which his colleagues had already abused the privilege, possibly anticipating the extent to which they were already prepared to avail themselves of it, could they get an excuse, offered this resolution in a shape which must be voted down by any self-respecting House; and we now have the results in the advantage which his colleagues on the Republican side have taken of the action of the House.

Mr. BURROWS. Will my friend state on what day the article was printed in the RECORD by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER].

Mr. BUTLER. It is dated the 11th day of April.

Mr. WARNER. I find in the debate had upon the resolution of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], on the 15th day of April, 1892, that my colleague [Mr. FITHIAN] called attention to the fact that in the daily RECORD, pages 3453 and 3454, had already appeared the letter of Mr. Horr, inserted by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER].

Here the hammer fell.

Mr. McMILLIN. I yield half a minute to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, the House knows that the two best speeches made on this question, which were made by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER], have not yet been printed.

Several MEMBERS. Mr. WILSON's speech has been printed.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I ask, in view of this fact, that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] will allow the amendment which I am about to offer.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman that the previous question has been ordered, and that no amendment is in order.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent to allow this amendment:

Provided, That this resolution shall not be construed to prevent any member who has spoken upon any bill upon which leave to print has been granted from revising his remarks and incorporating therein tables and minor extracts explanatory of his argument.

Mr. McMILLIN. I have already stated that it was not the purpose of the committee to prevent a gentleman from revising his own remarks heretofore made.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Would it prevent him from extending his remarks?

Mr. McMILLIN. I think not, when of his own production.

Mr. PICKLER. Does not that cut off any further discussion of the silver question?

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER].

Mr. DOLLIVER. I would not occupy the time of the House except for the reason that I believe my offense in no sense justifies the offense which it is cited to excuse. I printed in the RECORD, without consultation with anybody, according to the custom which has long prevailed in the House, a letter of Mr. Horr, of the New York Tribune, consisting of less than two columns; and how any man in his senses can use that performance as an excuse for the printing of a whole volume in the RECORD I do not see.

Mr. McMILLIN. Why did the gentleman print it a second time? [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DOLLIVER. I printed it a second time because the Public Printer omitted from the original publication the material part of the letter to which I desired to call the attention of the country; because by the mutilation of my first copy my original intention had been frustrated, and for the general reason that after the vote taken in the House it was evident that it was entirely indifferent to the majority what was printed or how often it was printed.

Mr. FITHIAN. That will not do. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] printed exactly the same caption to both speeches.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. When we were discussing the free-coinage bill there was yielded to me a little time by my friend from Illinois [Mr. TAYLOR], who controlled the time on this side of the House, and instead of saying what I had intended to say I spent the time in replying to the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] in regard to who was responsible for the demonetization of silver in 1873, and finding that I had consumed my time, I took leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and I withheld my remarks until I could have an opportunity of seeing the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH], which were withheld for revision, and before I had an opportunity of revising my remarks I went away and have been absent since then, and have not had an opportunity of seeing his speech or of printing my remarks. I shall therefore, at the proper time, ask unanimous consent to print my remarks, as his speech will be incomplete without my reply to it.

Mr. PICKLER. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PICKLER. This resolution is general. I desire to inquire upon what bills this cuts off the leave to print, and whether the adoption of the resolution will permit any further debate in this House on the free coinage of silver?

The SPEAKER. The Chair can only state the substance of the resolution, which is that all general leaves to print heretofore granted are vacated and set aside.

Mr. PICKLER. Now, my question is, what questions are those?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not informed as to any special bills.

Mr. PICKLER. We ought to make a record of that.

The SPEAKER. It covers all. [Cries of "Regular order!"] The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

INVESTIGATION OF BALTIMORE POST-OFFICE.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I submit a report from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I simply rise to make a personal request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman withhold it for a moment?

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I submit a report on House resolution 57.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to which resolution No. 57, introduced by Mr. RICHARDSON, was referred, recommend that the accompanying amendment thereto be adopted, and that as so amended the said resolution be agreed to.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas in May, 1891, Mr. Theodore Roosevelt, Civil Service Commissioner, after a careful and extensive investigation concerning political assessments, and the use of official influence in the Federal offices to control elections in Baltimore, reported to the United States Civil Service Commission the following conclusions:

1. That a number of Federal officeholders took an active part in the primary elections of the Republican party.
2. That considerable sums of money were raised by these officials, partly contributed by themselves and partly by their fellow-officials, and were spent by certain of their number chosen for the purpose in paying the political expenses in these elections.
3. That certain of these officials by their own testimony admitted that they had violated the statutes of the United States touching the civil service, the punishment, upon conviction of said violations, being dismissal from office and fine and imprisonment.

And whereas in view of these violations of law, Commissioner Roosevelt recommended the removal of certain officials specified by him as guilty of such violations of law, and his findings and recommendations were concurred in by the whole Commission in a report addressed to the President;

And whereas resolutions have recently been adopted by the Civil Service Reform Association of Maryland, calling attention to the fact that, so far as is known to the public, no official action whatever has been taken in consequence of this report:

Resolved, That the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service is hereby authorized to make such inquiry in regard to the matter as they may think proper, and, if necessary, to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, and report to the House.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by striking out all after the word "hereby," in the resolution, and inserting the following:

"Directed to investigate and report to the House:

"First. Whether all or any of the officials found by the investigation and report of the Civil Service Commission to have violated the law are still in office.

"Second. Whether any of such officials have been indicted or proceeded against in the courts on account of such alleged violation of the law.

"The said committee shall have authority to sit during the session of the House, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to report to the House at any time.

"The expenses of this inquiry shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, on vouchers approved by the chairman of said committee."

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question on the adoption of the report.

Mr. DINGLEY. I hope the gentleman will explain the change that is made by the amendment. I believe the original resolution as introduced directed the investigation of the President of the United States, and this is a resolution of inquiry.

Mr. CATCHINGS. My friend from Maine is entirely mistaken, Mr. Speaker. The resolution does not involve an investigation of the President of the United States.

My friend from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] was afraid that the phraseology was such that it might bear that construction, but it was not the intention that it should have any such construction. However, the proposed amendment entirely obviates that difficulty, and I think that the resolution as it has been reported from the committee is entirely free from any objection.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the resolution be again read.

The report in full was again read.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, is debate in order on this?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] has demanded the previous question.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Well, that allows fifteen minutes' debate on either side, as I understand.

The SPEAKER. But there has been debate, and, that being the case, no debate is in order after the previous question is ordered.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. There has been debate on this?

The SPEAKER. There has been debate.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. There were some questions put, but I did not understand that that was debate.

The SPEAKER. The rules provide that where there has been no debate before the ordering of the previous question thirty minutes' debate shall be allowed afterwards, fifteen minutes on each side, but where there has been debate before the ordering of the previous question, even though limited in amount, none is in order afterwards.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. If the Speaker construes the question put by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] to the gentleman in charge of the resolution as debate, the rule applies; but I did not apprehend that it would be so held by the Speaker. I desire to know if it is the purpose of the committee reporting this resolution to limit the Committee on Civil Service Reform simply to the consideration of the question whether the parties reported upon by the Civil Service Commission are still in office?

I will state to the gentleman that I understand—I do not know whether I am correctly informed or not, but I understand—that an investigation has been made by the Post-Office Department and that that report does not agree with the report of the Civil Service Commission; so it seems to me that if there is to be an investigation of this matter the committee investigating ought to be clothed with power to inquire whether, in the first place, there has been in fact any violation of the civil-service law, and if so, secondly, whether the parties who have violated it are still in office. As I understand these resolutions, however, they compel us to accept the conclusion of the Civil Service Commission as correct, and, assuming their investigation to be correct, our committee are to determine whether the parties concerned are still in office.

Now, I submit that that is not just or proper. I submit that if we are to have an investigation of this subject at all the committee that is to make it ought to be clothed with authority to investigate the truth or falsity of the charge that is made by the Civil Service Commission. No wrongdoing should be charged against the authorities at Baltimore without their having an opportunity of showing that the charges against them are false and unfounded.

Mr. RAYNER. That is right.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. And I appeal to the gentleman in charge of this report to modify it to the extent of allowing the committee of investigation to inquire into the correctness of the charge itself.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I assume as a matter of course that if there has been sufficient reason for the failure to discharge these officials who have been charged by the report of the Civil Service Commission with violation of the civil-service law, the committee of this House directed to make this investigation will be very glad to have laid before them any report which may have been made to the Postmaster-General or to any other official which justifies or seems to justify the retention of these parties in office. Indeed, I think I am warranted in saying that it would be a very great satisfaction to the committee to have Mr. Wanamaker present them with a copy of the report to which the gentleman from Illinois alludes. I think the resolution as it is drawn is broad enough. The country understands very well that there has been two reports upon this subject.

The report made by Mr. Roosevelt has been published and is accessible. Any gentleman who desires to examine it can send and get a copy of it. The report made to Mr. Wanamaker seems to have been kept secret. It has never been published; it has never been given out to the country; and therefore we can not assume here that there is a report which would justify the retention of these officials. The difference between the two reports is this: The report made by Mr. Roosevelt, charging these officials with this offense, is in print as a Government document, of which any gentleman can get a copy; but if there is a report taking a position adverse to this the country has not been advised of it. There have been rumors, and I presume it is a fact, that the Postmaster-General did have a report made to him by certain officials who were sent to Baltimore to investigate this question; but, as I have said, that report has never been given to the country, and therefore, prima facie, the case is, that these officers who have been charged by one of the officials of the Government with repeated violations of the civil-service law remain in office to-day. Now, if there is any justification for their retention in office, it can undoubtedly be shown upon this investigation.

Mr. BOUTELLE. What is the charge? What is the offense said to have been committed by these people?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. If the gentleman will allow me right there, I wish to ask him whether he sees any objection to modifying the report so as to direct the committee to investigate the truth of these allegations?

Mr. CATCHINGS. I do. I see a very serious difficulty. It is not contemplated that this committee shall be sent to Baltimore to enter upon an investigation which will take three or four weeks of their time.

We simply want to ascertain whether Mr. Roosevelt has made this report, whether there has been a contrary report, and just what the facts are. When information upon these questions has been reported to the House, it will then be in order for the House to take such steps as it may deem proper. But we certainly do not intend, if we can help it, that this committee shall now be sent off to Baltimore to investigate all these questions which have been investigated by Mr. Roosevelt and the results submitted to the country in his published report.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will the gentleman answer my inquiry?

Mr. CATCHINGS. I did not hear it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I want to know what is the general charge against these officers.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Oh, Mr. Speaker, I have no time to go into that question, and I decline to do so.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I simply want to know what is the general charge against these people.

A MEMBER. Attending political "primaries."

Mr. CATCHINGS. I will send you the report, and you can examine it for yourself.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Is it the charge that they attended a political caucus?

Mr. CATCHINGS. The gentleman can read this report to-night.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I would not spend so much time over it.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me—

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know how this debate is going on.

Mr. BOWERS. It is a "go-as-you-please" debate.

The SPEAKER. The debate has been proceeding with the consent of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS].

Mr. CATCHINGS. I never gave my consent.

The SPEAKER. Different gentlemen sought the floor, and the Chair indulged them because the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] did not object.

Mr. CATCHINGS. That was not my understanding; or I would have taken means to close the debate.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Mississippi demands the previous question the Chair will submit it.

Mr. BURROWS. If the previous question be ordered, of course debate will be cut off; therefore, before the question is put, I ask the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I will gladly yield if I may be permitted to do so without waiving my rights.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Mississippi after the gentleman from Michigan is through.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I desire only to say that it was impossible for the minority of the Committee on Rules to agree with the majority in recommending the adoption of this resolution. It will be observed that it proposes to make an investigation into two things: First, whether certain officers who were alleged to have been guilty of violating some statute in connection with elections still continue in office or have been removed; and, secondly, whether those officers have been prosecuted for the offense charged. Now, Mr. Speaker, the criticism made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] has very great force. By this resolution the committee is not called upon to inquire into the question whether these charges were true or not.

Mr. BOUTELLE. They do not care anything about that.

Mr. BURROWS. The committee is not requested or directed to ascertain whether this report of the Civil Service Commission was true or false; but it is to accept the report as binding so far as showing that certain parties did violate the United States statutes in connection with a certain election; and then the committee is to inquire whether those officers have been dismissed or have been prosecuted.

Mr. CATCHINGS. My friend must admit that as the case now stands we are justified in assuming that—

Mr. BURROWS. I am quite sure, however, that if it should be disclosed that these parties have not been discharged from office or have not been prosecuted, the committee would come far short of its duty to the public did it not inquire into the reason why they have not been dismissed or prosecuted, and that inquiry might disclose the fact that it was discovered upon investigation that the charges were wholly unfounded and no such report as has been made was authorized by the facts.

Mr. CATCHINGS. But my friend will understand that that was not the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois. His proposition was that this committee should be required themselves to investigate these charges—

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. No, sir.

Mr. CATCHINGS. That was exactly what my friend from Illinois said.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Oh, no.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say only this: If the only purpose be to ascertain whether certain officers named are still in office or have been dismissed, and whether they have been prosecuted or not, a simple resolution of inquiry directed to the Attorney-General would elicit the information desired. If a resolution of inquiry were directed to the head of the Department having this matter in charge, this information could be obtained in twenty-four hours. But, of course, a formal investigation makes the matter more imposing than a simple resolution of inquiry would be.

Mr. CATCHINGS. If my friend understands this matter, he must see that this resolution does more than he states. It proposes to give this committee authority, which they have not now, to make such reasonable investigation in the general direction of this resolution as they may think proper.

Mr. BURROWS. The resolution contemplates an inquiry into only two questions—first, whether these parties are still in office—

Mr. CATCHINGS. The resolution as offered undoubtedly authorizes the committee to inquire into the fact whether the Postmaster-General has had such report made to him as appeared to justify his action in the case.

Mr. BURROWS. Allow me to make this inquiry, which perhaps will meet the difficulty; if it should be found by the committee that the parties named are still in office, or if dismissed have not been prosecuted, does my friend hold that the committee will be authorized to inquire into the reasons why they have not been dismissed or why they have not been prosecuted?

Mr. CATCHINGS. But, Mr. Speaker, unquestionably, if this report of the committee is adopted by the House, the committee would be entirely warranted in the course of their investigation of this question directly submitted, to accept from the Department any explanation they might suggest as to why they did not discharge these officers, or why, if guilty, no indictment was presented against them.

Mr. BURROWS. Then it will be understood, I presume, that the committee will be directed to inquire into the reasons why there was no prosecution?

Mr. ANDREW. From the Department.

Mr. CATCHINGS. With that limitation. But if the question of the gentleman carries the idea that this committee is expected to go to Baltimore to examine witnesses, and determine as to the truth or untruth of the charges that have been made, then I say no. But if my friend wants it understood that they shall accept such explanation as the Department may desire to give them I say yes.

Mr. ALLEN. Let me suggest to my colleague if it would not be well enough to put into the resolution the fact that if the report of the Civil Service Commission fails to inquire, it would inquire whether or not they are still in office?

Mr. BURROWS. Exactly.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I have no doubt whatever that we will get at all of the facts necessary in this investigation.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Will the gentleman from Mississippi permit me to ask this question? It can not be possible if one bureau of the Government—the Civil Service Commission—holds and has declared that the civil-service law has been violated and a great Department of the Government says that it has not been violated—

Mr. O'FERRALL. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa will suspend, and the gentleman from Virginia will state his question of order.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I desire to know under what rule the House is proceeding at this time?

The SPEAKER. There is no limit to this debate unless the previous question is ordered. The report of the Committee on Rules is being discussed.

Mr. CATCHINGS. In answer to the question, which I think I understand, of the gentleman from Iowa—

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Permit me one moment further. I say that where two Departments of the Government—or the Civil Service Commission and a Department—have declared directly opposite things, whether that committee will accept the one which says these parties are guilty and ignore the one which says they are not guilty.

Mr. CATCHINGS. My friend must understand that that is not a question pertinent to this discussion. I have already stated to the gentleman from Michigan that so far as the public knows there has been but one report on this question, and that is the report of the Civil Service Commission, which is to the effect that the law in question has been grossly violated.

Now, if there is another report, as I said before, the country has not been advised of it. There have been, I will concede, rumors, and doubtless it is true, that there has been another report. But if there is one made by the Postmaster-General, or any other Department of the Government, which would seem to justify the retention of these employés, of course we will be glad to have it, and unquestionably the committee will ascertain and report the facts.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Then, as I understand it, the gentleman concedes that it will be the duty of the committee to inquire of the Post-Office Department touching these facts?

Mr. ANDREW. Certainly.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I have already made that statement. Now I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; under the operation of which the amendment was agreed to, and the report of the committee as amended was adopted.

On motion of Mr. CATCHINGS, the motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, in view of the contested-election case to be called up at this time, that gentlemen having reports from committees may hand them in at the Clerk's desk for proper reference.

There was no objection.

NOYES VS. ROCKWELL.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Mr. Speaker, I now call up for consideration the contested-election case of Noyes against Rockwell, from the Twenty-eighth district of the State of New York.

The SPEAKER. The resolutions will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Hosea H. Rockwell was not elected a Representative to the Fifty-second Congress from the Twenty-eighth Congressional district of New York and is not entitled to the seat.

Resolved, That Henry T. Noyes was elected a Representative to the Fifty-second Congress from the Twenty-eighth Congressional district of New York and is entitled to the seat.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like, if possible, to come to some arrangement with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB], who filed the minority report in this case, as to the time to be consumed. I will state that in a conversation with the gentleman from Alabama we agreed that five hours on each side would not be an unreasonable time. I ask, therefore, the unanimous consent of the House that five hours on each side be allowed for the discussion of this question. I understand that is satisfactory to the other side.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, this is a matter in which the whole House takes a great interest; and while I believe that some time ago the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] felt that five hours' time would be enough, yet I am authorized to say that many gentlemen who desire to speak and to hear this case thoroughly argued feel that a greater length of time should be had, and I ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] to insist upon or ask for six hours on a side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. O'FERRALL] submits a request that in the consideration of the pending election case debate be limited to five hours on a side.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I agreed with the chairman of the committee that we would be content with five hours on a side; but as suggested by my colleague from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] and by other gentlemen, that there are more gentlemen who desire to express themselves upon this case than I had any knowledge of at the time—

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. And to hear the matter thoroughly discussed.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] suggests to me that we have plenty of time now, and he also suggests that we may have six hours on a side. Has the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. O'FERRALL] any objection to that, if the House will agree to it?

Mr. O'FERRALL. I have no disposition, Mr. Speaker, to cut off debate in this case. I am perfectly willing that there should be full latitude given, not only to the minority to express their views, but to the majority. So far as I am concerned, if it is the pleasure of the House to give six hours on a side, I shall not object.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Are not five hours enough?

Mr. O'FERRALL. I have thought five hours enough time. That was the understanding between the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] and myself. I have no disposition to cut off debate, or to allow any one to say that I am disposed to stifle debate upon this case.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I do not want my colleague on the committee to understand that I am going back on any agreement. But if he is willing to have six hours on a side, under the circumstances—

Mr. O'FERRALL. I think we had better submit the original proposition to the House, for five hours on a side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. O'FERRALL] asks unanimous consent that debate on the pending election case be limited to five hours on a side. Is there objection?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. O'FERRALL] will proceed.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I move that the debate on this case be limited to five hours on a side.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest that that motion would not be in order, but the gentleman can give notice that at the expiration of a certain time he will move the previous question.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Then we will proceed without any limit. Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. You had better agree to six hours, and that will settle it. I will suggest to the gentleman—

Mr. O'FERRALL. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LAWSON] whatever time he may desire in the opening of this case.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Let me ask the gentleman to agree to six hours, so that gentlemen can arrange their argument with a view to that time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LAWSON] is recognized, and the House will be in order.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, this inquiry and investigation arise out of a Congressional election held in the year 1890, in the Twenty-eighth district of New York, composed of the counties of Chemung, Seneca, Schuyler, and Tompkins. It is a judicial question, and depends for solution upon the law and the facts of the case; and I shall endeavor to present the law and the facts as briefly as I can, consistently with clearness and fullness. The committee, after a careful and painstaking investigation, decided that Mr. Noyes, the contestant, was entitled to the seat, and that Mr. Rockwell, though holding the certificate from the proper authorities of his State, is not, upon a fair investigation of the case, entitled to that certificate.

The committee at the outset of its business during this session determined that it would examine all contested cases in the spirit of fairness, of truth, and of justice, and that no man should be ousted from his office in this House arbitrarily, as has been the case in many instances heretofore.

The trouble arose out of the methods which the county canvassers of the election adopted in making their returns. In respect to the canvassing of votes and making returns, the law of New York is somewhat peculiar. I do not know of any other State that prescribes the same provisions in regard to the canvass of votes and the returns of the officers.

In order that the House may have a clear conception of the origin of this inquiry and contest, it is proper for me to explain to some extent the methods which the law of New York requires to be adopted in the canvass of votes. It is required of the election inspectors that immediately after the close of the polls the votes shall be canvassed, and that three returns shall be made of those votes, to be distributed as I shall mention hereafter, before there is an adjournment of the election officers. This must be made at once. The law requires that the returns shall be of this character: After all the votes are counted it is the duty of the election inspectors to write upon the face of the return the whole number of votes cast at that precinct, and also the number of votes received by each candidate. These must all be written fully, not in figures, but in letters.

In addition to that it is required that the election inspectors at the same time, and before adjournment, shall paste to the back of the return a sample copy of every different kind of ballot which was cast at that election. The remaining ballots are required to be immediately destroyed, and upon that sample copy they shall write out the number of ballots of the identical kinds cast at that point. The election inspectors of six election districts in the county of Chemung and the city of Elmira failed to execute this law fully in that they failed to attach and number the sample ballots.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Mr. Speaker, it has been said that this is an important question, and if it is, I trust members will preserve order and hear it discussed.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. I can not expect, Mr. Speaker, to interest people who have already made up their minds. I believe if there is any gentleman here who has not made up his mind on the question, who desires to consider the question fairly, honestly, and judicially, he may possibly get some information from what I shall say, and what I shall read in the course of my remarks.

As I was going on to say, the election inspectors in six precincts in the city of Elmira failed to carry out this law with reference to the canvass and return of the votes thus cast completely. They did make up the returns so far as they were required to do it on the face of them. They did count the votes and enter the number of the votes on the face of the report; but they failed to paste on the back of these returns a sample of each one of the ballots, and failed to state how many ballots of these different kinds were cast in these different polling places.

It is proper just here to say that they were voting under a new law, which was then for the first time used in the State of New York, and the election inspectors in many of the districts, being inexperienced men, did not know that regulation still prevailed. They were, in many instances, advised that it was not necessary for them to attach these sample ballots; and in one instance, particularly, I remember, a lawyer of Elmira, a Republican watcher, or officer engaged in the election, perhaps an inspector, advised them that it was not necessary to make the return under this new law, as it had been done under the old law. However that may be, the ballots were not attached to the returns in these different places. The next day when the return was presented to the board of canvassers, the clerk refused to receive the returns because of the absence of these ballots, and then the inspectors of the district were reassembled and recounted the votes cast. In some instances they recounted all the ballots, and then attached the sample ballots on the back of the report with the necessary statement as to the numbers cast.

Now, when the county canvassers—

Mr. WATSON. The great confusion seems to arise behind the seats.

The SPEAKER. The point is well taken. The House will please be in order. Gentlemen in the rear of the seats will please preserve order, or retire to the cloak room. The confusion comes largely from the rear of the seats.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. The county canvassers, when they came to make up their reports and to transmit their returns to the State canvassing board, made up their return from the ballots entered upon the back of the returns; and in all of those cases in which there was this apparent discrepancy between the number entered upon the face of the report, and the numbers entered upon the back of the returned ballots, the canvassers concluded that a canvass made from the face of the ballots on the back would be the more accurate method to determine who was elected.

That gave the election to Mr. Rockwell, the sitting member. Upon that being done, Mr. Noyes appealed to a special term of the supreme court of New York, sued out a writ of mandamus against the county canvassers, requiring them to again canvass the votes entered upon the face of the report and not upon the ballots on the back.

Now, lest there should be some confusion, I will explain that the supreme court is not the highest court in that State, as in many States. It is the second court from the highest, the court of appeals being the highest. The judge who gave that judgment against Mr. Rockwell was sitting in special term, and Mr. Rockwell appealed through the county canvassers to the general term of the supreme court consisting of three judges.

Upon consideration of the case in general term the three judges affirmed the judgment of the one judge who sat in special term. From this judgment there was again an appeal to the court of appeals, consisting of five Democratic and two Republican judges; and that court upon hearing affirmed the decision of the court below, and the county canvassers were peremptorily ordered to reconvene, recanvass, and retabulate the vote from the face of the report and not from the back. Upon that recanvass and recount of the vote it appears that Mr. Noyes was elected. Meanwhile, before all the courts had decided the question of appeal, the board of State canvassers had convened and issued the certificate to Mr. Rockwell.

Now, the question is, who was legally and properly entitled to the seat? The committee thought that in the beginning it was proper under the instructions of the court to consider the vote returned upon the face of the returns as the proper vote to be considered; first, because it was the decision of the State court and we thought that we could not go far wrong by considering the case as presented by that court, and that, indeed, it was proper for the committee, in the construction of a State law, to be controlled to a certain extent by the decision of the State courts, especially when that decision was made upon the specific law in question and in the case under investigation by the committee.

I will read what the court of appeals say in regard to this recount: what instructions they give to the committee, if the instructions are worth anything. I will not contend that it is absolutely binding upon us, but I say it is a proper thing to be considered. When we come to determine how these questions, originating in the State of New York, shall be decided, the question is, shall we consider them in the manner which the New York courts say is the proper method, or shall we depart from that and originate a method of our own? We thought it was safest to adhere to the method prescribed by the courts of that State as far as it would throw any light upon the subject. And in this case the court of appeals, which is the highest court of the State of New York, used these words:

In a government resting wholly on popular suffrage, few questions can ever come before the court so intimately connected with the very structure of political society, and exerting such a wide influence upon the public welfare, as those concerning the enforcement and construction of the laws relating to elections and the canvass and return of the votes. The act of the inspectors inspecting the vote in the body of the paper, the certificate that the same is correct, and the signature of each of them to the certificate is, so far as the county canvassers are concerned, fundamental, jurisdictional, and controlling; while the words of the ballot are subordinate and incidental, and the duty of the inspectors in respect to the same is probably directory merely.

Now, that decision confronted us at the initiation of the investigation. We adopted it for what it was worth. Of course the question in the case is, who is entitled to the office? Not as to mere forms and methods of deciding how the vote should be counted, but who received the plurality or the majority of votes on that occasion. Therefore our investigation necessarily had to be extended into the manner of casting of the votes and the legality of the election and the legality of the returns themselves in order to ascertain to which of the candidates the office should be given. And after a painstaking investigation the committee was unable to find any reason to justify them in departing from the face of the return as embodying the true tabulation of the votes cast.

Why should we not take the recount as correct and controlling evidence of the number of votes cast? I state, in the first instance, that it should not be taken because it was unauthorized and contrary to law, and the law of the State of New York—I have it here if any gentleman wishes to read it—requires that immediately upon the conclusion of the canvass the inspectors shall adjourn. Their body is then dissolved. They have no further jurisdiction or authority. They are functus officio; and when the next day, or within the next two days, they assembled and attempted to recount the votes, they were nothing but a body of unauthorized interlopers.

Furthermore, the law requires that the ballots shall be destroyed immediately, before the adjournment of the election inspectors. Hence in contemplation of law there was nothing to be recounted. There was no legal testimony that could be resorted to in the shape of existing ballots. In the next place, in order for a recount to be of value, the ballots should have been carefully preserved; they should have been in some proper custody; they should not have been tampered with nor placed where they were liable to be tampered with by any unauthorized person. Yet the evidence is very clear that very little consideration was given to their preservation.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I desire to ask the gentleman a question for information. In speaking of the recount, does he refer alone to the five districts in the city of Elmira and in that county?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. And not to any other?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. And not to any other. But there were six districts instead of five. I do not maintain now, Mr. Speaker, that because the law authorized and required the ballots to be destroyed that therefore in the event they were not destroyed we would be prohibited from an examination of them to ascertain which candidate received the greatest number of legal ballots. This House may if it chooses go beyond that, and there is no physical limit to its prerogative. I do not maintain that. What I maintain is that the ballots had no existence in contemplation of law and that the board of inspectors had no existence in contemplation of law at the time of the recount; and, therefore, that it was unauthorized and contrary to the express provisions of the statutes of New York, under which the election was held.

But if we admit that the ballots ought to have been recounted, that they would cast any light upon this investigation, then we say they were not properly preserved. There seems to have been no purpose on the part of the election inspectors to preserve them securely and effectively. I presume they did not suppose there would ever be any occasion for a reexamination of them and hence they made no diligent effort to preserve them. I will read from page 5 of the majority report to inform the House as to the security of their preservation:

How were the ballots preserved?

There was no safeguard whatever thrown around them; they were in the custody of no one upon whom any responsibility rested; there was no care taken of them with a view to a possible recount; they were left exposed in every instance so that they could have been despoiled by the unscrupulous without fear of punishment, for they were in law as mere worthless paper. Full and ample opportunity was given to tamper with them and to change them.

In two instances there was no evidence whatever as to how they had been preserved or where they had been kept, the parties who had taken charge of them not having been examined as witnesses. In another instance they were left overnight and for twenty-four hours in the voting booth, a frail structure, and with simply a strip of white paper pasted partly around the box with mudlage, which it was not even necessary to break or tear when the box was opened. In another instance they were sealed with sealing wax, and with no stamp or mark on them, taken by one of the inspectors to his house and put in a little room, "just off from his dining room," where they remained until late in the evening of the 6th November (about forty-eight hours), when they were taken by him to the polling place and recounted. In another instance they were sealed with sealing wax, with no stamp or mark on them, and taken by one of the clerks to the house of one of the inspectors, and, according to his testimony, put in his dining room "in his writing desk," according to the testimony of his son, "on his writing desk," and on the following day they were taken to the clerk's office by him, and then back to his house by the clerks, and then recounted.

The law in regard to this question is that—

Before courts or legislative bodies can give weight to the results of a recount of ballots there must be absolute proof that the ballot box containing such ballots has been safely kept, and that the ballots are the identical ballots cast at the election.

I read this from Payne on Elections; the citation will be found in the majority report.

Another reason why we failed to give credence to the recount of the ballots was because the law of New York provides abundant and efficient machinery to make the first count a perfect one. There ought not to be any mistake about it. The report of the election inspectors, if they use the means and opportunities they have of making correct returns, ought to be absolutely perfect. There can be no error or discrepancy in the matter if the election officers do their duty, and they are presumed to have done it. The law of New York provides that there shall be in the first place five inspectors at each voting place, two of whom are to act as ballot clerks or distributors to the electors.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. The gentleman will allow me to ask what length of time elapsed between the casting of the votes at the election and the recount.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Some of the ballots were recounted the next morning, some the next afternoon, and I believe in one or two instances some were recounted on the second day afterward.

Mr. O'FERRALL. The evening of the second day.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. As I am informed by the chairman of the committee, some were recounted on the evening of the second day after the election.

As I was saying, there are five election inspectors. There are also two Federal supervisors, to act at each of the places where the votes are cast. There is also at least one election watcher belonging to each of the dominant parties. The latter are authorized to remain near the voting booth all day, are at liberty to challenge any voter, and then when the time comes for the counting and canvassing of the ballots they are permitted to go inside to witness the opening of the ballots, to examine the face of the ballots and see that the count is correctly made. The supervisors and the inspectors also have this right. You will find in all these instances, I believe, a statement by the officers that the count was carefully, though at times hurriedly, made in each instance.

Mr. HEARD. Does the law require that the inspectors shall be politically divided between the dominant parties?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Three belong to one of the dominant parties and two to the other. The watchers are also divided between the parties; so are the supervisors. It is provided in the law that each of the dominant parties shall be represented in the counting of the vote, and what I mean by the dominant parties are the parties which polled the highest number of votes respectively at the next preceding election. Four different parties had candidates to be voted for on this occasion.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. The gentleman spoke of the length of time that elapsed after the election and before the recount. Is it not true that in the third district, Fifth ward, there never was a recount?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. There was one ward in which there never was a recount; but that is not one of the six in regard to which complaint is made.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Is it not true that in one case the vote as recorded on the outside of the ballot after the recount showed 7 more for Rockwell than the original return?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Yes, sir. I will allude to that before I conclude my argument.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. And if that record were correct, it would elect Mr. Rockwell?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Yes, if true it would elect him. I will allude to that before concluding my argument.

Now, as I was remarking before the interruption, if the machinery provided by the law had been properly used, if the law had been in all respects complied with, it would have rendered a mistake or an error impossible; it would have rendered a discrepancy between the face of the returns and the indorsement upon the votes impossible. Now, we contend that in all these cases the canvass was done carefully. It was done in the presence of all the officers I have named. The ballots were opened and inspected by every one of these authorized individuals who desired to inspect them. The count was thus made up. The tally clerks compared their count in some instances with that of the supervisors to see that the count was perfectly correct.

In this manner the returns were made up on the night of the election, before there had been an adjournment, before other precincts could be heard from, before the state of the vote in the district as between the two candidates could possibly be known. These counts were made up before extraneous influences could have been exerted upon the inspectors, and before there was any temptation to make a false return. I do not mean to intimate that the inspectors were influenced by any improper consideration, because I find nothing in the evidence in this case to impugn the motives or integrity of any of the inspectors, supervisors, or clerks—of any person legally connected with this business.

But I say, after the regular legal count was concluded there was opportunity for these extraneous influences; there was knowledge of how the canvass had gone; there was opportunity for people who were not inspectors and who had no legal connection with the vote to tamper with the ballots. If you will read the report you will see that very little care was taken of these ballots after they were cast and counted; they were accessible to any person who might have an interest or a purpose to tamper with them. And therefore, Mr. Speaker, the report of the majority of the committee has excluded this recount as altogether unreliable, and we do it, we think, in pursuance of the law which is applicable to the case.

As I have already said, sir, it is somewhat like a judicial investigation, involving both questions of law and fact, and it is necessary in the discussion of such a question to read principles of law here and there bearing upon particular facts at issue in the case. Here is a decision of a court bearing upon this question to the effect that—

A canvassing board, after once counting the votes and declaring the result according to law, has no power or authority to make a recount.

Mr. DICKERSON. Is that the New York law?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. No; this a Missouri authority.

When this duty is once duly performed it is performed once and forever, and can not be repeated.

In New York the statute is mandatory on the subject that the vote must be canvassed and the result ascertained and publicly proclaimed and the ballots destroyed before adjournment. When the adjournment occurs the board is functus officio for all purposes except one, the exception being that if it is found that there are clerical errors in their return they may be reconvened by the board of county canvassers to make a correction of such clerical error. But the law which provides for the reconvening of the inspectors expressly says that when they reconvene they can not change the decision which has been already made, after the count is concluded, and that their only function is to correct clerical errors; that the first decision must stand as made.

I read in this connection from McCrary on the Law of Elections, section 232, the report of the Committee on Elections in the Forty-second Congress in the case of Gooding vs. Wilson:

On examination of precedents it does not appear that this House favors the setting aside of official and formal counts, made with all the safeguards required by law, on evidence only of subsequent informal and unofficial counts without such safeguards. No instance was cited at the hearing where the person entitled by the official count was deprived of his seat by a subsequent unofficial count. On the principle it would seem that if such a thing were, in the absence of fraud in the official count, in any case admissible, it should be permitted only when the ballot boxes had been so kept as to be conclusive of the identity of the ballots, and when the subsequent count was made with safeguards equivalent to those provided by law.

And that reminds me, Mr. Speaker, that I omitted to state that these recounts were not made in any instance in the presence of all of the election officers. It was made in one instance in the presence of all of the inspectors of election, but not in the presence of the supervisors. The recount was made in other instances in the presence only of a part of the inspectors. Therefore the local machinery, even if the law so provided, was not brought into action when the recounts were made.

That being the state of facts, as the committee found them, it decided that the count made as directed by the court of errors of the State of New York should stand, and that it gave a small majority or plurality, as the case may be, in favor of Mr. Noyes, and that he was therefore entitled to the seat. But Mr. Rockwell's attorneys contended that the record and evidence as then made up on the face of the return should be purged of some illegal votes, which it appeared to them had been counted in favor of Mr. Noyes. That was done by the committee. There was one unregistered voter—

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question just there?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. In the recount to which you have called attention, and for which you say there was no authority, there were tally sheets kept, were there not?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. The record was kept on the day of the election.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. But did that tally sheet and the name and number of electors correspond with the number of votes found in the box?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. It did on the first count. They did not recount and compare the tally sheets on the second day, but merely counted the ballots and pasted sample ballots on the election return, as I understand.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. And on that second count the tally sheets tallied with the lists. It was admitted in the argument before the committee that there is no discrepancy as to the number of the ballots.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Then the second count corresponded with the names on the tally lists?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. That may be. I am not clear in my recollection about that, but I can not see how the taking of a number of votes from one candidate and giving them to another would affect the total vote on tally sheet; but to pass on. We gave Mr. Rockwell a vote which had been cast in the wrong ballot box and took from Mr. Noyes two votes that had been purchased. The contention was further that there were certain marked ballots which should have been thrown out.

Mr. HERBERT. Before the gentleman passes from this point will he permit a question?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. HERBERT. Was there any difference between the number of ballots, as counted on the evening of the election, and the tally sheets themselves?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. There was in one instance, I remember, a difference of one vote.

Mr. HERBERT. What was that?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. That was in a ward that I have not spoken of yet, an election precinct that I have not mentioned at all, but which I will mention before I get through.

Mr. HERBERT. I understand you that the tally sheets and the number of votes in the second count agreed.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] said that.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. That is admitted to be true.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. I am not so certain as to the second count. My impression was that in the second count there was no special attention given to the poll list. But the changes did not affect the total vote; only the number of votes received by each candidate was changed by the recount.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. If my colleague will allow me to refresh his memory, when this matter was being discussed before the committee, I put that question to the attorney for the contestant and he said expressly that there was no difference between the tally sheets and the number of ballots on the second count; the only discrepancy was as to the division of the ballots between the two contending parties here, the contestant and the contestee.

Mr. ROCKWELL. And the majority report says the same thing.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. And the majority report says the same thing.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. I do not deny that.

Mr. HERBERT. I understand, then, that the tally sheets and the number of votes agreed in the first count and in the second count also.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Yes, sir.

Mr. HERBERT. And the question then really is as to the division of the votes between these two parties.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. That is the whole of it.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order. I wish to call attention to the fact that there are but five Republicans listening to this argument. I presume, of course, that they are not going to vote on this question at all. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. It was contended that there were sixteen other votes that ought to have been excluded from this count, which votes were known as the Doyle votes. In two of the precincts in Elmira the name of Judge Earl, a candidate for reelection to the court of appeals, who was on both tickets, was erased, and the name of Doyle—

Mr. TRACEY. That was in Seneca County, I think; in Waterloo.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. I thank the gentleman. He is correct. In the town of Waterloo and in two polling places the name of Judge Earl, who headed both tickets, was erased, and in place of his name was written the name of a fictitious person, A. Doyle, B. Doyle, C. Doyle, etc., making 16 votes, which were counted in this instance in favor of Mr. Noyes by the majority of the committee, because the committee found no good reason to cast them out. Now, it will be argued, I presume, by the minority of the committee, that those votes were bribed, purchased, and fraudulent, but there is no evidence whatever in the record as to that fact except as to one of them, and the evidence in his case is only inferential.

Mr. FELLOWS. Will the gentleman permit me to make an inquiry here?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Yes, sir.

Mr. FELLOWS. Since at some point in the discussion I shall reply, I desire to ask the gentleman if it is conceded by the majority that if the 16 Doyle ballots are rejected as illegal ballots, then is it conceded that Rockwell is entitled to his seat?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Certainly; there are only 6 votes difference.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Oh, no, and I have no doubt that my colleague [Mr. LAWSON] and myself agree; for if the 16 Doyle ballots are to be excluded, then there are 28 ballots that are marked for Rockwell that will come under the same rule.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Now, I say at the outset that there is no evidence touching these three purchased voters which shows that they voted the Doyle ballot, except perhaps as to one, and that is shown, if shown at all, by inference. It is stated that Mr. Ferris, a man who refused to sign his affidavit upon the last examination, voted a Doyle ballot. He does say in his evidence that he voted a Doyle ballot; but when we come to see where he voted, and into what box he placed his vote, it was not in the district where the Doyle ballots were polled. The Doyle ballots were polled in the fourth and fifth districts of Waterloo. Ferris voted in the second district of Waterloo.

As to another one, Sheridan, it is alleged that he voted a Doyle ballot because he received his ballot from a man named McArthur, in whose writing the name Doyle was shown to be; but Sheridan did not vote in either one of the districts where the Doyle ballots were found. Sheridan voted in the third district, and not in the fourth or in the fifth, all of which appears from the evidence in the record. Mr. Green, another man who says he was purchased—and, by the way, he is a Republican, and was bought by a Republican to vote the Republican ticket, as he states in his evidence—did cast his vote in one of the polling places where the Doyle ballots were found; but he does not say what kind of a vote he cast, and there is not a scintilla of positive evidence to show that he voted a Doyle ballot.

We do not know anything about these Doyle ballots. They may have been innocently cast by some people, for all we know, and for an entirely different purpose to that alleged. There were several other candidates besides the candidates for Congress, and some other individual may have fixed up this scheme. We do not know whether these ballots were invalid or not. We do not know whether they were fraudulent or not. There is no evidence whatever to show that they were fraudulent; and even if they are fraudulent, we do not know in whose favor the fraud was committed, whether for the candidate for Congress or for other candidates, of whom there were many.

It is in evidence that the same people who were alleged to be trading in votes on that day, and who are said to have purchased the votes of Ferris, Sheridan, and Green were equally zealous in behalf of the entire ticket.

They were Republican committeemen and ardent and zealous on election day, and they were equally industrious and equally earnest and zealous in behalf of the entire ticket as well as the candidate for Congress [Mr. Noyes]. That is the testimony in the case, and on that kind of testimony we have no authority whatever to throw out the Doyle ballots; and it is alleged and will be contended by the minority of the committee that there was a conspiracy in which three men—Mongin, McArthur, and Harmon—were engaged for the purchase of electors on that day. Harmon had been a Democratic officeholder, but it seems that on this occasion he was an active and aggressive Republican committeeman, and was very officious, as it appears, in getting votes for the Republican party. The other two men—McArthur and Mongin—were Republicans. Now, what is the evidence that there was a conspiracy between them, if it is contended that there was a conspiracy between these three men—what is the evidence?

It was to this extent only that Mongin and Harmon met in the morning of the election in Harmon's saloon and had a short conference. The evidence further is, touching this particular question, that Harmon sometime during the day told Attingen, a voter, that there was nothing in it for him and that he could not pay him anything, but to go to the Third ward and see McArthur; and the further evidence is that Mongin placed a small roll of bills in the hands of Warren and requested him to hand them to an unknown person whom he pointed out on the street. Now, that is the sum total of the evidence that there was a conspiracy. There was no plot, no plan, no agreement, no concert of action, no coöperation, no union of purpose disclosed by the evidence save as I have stated. But suppose we assume that there was a conspiracy, what was the effect of it? The effect is only to impute turpitude and criminality to the conspirators; it does not enlarge or extend the crime.

Mr. TERRY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. TERRY. Do I understand the gentleman to say that there is nothing in the evidence to show that Harmon and McArthur were acting together?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Harmon sent a voter to McArthur, as I before stated; that is all I remember of any kind.

Mr. TERRY. He told the voter that he could go down there where the money was to be obtained.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. He did not say that money could be obtained. The voter asked Harmon if there was anything in it for him, and Harmon told him that he could not give him anything, but to go to McArthur.

But suppose there was a conspiracy—I have given you all the evidence of it—does it make it any worse, in the event some voter was bribed, than if there had not been a conspiracy. The whole effect of the conspiracy, the whole substance of the evidence relating to the conspirators, amounts to this: that if there was a conspiracy it imputes the turpitude of each one to them all alike; but it does not enlarge the scope of the crime; does not increase its turpitude, nor impart to it an effect more far-reaching than if it had been committed by one man only.

To illustrate, if the voters who cast the A. Doyle ballot were bribed to do so by the conspirators, the fact that a conspiracy existed would no more infect with corrupt purpose the voters who cast the B. Doyle ballot than if there were no conspiracy. In any event each person who voted a Doyle ballot must be judged by the facts attending his own case and not by the facts connected with either of the others. We can not affirm without evidence that because one man was bribed to vote a Doyle ballot, that therefore all who voted the Doyle ballots were bribed, no more than we can affirm that because one man who voted for Noyes was bribed, therefore all who voted for Noyes were bribed. The cry of conspiracy ought not to supply the place of evidence. It seems to me that a voter suspected of receiving a bribe ought to be judged as if he were on trial for the crime in a court of justice, presumed innocent until proven guilty by evidence which leaves no reasonable doubt, or by circumstances so clear and satisfactory as to exclude every rational hypothesis of innocence.

If it is true that there was a conspiracy, and that this man Green was bribed by them, and that he voted a "Doyle" ballot, still it would not indicate that anybody else was bribed by them.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. As I understand, the first "Doyle" ballot commenced with the letter "A" and went on down regularly the alphabet.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. They commenced with "A" and went on down regularly.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. I understand you to say that in a different precinct only one such ballot was found?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. There were 16 voted, 5 at one and 11 at another precinct.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Now, the point I want to ask is whether there was any such person as "Doyle"?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. The evidence is that Doyle was a fictitious person.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Now, what is your solution of that word "Doyle" on the ballot?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. I think it identified the ballot.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Now, why did they want to identify the ballot?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. I do not know. There is no evidence on that point. I can imagine many reasons why, but neither might be the correct one.

Mr. RAYNER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. RAYNER. If the name "A," "B," and "C." Doyle were all found upon these ballots it was for the purpose of identification.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. By no means. Conceding that they were put there for the purpose of identification by the person who put them on the ballot there is no evidence that the voter put them there or knew for what purpose they were put there. They were all in the handwriting of one man.

Mr. HOUK of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question? Suppose a conspiracy, not for the purpose of serving their own personal interest, but for the purpose of advancing the interest of the candidate in whose employ they are, does not the guilt of conspiracy attach then to the party in whose interest they were acting and not confined to themselves personally?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. There is nothing in the record to warrant that assumption. I must decline to answer a question which impliedly imputes wrongdoing to persons who possibly are innocent, because in this case there is nothing to impute wrongdoing, so far as I understand the evidence, either to Mr. Noyes or Mr. Rockwell, or to any of Mr. Rockwell's friends on the day of election.

Mr. RAYNER. Let me ask the gentleman another question for information—for, of course, the gentleman's argument is an eminently fair one—if these names (indicating on the ballot) were put here for identification, is the ballot a good ballot or a void ballot under the New York law?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. It is a good ballot.

Mr. RAYNER. Why?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. It has to be counted, and is not expressly or impliedly condemned by the New York statute.

Mr. RAYNER. If the names were put there for identification?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAYNER. Why is it a good ballot?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. The law of New York does not punish a man for voting a marked ballot; it punishes him for disclosing the secrecy of the ballot.

Mr. RAYNER. No, sir; it says:

No voter shall place any mark upon his ballot by means of which it can be identified as the one voted by him.

Whoever shall violate any provision of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

That is the law, and the unbending principle of law is that where the law makes an act a misdemeanor it makes that act unlawful and prohibits it. If the gentleman wants authorities upon that point, I can give him a hundred.

Mr. O'FERRALL. And I can give you a hundred to the contrary.

Mr. RAYNER. We will come to that further on. I will refer the gentleman to the law books, and I say again that the authorities all hold that where an act is made a misdemeanor the commission of that act is prohibited and is unlawful.

Mr. O'FERRALL. The authorities are precisely the other way.

Mr. HAYES of Iowa (to Mr. RAYNER). If that is not the law it ought to be.

Mr. RAYNER. It is the law.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama and other gentlemen addressed the Chair.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Mr. Speaker, I appeal for order, and that the gentleman from Georgia be allowed to go on with his argument without interruption.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Certainly, I will yield for a question, because I wish a thorough discussion of everything in the case.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Georgia how he reconciles this contradiction, that the same ballot which sends the man who voted it to prison can send the man for whom it was voted to Congress?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. I would like to answer first some of those that have been already asked, but I will hear the gentleman's question.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Mr. Speaker, I think it is apparent to everyone that the object and purpose of these interruptions is to interfere with the argument of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LAWSON].

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, I protest against the interruption of the gentleman from Virginia. I am dealing with the gentleman from Georgia. I have not addressed the gentleman from Virginia, and I hope the exigencies of this debate will not force me to do so.

Mr. O'FERRALL. And I am dealing with the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COCKRAN. You have no right to, for the gentleman from New York will not deal with you. I appeal to the Chair. I have asked the gentleman from Georgia whether he will yield to me for a question and he has said that he will.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And when the gentleman from Georgia yields, the gentleman from New York will be recognized.

Mr. COCKRAN. He has yielded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LAWSON] yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Yes, sir. I said I would hear the gentleman's question.

Mr. COCKRAN. Suppose those ballots were marked A, B, C, D, E, F, G, H, without the word "Doyle" upon them, and those marks had all been identified as being in the handwriting of one of the "workers" around the polling place, would the gentleman from Georgia then consider that they were marked ballots?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. I would. Any mark by which they could be identified would make them marked ballots.

Mr. COCKRAN. One more question. The report concedes that the name "Doyle" is fictitious.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Yes, sir.

Mr. COCKRAN: How, then, does the name "Doyle" after these alphabetical marks render the ballots any less marked ballots?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. It does not make any difference whether they were marked "A," "B," "C," and so forth, or "A. Doyle," or "B. Doyle," or "C. Doyle;" the question is, were they marked for the purpose of identification, and did the man who voted them know it? The law says that no voter shall place any mark upon his ballot by which it can be identified. Now, I have said that there is no law in New York which punishes a man for voting a marked ballot. The ballot prohibited must be so marked as to distinguish it from every other ballot. Why is that prohibition made? In order that the secrecy and sanctity of the ballot box may be preserved and for no other purpose. It is also a misdemeanor for a voter to exhibit his ballot to another and thus disclose for whom he is voting. Ought that vote to be thrown out? Hence I say that the vote is a legal one, although the manner of casting it may have been illegal. The vote being merely marked does not exclude it. It has to be counted; it must be received by the inspectors and they must count it.

But if the man who votes it marks it for the purpose of identification, then he has committed a misdemeanor. But by no means do I concede that even in that event the vote itself must be cast out. The law which the gentleman on my right [Mr. RAYNER] refers me to is a law relating to contracts, not a law relating to elections. It is a law relating to contracts between parties. If a contract is such as to be malum in se, involving moral turpitude, it is void ab initio, and may be abrogated by any of the courts of the country. No rights can spring out of such contracts. There are other contracts which are prohibited by law that are not void, and a man may be punished for entering into them without the contracts themselves being void.

If you buy a horse on Sunday, it is against the law; in many of the States it is a misdemeanor; but your contract is not a void one except to this extent: that the courts withhold from you all means of enforcing the contract. The court leaves the parties to the contract where it finds them and leaves the contract as it finds it. If you can enforce it otherwise it is a good contract, binds everybody, and you obtain a good title to the horse.

Mr. RAYNER. But you can not enforce it.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. You can not enforce it in the courts; and to that extent only it is void. So in regard to these votes. A marked vote is not void. There is no moral turpitude in casting a marked vote; the law does not denounce a man for casting a marked vote; but if the vote is cast with the intention that it shall be identified, if it is cast for the purpose of disclosing how the party voted, that is a violation of the law. The only purpose of the law is to preserve the secrecy of the ballot inviolable, in order that the weak and humble man may be protected against the wealthy and powerful.

The law of the State of New York requires all these votes to be counted, and it nowhere invalidates them either expressly or by implication, and, with deference to the gentleman, I affirm that he can not find any law anywhere that invalidates the ballot thus cast. This is my answer to both gentlemen. In the case of these 16 Doyle ballots there is no evidence whatever that a single voter who put those tickets into the ballot box knew the mark was on them. Probably he may have known; but there is no evidence of it. The mark might have been placed there in the interest of a candidate at that election for some other office. McArthur put the marks on those ballots; there is no doubt of that; but the people who voted them may have done so in perfect innocence. McArthur may have had some ulterior reason for placing those marks on the ballots, a reason altogether unknown to the voter, who may have cast the ballot in perfect innocence, without knowing that there was any imputation to be cast upon him in that regard. So far as we know, that was the manner in which they were voted, because there is no evidence to the contrary, and we can imagine many reasons for thus marking them wholly consistent with the innocence of the voter.

Mr. HAYES of Iowa. Is it not a fact that the law of New York makes it an offense for anyone to give another one a marked ballot, no matter whether the voter himself knows that it is marked? It may be marked in order to enable a person who is buying votes to know how the elector votes; but the voter himself may not know that it is marked.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. If the man who casts the ballot does not know that it is marked, the vote would undoubtedly be legal. There is no penalty, as I now remember, against the person who furnishes a marked ballot.

Now, it is alleged that as this name Doyle was admittedly a fictitious one, and as 16 ballots cast were thus marked, these ballots are placed under suspicion, a suspicion of sufficient force to justify the ballot being rejected. Gentlemen have spoken about contracts. There are some contracts which always rest under suspicion whenever they are brought into question—under such a load of suspicion as to defeat the contracts, unless the suspicion can be removed.

Contracts between a wife and an insolvent husband to the detriment of his creditors—contracts between near relatives to the detriment of anybody—contracts between people who occupy fiduciary or confidential relations are ab initio under suspicion—a suspicion sufficient to destroy them whenever they are called in question in any court, unless sufficient evidence be shown to remove the suspicion. The law prohibits contracts of that sort being made except upon fair, just, and equal terms, and arbitrarily denounces them as fraudulent, unless their innocence be shown.

But these votes do not come under any such rule. There is no such suspicion resting upon these votes as is calculated to invalidate them. The voter must be affirmatively shown to have been corrupted to void the ballot. To disclose for whom one voted is not a corrupt act, and can not invalidate the ballot.

If any one affirms that these votes were bought he must prove it. In an inquiry of this kind every affirmation must be proved by the person who asserts it, not by the person who denies it. Here were Harmon, McArthur, and Mongin. If there was suspicion resting upon these votes, and Mr. Rockwell wished to sift the matter to the bottom, it devolved on him to produce the proof, all other parties could rest on the presumption of innocence in their favor, he held the affirmative. He could have had these witnesses subpoenaed; he could have had their consciences sifted to ascertain the truth of this matter, and the laws of New York grant them immunity from prosecution in such cases even though they confess their own guilt. Now, I must leave the Doyle ballots. There is a good deal more that might be said upon that part of the case; but I have consumed a great deal more time than I ought to have done on account of the interruptions which have been made. I will introduce here an extract from an opinion of Judge Barnard, of the supreme court of New York, in a case that seems very like this, reported in a law journal:

As to the 18 ballots in East Fishkill, there is more cause for hesitation. Here it may be claimed that a man has gone to the voter and said: "We have designed a scheme under which we will agree to pay you for your vote if the ballot marked with this particular name on it comes out of the box." But you can not destroy 18 ballots because a man has gone to one voter and made such a proposition as that. You claim to have proof that this proposition was made to one or more parties and failed. You may surmise that in other cases it succeeded, but you can not take away these 18 votes on such surmise without a particle of proof.

I am not responsible for the enforcement of a law. To make out your case you must find the eighteen men who voted these ballots and take the list, A, B, and C, D, and E, F, each one by himself, and show he did it with evil intent. You rest your whole case on the assumption that every man is responsible for all there is on his ballot. The individual voter can not be deprived of his vote on such an assumption. There is no doubt evidence here of an illegal combination, but you can not destroy all the votes in the box on such evidence. A man may just as easily have voted one of these ballots innocently as with fraudulent intent. Suppose they tried to buy one man or two men on ballots marked in this way and failed? Suppose they bought some votes that were put in the box? That does not prove that all the votes that are alike were put there with wrong intent. These votes must be presumed to have been properly and honestly cast unless there is proof as to each voter to the contrary.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] asked me a question some time ago in reference to the vote in the third district, Fifth ward, of Elmira. Now, I ask the careful attention of those who are kind enough to listen to me. As to this particular vote in that ward there was no recount; but the statement made on the face of the returns differs from the statement upon the back of the returns—a difference of 7 votes in favor of Mr. Rockwell and against the contestant.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. O'FERRALL. Mr. Speaker, there have been so many interruptions of the gentleman's remarks, I ask unanimous consent that he be allowed further time to conclude.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I ask consent now that the time be extended so as to allow six hours on a side.

Several MEMBERS. No limit has been fixed.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I thought there was.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask the indulgence of the House for a moment in order that there may be some limit fixed to the debate, so that gentlemen may know how long they will have to stay here and when we shall come to a vote. A number of gentlemen have desired information on this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman withdraw his request for unanimous consent?

Mr. O'FERRALL. I am trying now to arrive at a conclusion with the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Let the debate go on.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Then I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Georgia may be permitted to conclude his remarks.

There was no objection.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Now, will my colleague permit me to ask him a question which may shorten my own argument?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Do you admit that if the 7 ballots to which you are about to refer are given to Rockwell they will seat him in this House?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. I think so. That is my own opinion. It makes a difference of 14 votes in the count.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. You are referring now to the third district, Fifth ward?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Yes; the same district to which you referred in your question a short time ago.

Now, in the Fifth ward and third district of the city of Elmira the votes were canvassed in due form, and there was no recount after the adjournment of the election inspectors. One of the papers which they were required to make out was made out—was made out according to law—and that is the return of the election, which was completely made out. The sample ballots were pasted to the back of the return and the numbers marked on them. But there was a discrepancy between the face of the return and the numbers written on the sample ballots which was not discovered until the following day. It was not discovered the night after the count was made and when the work was done, and was not discovered until the next day, when the returns were made to the clerk of the court of Chemung County.

What are the facts? On the first count—but, Mr. Speaker, it is best in this case to read the evidence, because I think I can show from that that this return was made and that the ballots were entered on the back during the following night, and I think the evidence becomes clear, at least to my own mind, that these ballots were tampered with, and that a change was made after the day of the election and before this subsequent transaction. Now, if you will give me your attention I will explain why I think so. It will be found on page 141 of the record in this case, about the middle of the page, what the testimony is bearing upon this point. This is the testimony of one of the inspectors of election. He says that the face of the returns showed 87 for Rockwell and 73 for Noyes, but that on the back of the sheet it showed 94 for Rockwell and 66 for Noyes, and that he thinks that the back of the return was correct and that the mistake was on the face.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. And that is the testimony of a Republican inspector?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. He was a Republican inspector. Another witness testifies to the same thing. Another witness, an election inspector, states the same; that in his judgment the back of the return was correct and that the face was not correct.

Mr. COX of New York. Did the county canvassers canvass the votes—the ballots themselves, or the face of the return?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. They canvassed from the ballots.

Mr. COX of New York. Did they claim to do it in the other case?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. They counted from the ballots in every case.

Mr. COX of New York. As ordered by the court?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. They counted from the ballots in every case until ordered to do otherwise by the court, and then they counted from the face of the returns.

It will be seen that that would make a difference of 14 votes, taking seven from one and giving them to the other, on the returns. Now, what is the fact about the result? These two gentlemen whose testimony I have referred to, think the ballots as numbered were correct. The discrepancy was not discovered until the next day, and the ballots were never recounted to discover where errors occurred. They left the polling place that afternoon supposing the vote was correct and that the face of the returns and the back agreed, but they ascertained the next day that they did not agree. Now, what is the truth about it?

Mr. TRACEY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Yes, sir.

Mr. TRACEY. I would like to have it clearly stated for my own information what the effect would be, taking the face of the returns alone in this particular case?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. It would seat Mr. Noyes.

Mr. TRACEY. I remember in the other case the court of appeals decided that the face of the returns should be taken.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Yes, sir.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. And in this too.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. TRACEY. And it would be necessary to take the back of the returns in this case to give the seat to the sitting member?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. That is if you leave the Doyle ballots in.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. If you leave all the fraudulent ballots in.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Now let us see how the votes were counted. I read from the testimony in this case on page 140:

Q. Did any of the inspectors recount any of the votes that were counted by another?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, was that done with all the ballots?

A. Well, I couldn't say.

Q. You recollect it was done to some extent?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you can't say whether that was done with all the ballots or not?

A. No, sir.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Will my colleague permit me, that was on the first count, on the night of the election.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Oh, yes; there was but one count of these ballots, and this was on that one count.

Q. After the ballots had been counted, were the returns made out then?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And signed?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Any sample ballots annexed to the returns pasted on in any way that night?

A. Yes, sir; there was one; one return; we had to make out three; we only made out one with sample ballots on.

Q. Now, was there indorsed on the back of each of the sample ballots the number of that kind that had been cast?

A. Yes, sir.

I now read from page 142, about the middle, being from the cross-examination of the same witness, further to show the accuracy of the count.

Q. And different ones, while that count was proceeding, had and kept different tally sheets?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Several different ones?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And as the count was announced by the different members of the board, these different persons put it down and footed it up?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And no count of any new name was proceeded with until all these persons had agreed that the count tallied, was it?

A. No, I wouldn't say that they all agreed.

Q. Well, whether they all agreed or not, they agreed that some certain count was correct, didn't they?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then isn't it true that if, at the outset, they found a discrepancy, they sought to adjust that and find where the discrepancy was and get it correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that would be done?

A. Yes, quite naturally.

Now, from another witness the statement is substantially the same as the last. From this it appears satisfactorily to my mind that when the counting was so carefully done on that evening, there being only about 175 or 180 votes to count for the different candidates, it being done with the particularity and carefulness indicated, there being a recount, a tally kept, a checking from one to the other during the entire count, the count when they completed it was obliged to be correct. There were five inspectors, two supervisors, two election watchers, and, I think, two tally clerks, all engaged in that particular count; and as it appears from the evidence in the case, all earnestly endeavoring to have the count made correct. It was correct. I have no doubt of its correctness; and when made correct it was put in the face of those returns, 87 for Rockwell and 73 for Noyes.

Now when they put the ballots on the back of this return they had not aggregated them to ascertain whether they agreed in number with the numbers on the tally sheet or face of the return. All that was necessary for the inspectors to do when pasting sample ballots on the back of the return was to say so many votes were cast like this one, so many votes cast like this, and so on as to every sample. There was no necessity to name the person for whom the ballots were cast, the face of the ballots disclosed that fact, and to name all the candidates would have imposed onerous labor on the officers. They did not aggregate them that night, or else they would have discovered the discrepancy; nor was it their duty to aggregate the numbers on the sample ballots at any time.

What transpired after that? You see from the particularity and from the carefulness of the inspectors of election, tally clerks, and all, that it is incredible that there was a mistake in it on that evening. It is impossible that there should have been a mistake made in that count on that evening. When, therefore, did the mistake arise, and how did it arise? The evidence is that the votes that were polled at that precinct were put in a ballot box that was left in the polling booth unlocked.

The evidence further is that the returns made by the inspectors were put in a different ballot box, and that ballot box was locked. The evidence further shows—and I will not take the time to read it now, but gentlemen can correct me if I mistake it, and I hope they will—that both these ballot boxes were left in the voting place, which was a skating rink, being a part of a livery stable.

The evidence further is that they remained there over night, until the next day, and that a gentleman came along by the inspector's house the next day and told him that that booth was open. The inspector went and found the booth open, found the ballot box opened, and the box containing the returns, which he had locked the evening before, unlocked.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. And Stapleton swears he unlocked it.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Oh, no; the gentleman is mistaken. Mr. Stapleton did not swear to that. I know my friend does not mean to misstate the testimony, but he is mistaken about it. Stapleton was not present. No one was present but Davis and Westbrook. That is the condition in which they were found the next day. The ballots which had been voted, all but the sample ballots which were pasted on the returns, were in a box left there unlocked the evening before.

Mr. TERRY. Were these Doyle ballots where they could have been reached in the same way?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. I do not know.

Mr. TERRY. I understand the question narrows down to the Doyle ballots.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. I do not know whether you are going to narrow it down to that or not.

Mr. TERRY. I understand from the report of the committee that it turns on them.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. The other point is just as strong in favor of Mr. Rockwell.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. If the gentleman will wait until the minority have a chance on this he will see that it does not turn on the Doyle ballots at all.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. I knew the gentleman would come to that after awhile. That is the reason I was so particular to examine the evidence. To recapitulate, the evidence shows that the election inspector, in whose charge the ballots were, left the ballots in that voting place in a ballot box unlocked. He left the returns at the same place in a ballot box that he locked.

Mr. BUSHNELL. In whose custody were they left?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. It was said they were left in the custody of Mr. Miller, because Mr. Miller owned the livery stable. It was not a dwelling house. No one lived in it at all, but Mr. Miller occupied this building as a livery stable, and the ballots were supposed to be left in his custody. He was not an election officer and had no right to their custody.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. The evidence shows, on page 141, that Mr. Davis took them.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Mr. Davis did take them, but the question now is, what he did with them afterward. He left them in that polling place in that way, and some time the next day a man by the name of Westbrook came to his residence and told him that the voting place where he had left these ballots was open.

He went there, found that it was open, found not only that the ballot box which he left unlocked the night before was still unlocked, but he found also that the ballot box in which he left the returns was unlocked. Somebody had tampered with those ballots, somebody knew where they were, and what was necessary to be done in this election. It was the day following the election and everybody knew about how the vote had been cast.

I have no doubt many of you will ask how could the ballots constituting a part of the return have been changed in the event they were tampered with? I will read on that matter from the clerk who did the writing. Here is what he says, on page 145, in cross-examination. This is the man who wrote upon the ballots and made out the return. He was one of the clerks of election:

Q. In writing what you did on the back of the ballots there was nothing whatever, was there, to prevent the putting on of a paster or the changing of a name by erasure and by writing; it wouldn't interfere with you writing in any way, would it?

A. No, sir.

Mr. COX of New York. What ballot was this?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. These are simply the ballots he was asked about, and which were pasted to the back of the return.

Q. You wouldn't be able by your having written on it to detect that in any way?

A. Well, if there was a paster over the writing I could tell it, of course.

Q. But your writing is up at the top of the ticket, ordinarily, above where the printing or the pasters come?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was almost, if not entirely, so in every case?

A. Yes, sir.

Now, another witness on the same point says, on page 154:

Q. There are a great many varieties of tickets pasted on that original return?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So many it would be simply impossible to recognize and identify every one?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you would not be able even the next day to recite or remember all of the different combinations of names on the tickets, would you?

A. No, sir.

Q. If pasters had been put on some of the tickets there would not be any way of your detecting it, would there?

A. No, sir.

Q. And then when you came to make up the copies, those copies were made after this one that you had completed on election night?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And those copies were made from those tickets without any recounting or any tally or any checking?

A. No, sir.

Q. You simply followed what you found, in making those two returns, upon the original return?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. COX of New York. He would know what existed on the body of the paster—on the back?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Oh, no; the votes must appear on the face of the canvass, and nothing appears in the report but the number of the ballots cast.

Mr. COX of New York. Cast like this?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. And you must aggregate these ballots in order to find out, because there were other ballots. There were split ballots.

Mr. COX of New York. But the primary paster shows that kind of ballot; so many cast, and then of another kind, and these must equal the number on the face of the return.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. He must show how many of them there were, and how they got there. That is the way these tickets are made up. The gentleman who did the writing says that after the writing was done the tickets could have been changed, that a change or erasure might have been made on the tickets without his being able to detect it, because the writing was on the top of the ticket, and the change would have occurred below; and therefore it could have been done without his being able to detect it. So great was the difference and variety of tickets, he could not tell whether they had been changed or not. Now, what was necessary to make this change? It was the easiest matter imaginable. The man who found and unlocked the ballot box containing the returns, and who wanted to make the change, had nothing to do but to look on the back of the report, and he would find, possibly, 7 split ballots for Noyes, and all that he had to do then was to erase the name of Noyes and put in the name of Rockwell. The deed would have been done. Or he might have put a Rockwell paster on the Noyes ballot.

Mr. COX of New York. Why were not these tickets in the custody of the canvassing inspectors? Do not they keep them?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. They were in this box, left in the polling place.

Mr. COX of New York. They did not retain them?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. No, they left them in the polling place.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Here is the evidence of a Republican who said they were not interfered with. Here are five lines that overturns your whole argument. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. I read that, or a portion of the testimony of the witness which is substantially the same.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. You omitted to read that. Please read it. A Republican says they were not tampered with.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. I will read it:

Q. But you have no reason to believe that any alteration was made by anybody, have you?

A. No, sir; I don't believe there was.

Q. Now, you recognized your own handwriting upon the back of each one of these tickets on the original returns, didn't you?

A. My name is not on the original returns.

Q. But you wrote on the back of the ticket that was pasted on the original returns the number of votes cast?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That has not been disturbed in any way?

A. No, sir.

Of course his writing had not been disturbed. I did not contend that his writing had ever been disturbed; but I contend that in all probability, taking all the evidence together, because you must take it all together and not a scrap here and there, showing how accurately these returns were made, showing how carefully and judiciously these election officers acted in making up the returns, you will find that incorrectness and error were impossible. Then the inquiry is made how was it that the error crept in there.

In prosecuting the inquiry we find that somebody had control of the ballots who had no right to their possession. We do not know who it was, but somebody went into the room where they were left, unlocked the box, and had control both of the ballots and of the returns. Now, this man says he does not believe there was any change, but the very same man says that if there had been a change he could not have detected it.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. He said it was possible there could have been a change. Anything is "possible."

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. He said that if there had been a change he could not have detected it. Why? Because his figures and his written lines were not disturbed. But we maintain that the change was made below his figures and lines.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. There is not a particle of evidence of that. It is a mere assumption.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Yes, sir; the whole record is luminous with evidence of it. To be sure, there is no testimony which states specifically that that thing was done, for probably no one saw it done but the guilty perpetrator, but if you will take the record from page 140 to page 155, every line tends to show that there was something of that sort done.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. There is not a single word to show it.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. I say that the whole investigation is perfectly luminous with testimony to show that those ballots were tampered with.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Will you not read some of it? Read a single line which shows that. I have read the testimony, but I can not find a line of that character.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. I have already admitted that there is nothing stating in so many words that the change was made, but in such a case you do not expect testimony of that definite kind. If all the evidence cumulatively shows the fact so clearly as to produce conviction, why do you insist on specific words to prove the same fact? Do you suppose that the guilty party will make confession?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I see in the report of the majority, on page 4, this question propounded: "Why were they recounted?" And that question is answered by a statement that they were recounted for the reason that the county clerk refused to receive the returns because there was no specimen ballot attached to those returns, as required by the law of New York. Was there any other ground for the recount than that?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. None at all that I know of.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. And it was because of the action of the county clerk that the recount was had.

Mr. ELLIS. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. If I understand the election statutes of New York they require that the return made by the inspectors shall be accompanied with specimens of the several kinds of ballots, showing the number of ballots taken for each person, which statement shall be written in words at length, and which shall be attached to the back of their statement and constitute a part of such statement. Now, I understand that in this case the inspectors failed to attach those sample ballots to their returns, and that that was the ground on which the county clerk refused to receive them.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Yes, sir; I have so stated.

Mr. ELLIS. Now, the question I wish to ask the gentleman is: Was this defective return made by the inspectors a return upon which the contestant could have insisted that he had received any number of votes? In other words, was it a return upon which he could have based or maintained an application for a mandamus to compel the proper canvassing board of New York to have issued to him a certificate of election, or to count the votes taken in the wards where these errors in the returns occurred, or was it a void paper?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. The proper way would have been for the county canvassers to have convened the election inspectors and correct their clerical errors. The law demands that this shall be done.

Mr. ELLIS. But was it a void paper in the form in which they first returned it?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. I think not—certainly not.

Mr. ELLIS. Could the contestant have relied upon the paper in its defective or void form to secure himself any votes, or for any purpose whatever?

Mr. O'FERRALL. The court said it was not defective.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. The face of the returns showed the number of votes cast for each candidate at the election.

Mr. ELLIS. I understand that; but the statute requires that the return shall have attached to it a sample of each kind of ballot cast, the number of each, and for whom cast. Now, in the absence of those sample ballots, could the report of the inspectors be considered for any purpose whatever?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. I think so. The sample ballots were required to be placed there and the ballots themselves destroyed in order that there might be no subsequent scrutiny into the qualifications of the voters after the voting was past, and also in order that the secrecy of the ballot might be preserved. That was the object; and not to canvass the election from them; because the New York courts expressly say that you can not refer to those sample ballots to indicate who was elected, but that you must take the face of the returns.

Mr. ELLIS. But here is a plain provision of the statute which requires that the election inspectors shall return with their report these sample ballots, that they shall attach them to their report and shall write, partly upon the ballots and partly upon the paper, the number of votes of each kind cast; it takes all this to make the complete returns. Now, in the absence of those sample ballots would not the return be not only defective but void?

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Nothing of the sort. The courts have decided that the election must be determined from the face of the returns, and that the sample ballots have nothing to do with the count, and they forbade there being a count of the ballots in this case. Hence, whether the sample ballots were present or were not did not affect the election at all.

Now, Mr. Speaker I am about through, and I am very glad I am, as I suppose other gentlemen are. [Laughter.] I must apologize to the House for having detained them so long, but I suppose gentlemen understand that my remarks have been considerably protracted by interruptions.

Now, in regard to this last count, the testimony, to my mind, is as conclusive as it can be that there was no error in the count, and that the discrepancy which exists between the face of the returns and the numbers of the sample ballots resulted from a tampering with those ballots on the night after they were cast or from a mistake of the clerk who wrote upon the ballots. He may have written the wrong number on some of the ballots. I can not exclude that conviction from my mind. I have examined the case with the purpose of seeing whether I could escape that conviction and give Mr. Rockwell the seat. I am not imputing anything improper to the sitting member. He was not present, and, so far as we know, had no knowledge of anything wrong. There is nothing in any of this testimony from beginning to end to impute any wrongdoing or misconduct either to the contestee or to the contestant. It was the friends of the candidates who seemed to be overzealous, and the friends of Mr. Noyes alone who attempted to purchase votes in this case.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in opening this case I have said what I had to say from a stern sense of duty. I am a partisan. I believe that the principles of the Democratic party are altogether right and the principles of the Republican party altogether wrong. Changing the remark of Mr. Ingalls, I say, I admit that there are some bad Democrats—not many, but a few; and that there are some good Republicans—not many, but a few. So I am a partisan; and when you find me attempting to oust from a seat in this House a Democrat, you must know that I do so from a sense of duty of the sternest character. And I think that wherever the path of duty leads no man should fear to go. [Applause.]

Mr. COBB of Alabama rose.

Mr. HAUGEN. I understand that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] would like to speak now, because he wants to go away.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I will state, Mr. Speaker, that on account of engagements which require my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] to leave, the arrangement we had made is changed, and the gentleman from Indiana will now, by his own request, follow on the same side which has been argued by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LAWSON].

[Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. BACON was recognized.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Mr. Speaker, I want to rise to a question of order at this time in regard to this matter of recognitions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'FERRALL. If I understand the way this matter stands now, the recognition for discussion belongs to the members of the committee. Each member of the committee would have, under the custom of the House, one hour in his own right. The gentleman who has just occupied the floor spoke in his own right as a member of the committee. The gentleman from Georgia who preceded him spoke as a member of the committee in his own right.

Now, I think under the rules of the House, and I want the Chair to rule on it now—under the rules of the House at this time no man can be recognized to address the House on this question except a member of the committee, unless time is yielded to him by a member of the committee who has the floor. Of course the gentleman from Alabama can take the floor now in his own right as a member of the committee and yield to whom he pleases.

Mr. BACON. The Speaker has recognized me and I am entitled to the floor.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Does the Chair hold that the gentleman from New York is entitled to the floor?

Mr. BACON. I have already been recognized.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognized the gentleman from New York because he was informed the gentleman from Alabama was not ready to proceed.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

Mr. BACON. I understand the gentleman from Virginia to raise a question of order against my occupying the floor at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Alabama is controlling the time on that side and would be entitled to the floor if he claimed it after the gentleman from New York concludes.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Will the Chair hear me on that question before deciding it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Certainly.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I claim that unless there is an agreement for time, and the control of that time is put into the hands of certain gentlemen of this House, one man has as much right on this floor to recognition as another. There is no rule that gives the members of the committee preference over any other member, except by the courtesy of the House; and that is never done except when there is an agreement about the limitation of time, and the control is put in the hands of certain members. Now, the gentleman from New York is recognized, I understand, in his own time, just as any other member of the House would be recognized.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the Chair was following what he regards as the universal practice of the House since he has been a member of it. It has generally been regarded, so far as the present occupant of the Chair knows, and without exception, that the Chair has the right to recognize any member who rises to discuss a measure. But the Chair also recognizes the fact that there has been a custom by which members in charge of a particular measure from a committee have had this privilege accorded to them—

Mr. COBB of Alabama. That is where there is an agreement at the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Undoubtedly. The Chair agrees with the gentleman from Alabama that there is no rule on the books to that effect, and if it is to be invoked, the Chair should be glad to have it pointed out. The Chair is following what it believes to be the practice of the House.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Now, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, before any such ruling takes me off the floor, I would like to have gentlemen produce authority for it.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I want to understand the ruling of the Chair. I have certainly always been under the impression that the universal rule of practice in the House has been for each member of the committee to have an hour in his own right when a report is made, and that no one outside of the committee can speak unless some member of the committee yields him a portion of his time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Virginia be kind enough to show the Chair any such rule embodied in our code of rules?

Mr. O'FERRALL. I think there is such a rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would be glad to see it.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. The matter of courtesy—not the rule—is this: That the Chair would recognize any member of this committee who wanted to speak; but no member of the committee desiring to speak now, the Chair is perfectly right in recognizing the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON].

Mr. O'FERRALL. Then, Mr. Speaker, for what length of time does the Chair recognize the gentleman from New York?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For one hour.

Several MEMBERS. The rule fixes that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would be glad to have the gentleman from Virginia refer to any printed rule to the contrary.

Mr. O'FERRALL. That has been my understanding of the practice during my long service in the House. I have not the rules at hand. I will submit this question to the Chair: When will we reach any conclusion? Suppose every member of the House should desire to occupy an hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair knows of no way by which a conclusion can be reached, except by agreement, unless the previous question is ordered.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman of the committee who last addressed the House said in concluding that this side of the House could afford to deal with this question upon the merits. This side of the House can not afford to deal with it upon any other basis than that of doing exact justice according to the merits of this controversy. Particularly is this true since we find that the Democrats on the Committee on Elections are divided and submit views which can not be reconciled.

Coming from the State of New York, and being somewhat familiar with the course of the litigation between the parties to this contest in the courts of that State, I have listened with surprise to the assertions made on behalf of the majority of the committee, that those decisions can be in any way of service in determining what this House should do with this election case. There was presented to the courts in that litigation a single formal question, as to the method of canvassing this vote, and it involved nothing of the merits. It involved no determination as to who was entitled to the seat in this House. It involved no discussion of the propriety with which the election had been conducted or the votes counted. The single question before the courts was—

Mr. RAINES. May I ask my colleague a question?

Mr. BACON. I can not yield; it interrupts me in such a way that the gentleman must excuse me.

The single question involved in that controversy was whether boards of canvassers were entitled to take the figures which appeared in the summaries made by the inspectors of election and make a canvass from them, or whether they should take the figures put upon the ballots attached to the canvass sheet and make the canvass from them; and the courts decided that the formal certificate, the formal statement appearing upon the face of the canvass sheet, should be controlling upon the ministerial officers or boards of canvassers, and that they should make up the statement from those figures and not from the figures which were upon the ballots. They did not undertake to determine who was elected. They had no jurisdiction or authority upon any such question. Our courts, particularly of late years, have been careful to restrict themselves to the decision of the questions which the case before them presented, and having passed upon that question, our courts go no further.

I am reminded that in the court of last resort, in the prevailing opinion in that case, the contestant was instructed by the court that it was a formal question only with which the court had to deal in that controversy, and that the question upon the merits was to be decided by another tribunal, to wit, this House; and therefore this case comes here with no decision of the courts of the State of New York upon the question which the gentleman calls upon us to decide, as to whether Mr. Rockwell or Mr. Noyes, upon the merits of this case, is entitled to a seat in this House.

Now, sir, in determining that question, I take it that this House will lay aside all technical questions as to who had the affirmative, as to who was entitled to the certificate. We are here to determine, as the gentleman says and says correctly—and we can not afford to determine this controversy in any other way—who, upon the legal proofs here, is entitled to the seat. I confess, sir, from my examination of the proofs and of the majority report, that I am compelled to conclude that the majority of the committee have fallen into error.

I wish to confine myself now to a discussion of a single proposition of the many already discussed. When I take this majority report, I find that, figured out, as they figure it, Mr. Noyes's majority was just 6, and included in that were 16 ballots known as "Doyle" ballots, concerning which this House has already heard something, and about which I desire to say something.

Mr. Speaker, the election of 1890 was held in New York under a new ballot law, a system of which we knew nothing. The exigency which created that ballot law, and carried it through the Legislature, grew out of corruption which became so rife and so public in the State of New York that it created a scandal, which compelled the attempt to secure a system by which we could get rid of actual corruption of the voter.

To this end the Legislature enacted that the ballots should be printed at the public expense; that they should be put into the hands of sworn officers of the law; that those officers should deliver them to the ballot clerks. The ballots were to contain the names of all the candidates to be voted for at the election. There was to be a ballot provided for the nominees of each party. Each kind of printed ballot and a blank ballot were to be given to each elector by the poll clerk. The voter was to be separated from every other citizen by a hundred feet or more before he reached the poll clerk. He was to take these ballots, and to go into a private place where he was alone and unobserved, and there was to prepare his ballot, and coming back he was to deposit one of them as his vote, and to give up the others to be destroyed.

Now, superadded to that, the system made a provision under which each party might furnish a "paster" ballot. A paster ballot as it was furnished, although the law perhaps does not require it, contains the titles of the offices and names of the candidates for each office. These ballots were furnished by the respective parties. The poll-workers had them, and they were given to the electors to take with them into the booths, and in a large number of instances the voters used them by pasting them upon the official ballot. Prior to that election Robert Earl had been upon the bench of the court of appeals of the State of New York for a full term. His conduct, his integrity, and his learning had won for him such a warm and general regard, that both of the great parties of the State put Mr. Earl in nomination through their regular machinery.

There was nobody contesting the place with him. His name was upon the printed ballots of both parties, and upon the paster ballots of both the great parties. But when the vote came to be counted, it was found that not only in this Congressional district but wherever in the State of New York there was a doubtful contest for a local office, and one to which a suspicion of corruption attached, Robert Earl's name disappeared, and "John Doe," "Richard Roe" or "John Smith," or blank "Doyle" were voted for associate judge of the court of appeals.

In the end it became a matter of public notoriety in the State of New York that those who sought to corrupt the poll of that State had devised a scheme of having their poll workers strike off Mr. Earl's name and substitute a fictitious name. The pasters thus doctored, were put in the hands of the voter whose vote was to be obtained by improper influences. When the canvass of that poll was taken, if it showed that the particular name "John Roe," or "Richard Doe" had been voted for as justice of the court of appeals, this transaction was closed, and the corrupted voter received his compensation. That did not occur in this district only, but it occurred all over the State of New York wherever there was a contest that involved some local influences, and there was some man who was willing to corrupt his fellow-citizens.

It is a matter of public notoriety, and I speak of it here because I am called upon to meet the suggestions contained in this report. The majority report says that the facts are—

Neither the Republican nor the Democratic party made a nomination; but the State committee of both parties placed the name of Robert Earl on their respective party tickets.

That is not an accurate statement, because it is not true that the parties did not make a nomination. The nomination was made by the committees, with the consent of both parties, because nobody desired to contest Mr. Earl's election.

The committee says:

It seems that there was some dissatisfaction with this action of the State committees, both among Republicans and Democrats.

And they offer that to the House as an explanation of the crossing out of the name of Mr. Earl and the insertion of the name "Doyle."

Now, Mr. Speaker, from wider knowledge of what occurred in the State of New York and from more accurate information, I say to this House that the reason why the name of Robert Earl disappeared from these tickets and the name of other people appeared in that place, was not because anybody was dissatisfied with Judge Earl; it was not because his nomination was a subject of criticism or dissatisfaction, but because some one desired to know that a particular ballot for which he was to pay a particular compensation was in the box; and that the best way to accomplish that was by striking off the name of Mr. Earl, whose election was not jeopardized by it, and the removal of whose name enabled the buyer of votes to determine whether the ballot he agreed to pay for was voted.

So extended was the system, that there were actually books kept in which the name of the voter was put down and the name that was substituted in the place of Earl put opposite to it, so that when the vote was counted and the canvass made up gentlemen could tell whether "John Doe's" ticket had been voted by the man to whom it was given.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him where in this record there is any evidence of that sort?

Mr. BACON. There is no evidence of it. I have not said there is any evidence. I said that the fact was as I have stated from my own knowledge and upon my personal responsibility.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. But the gentleman will admit that we have to determine cases by the evidence that comes before the committee and that appears in the record.

Mr. BACON. I will admit that this committee has honestly and fairly discharged its duty with the light which it had, but I will also say to the gentleman that there can be no possible objection to further light being thrown upon the subject, and if this information which I am imparting assists other gentlemen than the committee to arrive at a conclusion different from that at which the committee arrived, that seems to me to be a proper use to make of it. It seems to me proper that I, coming to a different conclusion from the committee, should state to the House the reason why I believe that the name of Earl disappeared, and that in my judgment it was not, as stated by the committee, because the electors were dissatisfied with Mr. Earl.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. But the gentleman will admit that the committee ought not to be criticised for not considering evidence that was not before them.

Mr. BACON. I have not criticised the committee. The gentleman surely could not have misunderstood me as to that.

Mr. ALLEN. We are glad to have this additional information. It may set the committee right. [Laughter.]

Mr. BACON. Now, Mr. Speaker, taking the situation in New York as it was, I ask the attention of the House to these Doyle ballots, their history, and their peculiarity. In the first place, there was no man named Doyle who was a candidate. Nobody pretends that the ballots were prepared or cast by any voter who desired that anybody by the name of Doyle should be elected an associate justice of the court of appeals of the State of New York.

Where did these Doyle ballots come from? They came from the hands of a Republican worker, Duncan McArthur, who himself wrote the names upon the pasters. Now, what manner of man was McArthur? This was the situation at that poll as I understand it. Across the street, on either side of the highway, were two polls at which these ballots were found. This McArthur was a busy and industrious "worker" for Mr. Noyes. He spent the day floating between the two places, and in both those ballot-boxes "Doyle" ballots appeared, the name being in the handwriting of McArthur. That is a conceded fact.

Mr. TUCKER. Did each of the 16 "Doyle" ballots have the same initial?

Mr. BACON. No. I will come to that later, and it is an important feature in the case. But I want to point out first to the House that those "Doyle" ballots were all written by the same man, who was an industrious supporter of Mr. Noyes at the polls. That is a conceded fact. It is also practically undisputed that McArthur was a corrupter of voters, a buyer of votes at that precinct. That is sworn to in this record.

I ask the House to bear in mind that that testimony was given on behalf of the contestee, and that when Mr. Noyes came to reply to it and the opportunity came for producing rebutting evidence, McArthur did not appear as a witness, did not come forward to explain why he put those sixteen names on those ballots, or to state whether or not he had committed the crime of buying at least one man to vote a ticket upon which Mr. Noyes's name appeared. If that was an honest writing of the name on those ballots, if it was not a writing for the purpose of identifying the ballot, if those men were not corrupted by McArthur, why is it that he does not come forward and testify and tell us the truth? Account for his absence if you can, gentlemen, upon any theory consistent with any other view of the case than that McArthur knew, as I myself am convinced, that every one of those "Doyle" ballots was that of a purchased vote paid for at a certain price.

Mr. BUSHNELL. Does it really appear that this McArthur was in the employ of Mr. Noyes?

Mr. BACON. It appears that he was buying votes; it does not appear directly that it was with Mr. Noyes's money, but it does appear that he was buying votes and that Mr. Noyes was the beneficiary of at least one purchase which McArthur made on that day. But gentlemen say, "There were other names on these ballots in other places; why do you not say that they were put there for the purpose of identifications?" Well, gentlemen, it often happens that the shrewdest criminal convicts and destroys himself by his very shrewdness.

Mr. McArthur had sagacity enough to devise a scheme of writing "Doyle" on certain tickets; other men wrote "Smith;" some wrote "Sam Small." But the cunning of Mr. McArthur, who seems to have been the busiest man in this business, failed just at this point. Instead of writing "Doyle," "Boyle," etc., he started out with the alphabet and wrote "A. Doyle," "B. Doyle," "C. Doyle," "D. Doyle," etc., proceeding alphabetically with the 16 ballots which were found in the box, each one bearing the name "Doyle," but with a different initial. Now it is asking us to lay aside our intelligence and it is asking us to deny ourselves the use of our common sense if you expect us to shut our eyes to the natural and inevitable conclusion to be drawn from such a course of conduct. The object was that whoever voted an "A. Doyle" ballot or a "B. Doyle" ballot or a "C. Doyle" ballot or any other ballot similarly inscribed might be able to prove by the canvass sheet that he had voted the ballot which he agreed to vote, which had been given him by this busy friend of Mr. Noyes.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. The gentleman will allow me to suggest, too, whether it is not rather remarkable that all these ballots bearing the name "A. Doyle," "B. Doyle," "C. Doyle," etc., were cast for Mr. Noyes.

Mr. BACON. Of course that furnishes, as I was about to say, conclusive evidence of the purpose. This thing was not an accident. What innocent and honest purpose can gentlemen suggest? If voters did not wish to vote for Earl why could they not strike his name off? Why was it necessary to place the name of somebody else over his name? But as the object was identification, when this man adopted the name "Doyle" and put a different initial on each of these tickets he had just the measure of identification which was necessary to connect the ballot with the voter, and enable him to claim the reward for which he had labored.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. I understood the gentleman to say some time ago that Mr. Earl was obnoxious to the disreputable element in the State, and because of that fact his name was stricken off and another voted in his place.

Mr. BACON. I have not given utterance to any such sentiment.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. I so understood the gentleman.

Mr. BACON. The gentleman is asking me a question based upon a misunderstanding, and I hope he will allow me to proceed.

Mr. LAWSON of Georgia. If I misunderstood the gentleman, I regret it.

Mr. BACON. You did misunderstand me entirely. Judge Earl was not obnoxious to any man in the State of New York, so far as I ever heard.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the statute of the State of New York declares that no voter shall cast a ballot marked for the purpose of identification. I insist that if it is possible to demonstrate, short of the testimony of the voter himself, that the intention of the mark on the ballot was to identify it, the testimony in this case—these ballots, this use of the alphabet, and the fact that these ballots came out of the hands of the same man—furnish conclusive evidence of the intent that these ballots should be identified.

But the gentleman who last spoke for the majority of the committee said that this does not render the ballot void. Mr. Speaker, there is no proposition of law better settled than that any act which is done in violation of the commandment or the prohibition of a statute is void and can form the basis of no legal right for any man. Why, Mr. Speaker, the majority of the committee throws out 2 votes for Mr. Noyes which it says were purchased and therefore void. There is no statute in the State of New York which declares that a ballot bought and paid for shall not be counted. Does any man contend that with proof of corruption presented the ballot of a man whose vote had been bought could be lawfully counted?

No, sir. Because the people of the State of New York had learned that any system which did not prevent the identification of the ballot cast by the voter after the election would be futile to destroy the corruption which was rife in that State—for that reason the law of the State put a ballot which was marked so that it could be identified, upon the same basis as a ballot which was proven to have been corruptly bought and paid for. The one ballot must be rejected just as the other must, not because the statute says so, but because the law will not permit, no court will permit, a legal right to grow out of the violation of a public statute and the doing of a public wrong.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BACON. Briefly.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I understand the gentleman to say that at the time this election was held in 1890 there was no statute of the State of New York which required the rejection of these ballots because they were marked.

Mr. BACON. I say there was no express enactment of this sort.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Now let me ask further, has not the law of the State of New York been amended since so as to provide that ballots marked for the purpose of identification shall be rejected?

Mr. BACON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. O'FERRALL. So that the purpose of the later law was to do what the law did not do before?

Mr. BACON. No, sir; the purpose was simply to write into the statute book that which was already the common law without the statute.

Several MEMBERS. That is true.

Mr. BACON. But, Mr. Speaker, I have occupied more time in this discussion than I meant to do. To summarize the matter, I say that justice and right, as well as the law of the State of New York fairly applied, require that those 16 ballots with their markings should be deducted from the total, leaving as the result, Mr. Rockwell with a majority of 10.

To that, sir, gentlemen of the committee reply that there were 28 ballots which had some sort of distinguishing mark upon them on which Mr. Rockwell's name appeared. Mr. Speaker, I have looked at the testimony with regard to these ballots to see how much force there was in this contention, and I say to the House that it is impossible to produce, out of that testimony, any evidence by which the ballots thus marked could have been identified as having been voted by any individual. They had some sort of mark on them, and it is described as a check-mark or a figure, that is described by some witness as being so inartistically or inaccurately made that they were unable to determine whether the mark was intended for a 3 or a 5 or an 8.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Will the gentleman allow an interruption in that connection?

Mr. BACON. Well, I would rather be permitted to go on.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Very well.

Mr. BACON. But the gentleman can proceed with his question.

Mr. O'FERRALL. You say the ballots which were marked with a check mark in one corner and a figure 8 or 5 in the diagonal corner were not so marked that they could be identified?

Mr. BACON. I have not so stated.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I so understood you.

Mr. BACON. I said that the mark in one corner was so inexact, or inaccurately made, that it was difficult to determine whether it was intended for an 8 or a 5, and in effect that it was not possible for them to distinguish the ballot or the elector.

Mr. O'FERRALL. How then could they identify the men who voted the Doyle ballots?

Mr. BACON. Because when the canvass was made up they would return in the canvass sheet the "A. Doyle" ballot, and the "B. Doyle" ballot, and soon, each being different from the other.

Mr. O'FERRALL. But when the ballot had a check mark on one corner and a figure 5 on the other corner, supposing that there were ten of these, and that there was a sample ballot pasted on the lot and written across it that there were ten of that particular ballot inclosed, would not that be an identification?

Mr. BACON. Well, that is supposing something.

Mr. O'FERRALL. It is somewhat of a supposition, but there is a good deal of supposition all through this case. Suppose that on the day of the election a Democrat or some other man should go up to one of the Democratic managers and say, "On the day of election I can deliver to you 28 votes for Democrats. What will you give for them?" The answer is, "Two dollars," for that seems to have been the price paid up there. "But how will I know that they are delivered?"

Mr. BACON. Will you not prefer to discuss this in your own time?

Mr. O'FERRALL. I thought you had yielded me the time.

Mr. BACON. I yielded for a question and not for an argument; but go on.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Very well. "Now, how will I know that they have been delivered?" The answer is made, "Mark 28 ballots by a check mark of some kind in one corner and a figure 5 or an 8 or any other number in another corner, and if you do not find these ballots deposited you will know that I have not complied with my agreement."

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Suppose only 14 appear, what then?

Mr. O'FERRALL. The same principle would apply.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. They could not tell which of the 14 had done it.

Mr. O'FERRALL. And you can not tell which of the 16 Doyle ballots did it either.

Mr. BACON. But, Mr. Speaker, to resume—

Mr. TRACEY. I hope the gentleman from New York will answer that question.

Mr. BACON. No, I will not take time to answer it.

Mr. TRACEY. There are some of us who would like to have the information. We are here, some of us, for the purpose of getting information and determining what we should do.

Mr. BACON. If the gentleman from New York would prefer to go on himself I will yield.

Mr. TRACEY. No; I only want to hear the question answered.

Mr. BACON. That, Mr. Speaker, is the condition of the evidence as it appears on the record with regard to these ballots. The law under which this contest was begun required that notice should be given by contestant of the grounds of his contest; that the contestee should answer; that the issue made by these papers should then be tried out by the examination of witnesses; that the testimony on the part of the contestant should be taken and closed within a given time; that the testimony on the part of the contestee should be taken within a given time, and that thereafter, if the contestant desired to offer any rebutting evidence, he should within a certain given time put it in.

Now, in this case Mr. Noyes made no pretense of attack upon the certificate given to Mr. Rockwell upon any allegation that there were any improper votes cast or counted for him. He went to trial without any such allegation. He proved his case to his own satisfaction. He rested. He was met with the proof upon the part of the contestee. The Doyle ballots and other ballots turned up in that evidence. He did not attempt to deny the existence of these Doyle ballots. He did not in his rebutting evidence seek to explain them. He did not call in persons alleged to have been bribed or to have done the bribing. He did not put this man McArthur, who wrote these ballots and distributed them, upon the stand; but he went outside the ward and introduced testimony upon a new ground of contest—testimony to which the contestee in this case has never had an opportunity to reply—testimony which never has been and never could be answered by Mr. Rockwell, because the law put up the bar and said, "The testimony in this case must close."

Will you gentlemen say that upon such a state of facts you will take this testimony into consideration in determining this question? Will you say to this man who never was accused by his antagonist of having committed an impropriety, and against whom there was not offered a particle of evidence tending to prove impropriety upon the part of anybody who voted for him, until after the law had put up the bars and said to him that he should not meet this evidence, you will consider that evidence and deprive him of the seat to which he is proven to have a clear title?

Now, Mr. Speaker, this evidence does not come here unassailed. It does not come here without suspicion. The contestee at the only place and the only time which the law permitted him, sought to have that testimony removed and expunged from the record, as it should have been; but for some reason this Election Committee declined to pass upon this question, and coming here with this improper testimony in the case, seek to meet the result which follows inevitably from the proper evidence in the case upon the issues which the parties themselves framed, by testimony which refers to something that is not in contest between the parties, and concerning which Mr. Rockwell has had no opportunity to offer explanation or to give evidence.

Sir, it would be a gross injustice to permit this testimony, which in no court of justice would have been admitted, to weigh with us in determining the rights of these parties. Mr. Noyes selected the ground for his contest. He was met and beaten upon that ground. He can not, after the time has been so limited that his opponent can not meet another allegation, be permitted to drag in a new ground and to assert a new reason for turning Mr. Rockwell out of his seat.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Will my friend indulge me for a moment? He has referred to the committee.

Mr. BACON. No, I think I must decline to be interrupted. My voice is used up. I will yield to my colleague [Mr. CUMMINGS] such of my remaining time as he may desire.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has thirty minutes remaining.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, this case seems to hinge in a great measure upon what are known as the Doyle ballots. To give the House an indication of what the leading Republican editor in Seneca County thinks of the effect of the Doyle ballots upon this case I send to the Clerk's desk and ask him to read an editorial article from the Seneca County Journal of April 13, published in Seneca Falls, N. Y., the home of Charles E. Andrews, 2 miles from Waterloo.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE BETRAYAL OF COL. NOYES.

Who is responsible for the prospective failure of Col. Noyes to obtain his seat in Congress? Every man who has traced the course of the procedures in the contested-election case of Col. Noyes against Maj. Rockwell for the seat in the House of Representatives from this district is aware of the fact that but one thing now stands in the way of the seating of Col. Noyes by the Democratic House. That one thing is the unrefuted, and probably irrefutable, evidence of the infamous Doyle ballots in the town of Waterloo. A thoroughly partisan committee of Democrats has been compelled to admit that this Republican, Col. Noyes, received the greater number of ballots cast in the district; that an effort was made through the manipulation by inspectors and arbitrary, illegal rulings by county canvassers to defraud Noyes of a sufficient number of ballots to insure his defeat; and that, through a series of legal investigations, reaching to the highest court of the State, the title of Col. Noyes to the certificate upon the face of the returns under the laws of the State was fully established. All these conclusions freely acknowledged, the committee recommends the seating of Noyes. Now comes in the consideration that, despite these conceded and proven facts, the House may at any moment assume its constitutional prerogative to "judge of the qualifications and election of its members."

It is upon this provision that all the hopes of Rockwell are now suspended, for under this that matter of the fatally corrupt "Doyle ballots" will come before the House with all the legal force possessed by Judge COBB of Alabama; while the specious eloquence of BOURKE COCKRAN and the pyrotechnic gush of JOHN R. FELLOWS will present a picture to the minds of the Democratic Congressmen all the more disastrous to the aspirations of Col. Noyes, because of the inherent truthfulness of its details. The men chosen to the House of Representatives are not dullards. No Republican member who listens to Judge COBB's report but will be conscious that each one of the "Doyle" ballots represented a corruption of the franchise, which, under the laws of the State, was felonious and punishable as such. They will meet the possibly erroneous allegation, also, that these were what are considered in the law "marked ballots," which should have been rejected by the inspectors. It may be easily imagined that these incidents and facts will afford any Democratic legislator a reasonable excuse for voting somewhat against his reason, but very much in accordance with his prejudices. Thus, it must be seen that but for this miserable, unnecessary, illegal, and corrupting "Doyle" conspiracy Col. Noyes would beyond question be awarded his seat.

Will it be asked here in Seneca County, "Who are the authors and actors in the 'Doyle ballot' infamy?" If the query be made, the answer comes readily to the mind of any observant elector in this county. The evidence taken before Referee Hulbert in Waterloo during that contest is quoted from in the Rochester Herald dispatch which we reproduce elsewhere. It introduces the names of J. B. H. Mongin and Duncan McArthur, of Waterloo, as the supposed promoters and abettors of the plan for the violation of the law. It is a little singular that the Herald did not include also the evidence of Charles T. Andrews, which is before the committee, who unblushingly admitted that he (Andrews) and Mongin and ex-Senator Sweet contributed the $2,000 for unexplained uses in the interest of Col. Noyes. After the conference between Andrews, Mongin, Owens, and another at the Courier office five days before that election it was known by the inner circle that a heroic effort was to be made for a specific purpose to increase the vote of Col. Noyes in Waterloo, and that the "limit" of the felony in each case was to be $10. It will thus be seen that the $2,000 acknowledged in the evidence of Sunday-School Superintendent Andrews provided the blood money to buy the souls of the men who voted the "Doyle" ballots in Waterloo under the skillful guidance and benign patronage of "Ben" Mongin, "Dunc" McArthur, and "Andy" Harmon.

Is it not perfectly plain that the responsibility for having thus humiliated Col. Noyes and the Republicans of the district rests upon the fragile consciences of Charles T. Andrews, J. B. H. Mongin, and Duncan McArthur?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that that is the leading Republican newspaper, and the one having the largest circulation in Seneca County. Its editor has evidently discovered that honesty is the best policy, and I commend that policy to Republicans as well as Democrats upon the floor of this House.

Mr. BACON. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. O'FERRALL. I hope the gentleman will yield to allow me to make a motion to adjourn.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. As a member of the committee I shall claim the right to the floor in the morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON] yields the balance of his time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. O'FERRALL. I hope the gentleman will yield for a motion to adjourn.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I will yield for a motion to adjourn.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Pending the announcement of the vote, by unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. PEEL, for two weeks, on account of important business.
To Mr. CATCHINGS, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. AMERMAN, indefinitely, on account of sickness.
And then, on motion of Mr. O'FERRALL (at 5 o'clock and 9 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:
